N.C. Young Democrats Vote For National Affiliation; Sixty Attend Rally Here

Bert Bennett, Graham Talk To Delegates

By BILL WUAMETT

The College Young Democrats of North Carolina voted here yesterday at a rally to affiliate with the national College Federation of Young Democrats and drafted a federation constitution that will be presented to the individual clubs for ratification.

UNC-YDC President T. L. Odem said that the national affiliation would supplement the state organization and would not give supremacy to the national organization.

The action came at the last session of the two-day meeting in which the delegates heard talks by YDC National Committeeman Al House, state party chairman Bert Bennett and state YDC President "Dub" Graham.

At the general session yesterday morning Graham attacked the tendency of many people to vote for individual candidates without regard to party affiliation.

Calling for party loyalty, the Charlotte attorney said the "two party system had served the country well. Those who jump from party to party and from individual to individual," he stated, "are helping to contribute to the breakdown of the party system."

Such a breakdown, he said, would lead to an unstable government such as was recently endured by the French.

After Graham's speech, the delegates attended two seminars on the Peace Corps and Operation Support, a grassroots campaign to raise money for the 1962 campaign.

Cindy Poole of State College was elected president of the newly formed State of North Carolina Federation of Young Democrats that will join the national federation. Ann Francis Allen of East Carolina College was picked as secretary and Ken Bode of UNC was elected treasurer.

DONNA BAILEY

YWCA Elects Donna Bailey As President

A member of two YWCA committees this year, Donna has also served on a similar "Y" executive committee at the University of Mississippi, from where she transferred last year.

Hoping to introduce some of the best aspects of the "Y" at Ole Miss into the UNC program, Donna's goal for next year is to "promote greater unity of effort and coordination of the activities of the various 'Y' committees."

Serving next year as vice-president of the Executive committee will be Judy Brown, a transfer from Emory University in Atlanta. Nancy DuPuy, a transfer from Agnes Scott, was elected executive secretary.

Stuart Austin, a former Saint Mary's student, will serve as treasurer, while Susie Mitener, a transfer from Sullens will be membership chairman.

The new program chairman will be June Todd, a former Women's College student. Sarah Cullen, a transfer from the University of Georgia, was elected religious emphasis chairman.

Indian Visits UNC On Tour Of Colleges

Arthur D. Lazarus, principal of Sastri College, a technical High school for Indian students located in Durban, South Africa, is touring American state universities and studying the relationships between the administrative officials and the political power of the states.

Lazarus has found that American pressure groups figure prominently in maintaining academic freedom of university faculty members and officials. He said that the South African government policy does not admit this freedom and that, generally, all residents of South Africa are "walking on a mine field."

A native of South Africa, Lazarus' boyhood village was a main stopping point for Ghandi's first passive resistance exhibition. Ghandi and his followers stopped in Lazarus' village. Lazarus ,then 11 years old, served as Ghandi's page and served Ghandi his morning meal, Ghandi's one meal of the day. The meal consisted of a fruit dish and milk. Lazarus said that when Ghandi learned that there were children going without milk, he stopped drinking it.

For the year 1961-62, Lazarus has been appointed as a visiting scholar sponsored under the U. S. Government Educational Exchange program. During the first semester of the academic year, Lazarus was affiliated with the School of Advanced International Studies, Johns Hopkins University, Washington, D. C., and was the faculty associate of Dr. Vernon McKay, professor of African studies.

Lazarus is well-versed on South African topics concerning culture, education, (with particular reference to education for Indians), Hindu manners and customs, race attitudes in South Africa, and South African political affairs.

The Apartheid policy of South Africa is contributing to a rise in leftwing thinking in that area, he said. He said that the future for the state did not look good.

Lazarus attended Yale University where he received a M.A. degree in education. He has served as president of the National Indian Teacher's Society for 10 years, and is influential in Indian education in South Africa.

Phillips Says Teacher Image Is Unfocused

Guy B. Phillips, member of the State Board of Education and a former Dean of the School of Education at UNC, challenged the Statewide Conference on Teacher Education, to consider the characteristics and competencies of the qualified teacher as basic to proposed plans for preparation.

He recognized the need for and urged the Conference to provide freedom in planning along with essential guidelines and erstraints designed to protect the teacher, the child, and the citizen.

The image of the teacher which he presented calls for five basic senses of leadership.

The sense of perspective is essential if the teacher is to make the maximum contribution. A wide perspective is made possible when the individual has a strong general education, a wide range of personal experiences and contact with the society, and an understanding of world conditions. Such an overview prepares the individual for the creative task of awakening within the student an interest in and respect for knowledge. Institutions of higher learning must provide the broad perspective in curriculum, facilities and leadership to challenge students to growth.

The sense of direction is the second basic need to be met. The selection of a specific target and concentration upon its accomplishment becomes a constructive step toward success. Thorough preparation in particular areas of knowledge is important for successful teaching. It is the road map to somewhere.

The individual with the sense of perspective and direction must have a sense of responsibility. Decision making is one of the most important elements of leadership and is the foundation for progress. It tends to destroy conformity to accepted patterns and tradition which has been one of the most serious complaints against the profession.

Another necessary competency is a sense of confidence and security. Children respond to confident and enthusiastic leaders.

The final sense of humility completes the five basic foundations for success in leadership.

Nine Receive Wilson Award For Next Year

Nine UNC students have been awarded Woodrow Wilson Fellowships for one year of graduate study, it has been announced by the fellowship foundation headquarters in Princeton, N. J.

UNC senior students who were awarded the fellowships are: Maurice V. Barnhill of Wilmington, a physics major; Johnson B. Clinard of Winston-Salem, a classics major; Mrs. Nancy N. deGrummond of Lake Charles, La., a classics major; Stephen E. Kesler of Kings Mtn., a geology major; Dieter M. Mahncke of Atlanta, Ga., an international relations major; Nicholas D. Reppucci of Hollywood, Fla., a psychology major; William M. Richardson of Raleigh, an anthropology major; John B. Wagoner of Jacksonville, Fla., a mathematics major: and David S. Walker of China Grove, a French major.

Frank M. Duffy, professor, Department of Romance Languages, is the UNC Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation's campus representative. A total of 24 holders of previous fellowship awards are attending UNC at present.

A total of 1,058 students from colleges and universities in the 46 of the United States, eight provinces in Canada, Puerto Rico, Panama, and the Canal Zone have been awarded such grants.

The fellowships are awarded to students who expect to make their careers in college teaching. Each fellowship covers a full year's tuition and fees at a graduate school of the fellow's choice plus a living allowance of $1,500.

Candidates accepting the fellowships assume a moral obligation to complete at least one year of graduate studies and to give serious thought to a career in college teaching. The fellowships may be held at any graduate school in the United States or Canada admitting the fellows. The fellows are encouraged to pursue graduate work at institutions other than those where they took their undergraduate work.

Each candidate for a fellowship is nominated by a faculty member. Out of every 100 college seniors throughout the United States and Canada only one or two are nominated.

Gromyko Arrives In Vienna To Warn Western Nations Time Short For Disarming

McNamara Will Not Allow B70 To Be Pushed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara was described Saturday as determined not to yield an inch to powerful congressmen who want the 2,000-mile-an-hour B 7 0 bomber started on the high road toward a multibillion dollar production goal.

The defense chief, who usually wins congressional contests while juggling a dozen other military problems, attaches such importance to stopping the B70 movement that he plans to devote the next two weeks almost daily to the task.

Passions are running high in the battle of the B70—the only airplane in the world apparently that would fly three times the speed of sound—and time will tell whether the tough-minded McNamara can win another one by overwhelming the opposition with facts and logic.

His facts are that American technology does not yet know how to provide the complicated radar and computing devices the B70 needs for reconnaissance and missile firing at triple-sonic speed, and that by the time it can be done the plane may not be needed.

Facts Disputed

His chief antagonist is Chairman Carl Vinson (D.-Ga.), of the House Armed Services Committee, which supports Vinson to a man. Vinson has been in Congress two years longer than the 45-year-old McNamara has been alive and has won many a defense battle with the executive branch. Seldom has he thrown himself into a conflict with such fervor.

Like many another member of Congress and like the famed bombardment expert, Gen. Curtis E. Lemay who is chief of the Air Force, Vinson fears McNamara and the young engineers on his staff will put America "out of the bomber business." They are not persuaded by anything they have seen so far that missiles are that good.

As the battle heads into its third week, this is the situation:

The Air Force, with Defense Department encouragement, has changed the primary mission of the B70 from bomber to a reconnaissance-strike plan which could ferret out hard-to-find targets and pummel them with missiles and bombs. It is now called the RS70. Its basic structure and aerodynamics are the same but its electronics would be vastly more advanced.

PETER MAUPIN

Maupin Named To Serve In Peace Corps

Peter Maupin, a UNC junior from Wake Forest, will begin training on March 25 for a Peace Corps project in Arequipa, Peru.

Maupin received a wire on Wednesday from Peace Corps Director R. Sargent Shriver notifying him of his selection.. Details of the project were mailed later.

Arequipa, a city of 200,000, is located in the Peruvian Andes. Maupin's Peace Corps group will work in depressed sections called "barriadas" which surround the city. About 60,000 refugees from the earthquakes of 1958 and 1960 live there in temporary housing and without adequate food or health facilities.

Maupin, an education major at UNC, is to serve as a health educator. He has held a variety of jobs, ranging from social worker to electrician's apprentice, which he believes may prove helpful in his Peace Corps work. Maupin plans to finish college after two years' service in the Corps.

Next week end Maupin will join students from across the state in a college Peace Corps conference to be held in Chapel Hill. Maupin is the fifth UNC student to be selected for the Peace Corps.

French Minister Missing From Delegates

GENEVA (UPI) — Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko flew in Saturday for cold war and disarmament talks with the American and British foreign ministers. He served a grim warning that time was running out in the effort to halt the mushrooming nuclear arms race.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk was due later Saturday night from Washington where he left with a promise "to do everything we can do on our side" to halt the arms and reduce tension. He said "we can make some real headway" if Gromyko has the same attitude.

If there is progress a Summit conference coul follow this spring.

British Foreign Secretary Lord Home was flying in Sunday from London. He had a final briefing from Prime Minister Harold Macmillan Friday night and they were believed to have discussed some Anglo-American differences on the approach to a nuclear test ban.

France is boycotting the disarmament talks starting here Wednesday and French Foreign Minister Maurice Couve de Murville was missing from the foreign ministers conference. France was not even reperesented by an observer.

Disarmament First

The big three ministers planned to hold their first meeting on disarmament and possibly other major issues such as Berlin at a dinner meeting Sunday night with Rusk as host.

The British-Russian-American talks, which will continue Monday and Tuesday, are a prelude to the formal opening of the general disarament conference Wednesday at which 17 nations will be represented.

The pre-conference meeting of the three foreign ministers were grudgingly agreed to by Soviet Premier Nikita Krushchev after President Kennedy and Macmillan rejected his demands for a summit meeting to open the arms talks.

The Anglo-American leaders promised Khrushchev a possible summit in late April or May if the disarmament talks show "substantial progress" or if, in Kennedys' words, a "major crisis develops."

In addition, Kennedy has offered to call off the proposed new series of U. S. nuclear tests in the atmosphere if Khrushchev signs a foolproof pact, with inspection and control provisions outlawing such experiments. But there were no indications the Soviet leader has any intentions of doing this.

Sea Captain Johnson Here For Lecture

Captain Irving Johnson will give a talk illustrated with a film entitled "Trade Wind Islands: Pitcairn to Zanzibar," Tuesday at 8:00 p.m. in Memorial Hall. Admission price is $1.00 and anyone may attend.

Captain Johnson was born in Hadley, Massachusetts. He has been sailing since he was 17. He began sailing small boats along the New England Coast, graduated to professional sailing on yachts during the summertime and tramp steamers in the winter.

In 1929 he sailed around the Horn in a square rigger, the Peking, bound for Chile for a haul of nitrate. He began taking pictures on this trip. A year later he sailed the America Cup challenger, Shamrock V through a hurricane while returning it to England.

Captain Johnson made a business out of taking amateur sailors around the world on his boats and by lecturing. During World War II he was chosen by the Navy Department to help plan bases in the South Seas. He spent a great deal of the war sailing aboard the U.S.S. Sumner charting ocean currents, blasting reefs, etc.

The Johnsons have recently completed their seventh eighteen-month voyage around the world. In the summers in the United States between voyages they have taken over 2,000 Girl Scout Mariners on short cruises along the New England coast. Their next cruise will take them to North Africa and Europe in a new ketch, the Yankee.

Jackie Visits Pope, Misses Press Meet

By WILLIAM F. SUNDERLAND
(United Press International)

ROME — Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy, dazzling in a white silk coat and diamonds, attended a brief and unofficial visit to Rome that included an audience Sunday with Pope John XXIII.

The American first lady flew into this rain-drenched city from New York and took advantage of a Roman custom to rest up for the dinner by taking a siesta. She was smiling on arrival but she appeared tired by the flight from New York.

Solicitations Chairman Charges Duke Gives More To Charities Than UNC

By JIM WALLACE

The Duke University Campus Chest collects more money than the UNC Campus Chest, solicitations committee chairmen Van Oatts and Grant Wheeler said yesterday.

VAN OATTS
. . . Co-Chairman

GRANT WHEELER

Beginning Tuesday, the Solicitations Committee here will launch a program in hopes of outdoing the Blue Devils in the field of charity.

Oatts and Wheeler announced that in order to make it easier to donate, collectors will be calling on each dorm and fraternity house. "We hope the students realize that this drive comes only once a year and is UNC's only charity drive," the co-chairmen said.

"We are asking for a dollar per student, not just a dollar for the week but a dollar for the year," Wheeler said. "Being a member of the student body here at Carolina means more than going to classes. Each student has numerous responsibilities to the university, one of which is a mature and generous attitude toward worthy charities which the Campus Chest aids."

"Only with wholehearted support from Carolina's student body will the Campus Chest be able to support five charities this year," Miss Oatts pointed out.

"We do care and only through our sincere and generous support can we be of assistance to these deserving organizations," she said.

Dean Perry Named

C., who appointed the team members, for use in accrediting USC's education program for teachers, supervisors and administrators on both undergraduate and graduate levels.

Maryland Favored, But UNC Strong

Ninth Annual Indoor Games Begin At 10:30

Weil Mile Features Today's Nine Races

By ED DUPREE

The Weil Mile, scheduled for 8:25 tonight, highlights a list of nine track events on today's ACC Indoor Games program.

The late Lionel Weil of Goldsboro, N. C. established a trophy for the conference indoor mile winner in 1939 and it has been awarded to the top miler each year since.

In 1940 Davis of UNC set the record of 4:12.5, which has been tied by Burr Grim of Maryland in 1958, and Bill Latham of South Carolina in 1959.

Other winners of the event were UNC's Jim Beatty and Duke's Cary Weisiger. Beatty won the event three straight years, 1955-56-57. Wiesiger was the league's top miler last season.

But this year's field is the best ever and as many as four runners are capable of snapping the record established 22 years ago.

Nourse Favored

After spending last in the service, Duke's Jerry Nourse is favored to win the race and to break the record. He could come in near the 4:00 mark.

Maryland's Mark Wells won the race in 1961 with a 4:21.1 time and is back to defend his title. The number two man last year, Maryland's Guy Harper, is also back, as are Jim Moorhead, Clemson, John Pfalzgraf, South Carolin, and Louis Van Dyck, Duke. Moorhead, Pfalzgraph, and Van Dyck finished three-four-five in last year's Games.

Everett returns to defend the title he won last year in the two mile event. His time was 9:27.5, compared to another Tar Heel's 9:19.3 record—Wayne Bishop in 1959.

But Duke's Nourse is favored in this race also. He has run under nine minutes and could capture first places in each of the long races.

Scurlock Holds Mark

The record for the 880-yard run was set in 1959 by UNC's Dave Scurlock. Last year Jerry Stuver took a blue ribbon with a 1:54.7 performance, two seconds under Scurlock's mark. Other half-milers are Moorhead, second in 1961, Ray Dunkelberg, Clemson, Dick Smith, Maryland, Dave Turner, Wake Forest ,and UNC's Little.

Scurlock also holds the Indoor Games record of 1:12.7 for the 600-yard run in 1958. Maryland's Don Stauffer, with a time of 1:14.6, won the event last year and is back to try again. Chief threats to his title are UNC's Bob Hart and South Carolina's Dan Upton. Gil Faccio of Virginia was fourth last year and Dunkelberg of Clemson, fifth. Others in the race will be Doug Dobbs of Maryland and Jack Shaw of Clemson.

In addition to Hart, Don Jeffries, Gordon Howard, and Dave Brunson will run the 600 for Carolina.

Bradshaw Tops Hurdlers

In the 70-yard high hurdles, South Carolina's Charlie Bradshaw is the favorite, but a tight race is expected. UNC's Jim Brown rates high. Other high hurdlers will be Wesley King, Clemson, John Lindley, UNC, Wilfred Turner, UNC, and Carl Hendrix, South Carolina.

Bradshaw and King are the favorites in the 70-yard low hurdles. Other low hurdlers are Brown, UNC, Marv Pixton, Maryland, John Hepler, Virginia, and Bob Vermillion, Maryland.

The low hurdle record was set in 1949 by UNC's Bill Albans. His time was 7.6. Corpening of UNC, 1940, and Starboard of Maryland, 1959, holds the high hurdle record—8.5.

The shortest race of the day is the 60-yard dash, in which Dave Sime of Duke holds the 6.1 record. Jonas Spiegal won the sprint last year, but is not back to defend his title. Don Van Reenan of Maryland finished second to Spiegal in 1961 and is favored this time. UNC sends Tommy Brooks, John McNinch, Joe McLamb, and David Henry into this event, while other entries ar Clemson's King, Tony Sepp, Virginia, Ernest Williams, Wake Forest, Don Gilbert, Clemson, and Bill Grey, Maryland.

The mile and two mile relays could decide the winner of the meet. Maryland won the mile relay in 1961 in a record time of 3:24.1. Maryland also holds the two mile mark of 8:05.4, set in 1960.

Running the mile relay for UNC will be Brown, Stuver, Hart, and Bob Bennett, while Bennettt teams up with Mike Folk, Scott Brent, and Brunson in the long relay.

Furman Heads Outside Teams

By ED DUPREE

Furman's defending champions head the list of non-conference teams entered in today's ACC Indoor Games. The South Carolina Baptists won the Southern Conference title on Feb. 24 and boast four individual non-conference champs from the 1961 Indoor Games.

Tony Etnyre in the high jump, Dick Patterson in the two mile run, Dave Segal in the 60-yard dash, and Thad Talley in the 880 are Furman's big four.

Other individual champs returning to defend their titles are Bob Dietrich of William and Mary in the high hurdles and Jim McDowell of VMI in the shot put.

Richmond, The Citadel, Davidson, Virginia Tech, and Florida are also entered.

Coaches Boast Long Tenures

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The tenure of a coaching position in the sport of track and field is much longer, and much more secure than that of any other sport.

This fact is apparent (at least in the ACC) on looking at the respective tenures of the coaches who today gather for the 1962 ACC Indoor Games in Woollen Gym.

Of the eight ACC coaches, only P. Wee Greenfield of Clemson has served less than eight years at his present school. His two-year term added to the remaining mentors' combined tenures brings the coaches total to a fantastic 90 years.

Duke's Bob Chambers leads the pack with 24 seasons at the helm of the Blue Devils. Jim Kehoe has guided the fortunes of the Maryland Terrapins for the past 15 years while Weems Baskin of South Carolina follows Kehoe with 14 years as the Gamecock coach.

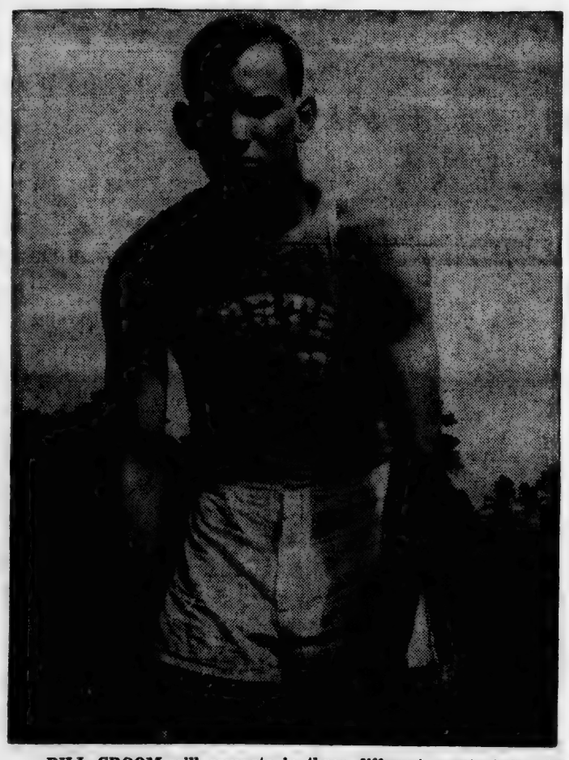
Louis Onesty has been at Virginia for the past nine seasons while Paul Derr of North Carolina State and Bill Jordan of Wake Forest round out the remarkably-durable positions of ACC coaches with eight years apiece at their respective schools.

Maryland coach Kehoe has copped seven of the previous eight ACC Indoor meets — his only loss coming in 1955 when UNC's Tar Heels, under Ranson, just nosed out the Terrapins. Maryland also boasts nine of last year's 13 individual winners.

SCOTT BRENT, UNC middle distance man, will run in the 880-yard run and the two mile relay this afternoon in the Atlantic Coast Conference's ninth annual indoor games.



BILL CROOM will compete in three different events today for Coach Dale Ranson's track teams. Croom will be in the high jump and broad jump for UNC, in addition to the 70-yard low hurdles.

Schedule Of Evenst

10:30—shot put, broad jump
1:00—high jump finals
2:00—preliminaries in 600, 880, 60-dash, and hurdles

Champs Return In Four Field Events

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Record-holders in three of the four field events return to defend their championships today as the 1962 edition of the ACC Indoor Games gets under way in Woollen Gym.

The title-winners, all of whom set their records last year, are: Dick Estes & Jim Bland, Maryland's double-barreled high-jump punch, Tom Belitza, a pole vaulter also with the Terrapins, and Dick Gesswein, a shot putter from Duke.

Estes and Bland, who both jumped 6-5 last year to tie for first place, will be hard-pressed to retain their co-ownership of the title this time out. The reason for this is two high-flying leapers by the names of George Leonard and Tom Clark.

Leonard, a Maryland teammate of Estes and Bland, has beaten both this year while Clark, the sophomore pride and joy of UNC's track team, has cleared 6-6⅝.

Belitza's record of 14-6½ in the polt vault is one of the eight marks meet director Joe Hilton predicts will be broken. The Maryland vaulter just last week tied 16-footer John Uelses at 15-4 in the New York City Knights of Columbus Meet. His strongest competition should come from Carolina's Barrie Tiedemann and Heath Whittle.

Shot Put In Tin Can

The shot put event, which takes place in the Tin Can at 10:30 this morning, will feature Duke's strongman, Gesswein. The big Blue Devil hurled the 16-pound ball 53'7½" last year for the record and is favored to repeat as the winner today. UNC's Harvey Henry, Virginia's Dave Graham, and Steve Hameroff of Maryland are considered the only threats to Gesswein.

The fourth record-breaker of a field event mark will be on hand today but not in a competitive role. He is Charlie Hubbard, currently the minister of the First Methodist Church here in Chapel Hill.

In 1935, Hubbard, broad-jumper for North Carolina, leaped 23'8¼" to establish the oldest record now on the ACC books, and today, he will be present in his usual capacity as Chief Inspector of the meet.

Threatening Hubbard's record will be John O'Bannon of UNC and South Carolina's Dan Upton. O'Bannon is the defending champion in this event, having placed first last year with a leap of 22'⅛" while Upton, the Palmetto state's chief challenge for a first place, has jumped 24' outdoors. Other jumpers in the running are Bob Vermillion of Maryland, Mike Elzay of Duke and UNC's Bill Croom.

Touts Win As Beck Hits 29

Lennie Beck's 29 points paced the Town Touts to a 59-41 victory over Aycock in Thursday's basketball action. The win advanced the Touts into the finals of the dorm blue division.

In a quarter-final game, also in dorm blue action, Cobb edged past Ruffin, 39-33.

The closest contest of the day came in a semi-final game in the dorm white division. The Winston Wieners nosed out the Parker Pack, 46-43. Freshman footballer Jim Gallagher poured in 22 points to lead Winston to victory.

In the other dorm white semi-final contest, the Avery Addicts defeated the Alexander Esquires, 48-34, with Byron Bowman's 15 points taking high scoring honors.

In the only other intramural basketball action, a fraternity blue game, Sigma Nu drubbed the Phi Gams by the lop-sided score of 61-21. Bob Wacker's 18 points for the victors almost topped the entire Phi Gam output.

N.C. Young Democrats Vote For National Affiliation; Sixty Attend Rally Here

Bert Bennett, Graham Talk To Delegates

By BILL WUAMETT

The College Young Democrats of North Carolina voted here yesterday at a rally to affiliate with the national College Federation of Young Democrats and drafted a federation constitution that will be presented to the individual clubs for ratification.

UNC-YDC President T. L. Odem said that the national affiliation would supplement the state organization and would not give supremacy to the national organization.

The action came at the last session of the two-day meeting in which the delegates heard talks by YDC National Committeeman Al House, state party chairman Bert Bennett and state YDC President "Dub" Graham.

At the general session yesterday morning Graham attacked the tendency of many people to vote for individual candidates without regard to party affiliation.

Calling for party loyalty, the Charlotte attorney said the "two party system had served the country well. Those who jump from party to party and from individual to individual," he stated, "are helping to contribute to the breakdown of the party system."

Such a breakdown, he said, would lead to an unstable government such as was recently endured by the French.

After Graham's speech, the delegates attended two seminars on the Peace Corps and Operation Support, a grassroots campaign to raise money for the 1962 campaign.

Cindy Poole of State College was elected president of the newly formed State of North Carolina Federation of Young Democrats that will join the national federation. Ann Francis Allen of East Carolina College was picked as secretary and Ken Bode of UNC was elected treasurer.

DONNA BAILEY

YWCA Elects Donna Bailey As President

A member of two YWCA committees this year, Donna has also served on a similar "Y" executive committee at the University of Mississippi, from where she transferred last year.

Hoping to introduce some of the best aspects of the "Y" at Ole Miss into the UNC program, Donna's goal for next year is to "promote greater unity of effort and coordination of the activities of the various 'Y' committees."

Serving next year as vice-president of the Executive committee will be Judy Brown, a transfer from Emory University in Atlanta. Nancy DuPuy, a transfer from Agnes Scott, was elected executive secretary.

Stuart Austin, a former Saint Mary's student, will serve as treasurer, while Susie Mitener, a transfer from Sullens will be membership chairman.

The new program chairman will be June Todd, a former Women's College student. Sarah Cullen, a transfer from the University of Georgia, was elected religious emphasis chairman.

Indian Visits UNC On Tour Of Colleges

Arthur D. Lazarus, principal of Sastri College, a technical High school for Indian students located in Durban, South Africa, is touring American state universities and studying the relationships between the administrative officials and the political power of the states.

Lazarus has found that American pressure groups figure prominently in maintaining academic freedom of university faculty members and officials. He said that the South African government policy does not admit this freedom and that, generally, all residents of South Africa are "walking on a mine field."

A native of South Africa, Lazarus' boyhood village was a main stopping point for Ghandi's first passive resistance exhibition. Ghandi and his followers stopped in Lazarus' village. Lazarus ,then 11 years old, served as Ghandi's page and served Ghandi his morning meal, Ghandi's one meal of the day. The meal consisted of a fruit dish and milk. Lazarus said that when Ghandi learned that there were children going without milk, he stopped drinking it.

For the year 1961-62, Lazarus has been appointed as a visiting scholar sponsored under the U. S. Government Educational Exchange program. During the first semester of the academic year, Lazarus was affiliated with the School of Advanced International Studies, Johns Hopkins University, Washington, D. C., and was the faculty associate of Dr. Vernon McKay, professor of African studies.

Lazarus is well-versed on South African topics concerning culture, education, (with particular reference to education for Indians), Hindu manners and customs, race attitudes in South Africa, and South African political affairs.

The Apartheid policy of South Africa is contributing to a rise in leftwing thinking in that area, he said. He said that the future for the state did not look good.

Lazarus attended Yale University where he received a M.A. degree in education. He has served as president of the National Indian Teacher's Society for 10 years, and is influential in Indian education in South Africa.

Phillips Says Teacher Image Is Unfocused

Guy B. Phillips, member of the State Board of Education and a former Dean of the School of Education at UNC, challenged the Statewide Conference on Teacher Education, to consider the characteristics and competencies of the qualified teacher as basic to proposed plans for preparation.

He recognized the need for and urged the Conference to provide freedom in planning along with essential guidelines and erstraints designed to protect the teacher, the child, and the citizen.

The image of the teacher which he presented calls for five basic senses of leadership.

The sense of perspective is essential if the teacher is to make the maximum contribution. A wide perspective is made possible when the individual has a strong general education, a wide range of personal experiences and contact with the society, and an understanding of world conditions. Such an overview prepares the individual for the creative task of awakening within the student an interest in and respect for knowledge. Institutions of higher learning must provide the broad perspective in curriculum, facilities and leadership to challenge students to growth.

The sense of direction is the second basic need to be met. The selection of a specific target and concentration upon its accomplishment becomes a constructive step toward success. Thorough preparation in particular areas of knowledge is important for successful teaching. It is the road map to somewhere.

The individual with the sense of perspective and direction must have a sense of responsibility. Decision making is one of the most important elements of leadership and is the foundation for progress. It tends to destroy conformity to accepted patterns and tradition which has been one of the most serious complaints against the profession.

Another necessary competency is a sense of confidence and security. Children respond to confident and enthusiastic leaders.

The final sense of humility completes the five basic foundations for success in leadership.

Nine Receive Wilson Award For Next Year

Nine UNC students have been awarded Woodrow Wilson Fellowships for one year of graduate study, it has been announced by the fellowship foundation headquarters in Princeton, N. J.

UNC senior students who were awarded the fellowships are: Maurice V. Barnhill of Wilmington, a physics major; Johnson B. Clinard of Winston-Salem, a classics major; Mrs. Nancy N. deGrummond of Lake Charles, La., a classics major; Stephen E. Kesler of Kings Mtn., a geology major; Dieter M. Mahncke of Atlanta, Ga., an international relations major; Nicholas D. Reppucci of Hollywood, Fla., a psychology major; William M. Richardson of Raleigh, an anthropology major; John B. Wagoner of Jacksonville, Fla., a mathematics major; and David S. Walker of China Grove, a French major.

Frank M. Duffy, professor, Department of Romance Languages, is the UNC Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation's campus representative. A total of 24 holders of previous fellowship awards are attending UNC at present.

A total of 1,058 students from colleges and universities in the 46 of the United States, eight provinces in Canada, Puerto Rico, Panama, and the Canal Zone have been awarded such grants.

The fellowships are awarded to students who expect to make their careers in college teaching. Each fellowship covers a full year's tuition and fees at a graduate school of the fellow's choice plus a living allowance of $1,500.

Candidates accepting the fellowships assume a moral obligation to complete at least one year of graduate studies and to give serious thought to a career in college teaching. The fellowships may be held at any graduate school in the United States or Canada admitting the fellows. The fellows are encouraged to pursue graduate work at institutions other than those where they took their undergraduate work.

Each candidate for a fellowship is nominated by a faculty member. Out of every 100 college seniors throughout the United States and Canada only one or two are nominated.

Gromyko Arrives In Vienna To Warn Western Nations Time Short For Disarming

French Minister Missing From Delegates

GENEVA (UPI) — Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko flew in Saturday for cold war and disarmament talks with the American and British foreign ministers. He served a grim warning that time was running out in the effort to halt the mushrooming nuclear arms race.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk was due later Saturday night from Washington where he left with a promise "to do everything we can do on our side" to halt the arms and reduce tension. He said "we can make some real headway" if Gromyko has the same attitude.

If there is progress a Summit conference coul follow this spring.

British Foreign Secretary Lord Home was flying in Sunday from London. He had a final briefing from Prime Minister Harold Macmillan Friday night and they were believed to have discussed some Anglo-American differences on the approach to a nuclear test ban.

France is boycotting the disarmament talks starting here Wednesday and French Foreign Minister Maurice Couve de Murville was missing from the foreign ministers conference. France was not even reperesented by an observer.

Disarmament First

The big three ministers planned to hold their first meeting on disarmament and possibly other major issues such as Berlin at a dinner meeting Sunday night with Rusk as host.

The British-Russian-American talks, which will continue Monday and Tuesday, are a prelude to the formal opening of the general disaramnent conference Wednesday at which 17 nations will be represented.

The pre-conference meeting of the three foreign ministers were grudgingly agreed to by Soviet Premier Nikita Krushchev after President Kennedy and Macmillan rejected his demands for a summit meeting to open the arms talks.

The Anglo-American leaders promised Khrushchev a possible summit in late April or May if the disarmament talks show "substantial progress" or if, in Kennedys' words, a "major crisis develops."

In addition, Kennedy has offered to call off the proposed new series of U. S. nuclear tests in the atmosphere if Khrushchev signs a foolproof pact, with inspection and control provisions outlawing such experiments. But there were no indications the Soviet leader has any intentions of doing this.

McNamara Will Not Allow B70 To Be Pushed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara was described Saturday as determined not to yield an inch to powerful congressmen who want the 2,000-mile-an-hour B 7 0 bomber started on the high road toward a multibillion dollar production goal.

The defense chief, who usually wins congressional contests while juggling a dozen other military problems, attaches such importance to stopping the B70 movement that he plans to devote the next two weeks almost daily to the task.

Passions are running high in the battle of the B70—the only airplane in the world apparently that would fly three times the speed of sound—and time will tell whether the tough-minded McNamara can win another one by overwhelming the opposition with facts and logic.

His facts are that American technology does not yet know how to provide the complicated radar and computing devices the B70 needs for reconnaissance and missile firing at triple-sonic speed, and that by the time it can be done the plane may not be needed.

Facts Disputed

His chief antagonist is Chairman Carl Vinson (D.-Ga.), of the House Armed Services Committee, which supports Vinson to a man. Vinson has been in Congress two years longer than the 45-year-old McNamara has been alive and has won many a defense battle with the executive branch. Seldom has he thrown himself into a conflict with such fervor.

Like many another member of Congress and like the famed bombardment expert, Gen. Curtis E. Lemay who is chief of the Air Force, Vinson fears McNamara and the young engineers on his staff will put America "out of the bomber business." They are not persuaded by anything they have seen so far that missiles are that good.

As the battle heads into its third week, this is the situation:

The Air Force, with Defense Department encouragement, has changed the primary mission of the B70 from bomber to a reconnaissance-strike plan which could ferret out hard-to-find targets and pummel them with missiles and bombs. It is now called the RS70. Its basic structure and aerodynamics are the same but its electronics would be vastly more advanced.

PETER MAUPIN

Maupin Named To Serve In Peace Corps

Peter Maupin, a UNC junior from Wake Forest, will begin training on March 25 for a Peace Corps project in Arequipa, Peru.

Maupin received a wire on Wednesday from Peace Corps Director R. Sargent Shriver notifying him of his selection.. Details of the project were mailed later.

Arequipa, a city of 200,000, is located in the Peruvian Andes. Maupin's Peace Corps group will work in depressed sections called "barriadas" which surround the city. About 60,000 refugees from the earthquakes of 1958 and 1960 live there in temporary housing and without adequate food or health facilities.

Maupin, an education major at UNC, is to serve as a health educator. He has held a variety of jobs, ranging from social worker to electrician's apprentice, which he believes may prove helpful in his Peace Corps work. Maupin plans to finish college after two years' service in the Corps.

Next week end Maupin will join students from across the state in a college Peace Corps conference to be held in Chapel Hill. Maupin is the fifth UNC student to be selected for the Peace Corps.

Sea Captain Johnson Here For Lecture

Captain Irving Johnson will give a talk illustrated with a film entitled "Trade Wind Islands: Pitcairn to Zanzibar," Tuesday at 8:00 p.m. in Memorial Hall. Admission price is $1.00 and anyone may attend.

Captain Johnson was born in Hadley, Massachusetts. He has been sailing since he was 17. He began sailing small boats along the New England Coast, graduated to professional sailing on yachts during the summertime and tramp steamers in the winter.

In 1929 he sailed around the Horn in a square rigger, the Peking, bound for Chile for a haul of nitrate. He began taking pictures on this trip. A year later he sailed the America Cup challenger, Shamrock V through a hurricane while returning it to England.

Captain Johnson made a business out of taking amateur sailors around the world on his boats and by lecturing. During World War II he was chosen by the Navy Department to help plan bases in the South Seas. He spent a great deal of the war sailing aboard the U.S.S. Sumner charting ocean currents, blasting reefs, etc.

The Johnsons have recently completed their seventh eighteen-month voyage around the world. In the summers in the United States between voyages they have taken over 2,000 Girl Scout Mariners on short cruises along the New England coast. Their next cruise will take them to North Africa and Europe in a new ketch, the Yankee.

Jackie Visits Pope, Misses Press Meet

By WILLIAM F. SUNDERLAND
(United Press International)

ROME — Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy, dazzling in a white silk coat and diamonds, attended a brief and unofficial visit to Rome that included an audience Sunday with Pope John XXIII.

The American first lady flew into this rain-drenched city from New York and took advantage of a Roman custom to rest up for the dinner by taking a siesta. She was smiling on arrival but she appeared tired by the flight from New York.

Solicitations Chairman Charges Duke Gives More To Charities Than UNC

By JIM WALLACE

The Duke University Campus Chest collects more money than the UNC Campus Chest, solicitations committee chairmen Van Oatts and Grant Wheeler said yesterday.

VAN OATTS

Beginning Tuesday, the Solicitations Committee here will launch a program in hopes of outdoing the Blue Devils in the field of charity.

Oatts and Wheeler announced that in order to make it easier to donate, collectors will be calling on each dorm and fraternity house. "We hope the students realize that this drive comes only once a year and is UNC's only charity drive," the co-chairmen said.

"We are asking for a dollar per student, not just a dollar for the week but a dollar for the year," Wheeler said. "Being a member of the student body here at Carolina means more than going to classes. Each student has numerous responsibilities to the university, one of which is a mature and generous attitude toward worthy charities which the Campus Chest aids."

GRANT WHEELER
. . . Co-Chairman

"Only with wholehearted support from Carolina's student body will the Campus Chest be able to support five charities this year," Miss Oatts pointed out.

"We do care and only through our sincere and generous support can we be of assistance to these deserving organizations," she said.

Dean Perry Named

Dean Arnold Perry of the UNC School of Education has been appointed chairman of a team to appraise the College of Education at the University of South Carolina.

The team will observe USC's work and confer with its faculty and students on March 5-7. A report will be sent to the National Commission on Accreditation of Teacher Education in Washington, D. C., who appointed the team members, for use in accrediting USC's education program for teachers, supervisors and administrators on both undergraduate and graduate levels.

Upper House?

What are the reasons for creating an upper house in the student legislature to consider only national and international issues? First, we will no longer be in the painful predicament of having representatives who are elected with no regard to their political beliefs speak for us on national political issues.

Some beg the question by pointing out that resolutions read "We, the student legislature of the University of North Carolina . . ." However, it may read, it has the effect of appearing to represent the views of the student body. If those same people would object further that this is not the effect at all, then we must reply that it is therefore all the more necessary to have an upper house which can reflect as nearly as any representational body the views of the student body. This would be another benefit that we would receive from having an upper house: for the first time the student body would be able to express its opinion on extra-campus issues and thereby exert its influence much more effectively on public opinion at large.

The most important reason for the creation of such a body is the great inroad on the perennial demon of student apathy on public affairs that it would make.

It is reasonable to expect a greater political awareness and concern from student body which is called upon to elect candidates who will represent its political views. Many people will be forced to formulate views for the first time. This is not to mention the double exposure to politics that students will be receiving both at election time and throughout the year as the upper house passes resolutions.

Political awareness would be enhanced as the various political clubs on campus swung into action, endorsing candidates and carrying on campaigns. How would it be possible, for example, for any constituency to remain ignorant when it was subjected to a campaign between a YAF-endorsed candidate and another backed by the New Left?

If the creation of an upper house in the student legislature would bring about (1) fair representation on extra-campus issues; (2) an organ to express the ideas and exert the influence of UNC students on public affairs; and (3) a method of arousing and sustaining an interest in national and international problems; then the next logical thing to do is to adopt the amendment which will bring such a thing into existence.

Of Student Councils

Jurisdiction

The Attorney General's staff of the student judiciary is currently considering whether or not to hear the case of a student charged with drunken driving.

Chances are about even, so far as we can gather, that the Council will actually hear the case. If it does, the student will stand in jeopardy both here and in a civil court.

The questions that this case raises are important ones. Just how much jurisdiction should the Councils have? Are its bounds limitless, insofar as any case involving a student here can be interpreted as reflecting on the University? Or, are civil violations matters to be handled solely by civil courts, with no implications under the Honor or Campus Codes?

When, in short, do a student's actions fall outside his role as a student and become matters to be dealt with entirely outside the realm of the campus?

Thus far, no hard and fast rules have been laid down in regard to jurisdiction of off-campus courts.

The result is that each case of this nature is a new one and is treated as such.

Some cases are heard by the Councils, others are not. Most never come to the attention of the student judiciary at all—and it is well that they do not..

The student judiciary has no business concerning itself with them unless they directly involve the Honor Code. Questions of "ungentlemanly conduct" which do not occur in a campus, or campus-related situation, should be no concern of the student judiciary.

In the case of the student involved in the drunken driving charge, for instance, the Council has no jurisdiction if the student had really valid reason for claiming gone on a wild spree through a dormitory, painted Silent Sam purple, goosed the Dean of Women, or some similar action, there might be cause for a Council hearing.

But drunken driving?

Let a civil court take care of it entirely.

Prof Blames Alcoholism On Moods

A University of Pennsylvania sociologist says the mood of a drinker and his social environment determine drunkenness—not merely the percentage of alcohol in the blood.

Dr. Albert B. Hobbs, who has studied the problem of alcoholism, has become convinced that social factors are just as important as physical factors in the making of an alcoholic.

He also disdains use of the term "intoxication" preferring the more descriptive "drunk." He calls intoxication a "nice Nelly pseudo-scientific designation' which says the blood contains a certain amount of alcohol. Drunk describes the mood in addition to the alcohol, he said.

According to Hobbs, a person switches from a sensible drinker to an alcoholic type when the balance between his own desires and the controls of society becomes upset.

"At first," Mr. Hobbs said, "the man out of guilt gulps and sneaks his drinks and makes excuses for drinking if he is caught. Later he becomes a closet drinker, drinking alone, hiding his bottle and losing all sense of guilt."

This is the stage at which he is fast headed toward alcoholism, the sociologist said.

Why does the drinker begin the pattern of alcoholism?

Dr. Hobbs explains that alcoholics have one thing in common: They see themselves as being more important than society and its codes of behavior. This is the mood that upsets the balance.

He said the success of Alcoholics Anonymous is due to its efforts at gradually restoring the delicate balance between selfish aims and social controls.

42 Pct. Drop Out At Carolina

As admission to American colleges and universities becomes more difficult and entrance requirements and academic standards get tougher, the problem of drop-outs before graduation takes on added significance. New dimensions of the problem, including analysis of percentages and factors related to attrition, are explored in the following summaries of information from two recently published books and a statement by the dean of Rutgers University.

Causes

Nationally, approximately one out of three dropouts occurs for academic reasons, reports John Summerskill, vice-president of Cornell University in a thousand-page study, "The American College."

Approximately half the freshmen who enter American colleges drop out during the next four years; about 40% never graduate; and there has been no appreciable change in drop-out rates during the past 40 years, concludes Summerskill, after reviewing 35 major studies of the problem completed in the years from 1913 to the present.

The UNC drop-out rate is 44 per cent. Given an extra semester or two after the eighth semester, the rate is 42 per cent.

The net loss of students this year is 499. However, according to Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson, these are not all drop-outs. He said the exact reasons for each student leaving are now being determined.

Some colleges lose as few as 12 per cent of their freshman class over a four-year period, while others have drop-out rates as high as 82 per cent, he notes.

"In general, the attrition problems that predominate in colleges involve the student's failure to meet the psychological, sociological or economic demands rather than the strictly academic demands of the college enviroment," says Summerskill. "The largest numbers of drop-out involve motivational forces —goals, interests, and satisfactions relative to college and other facets of the student's life. . . . In most existing studies, the largest proportions of dropouts are attributed to 'lack of interest in college,' 'lack of interest in studies,' 'marriage,' 'entered military service,' 'transfer,' and so forth."

"The trouble in dealing with this problem is that we do not know what motivational factors are actually predictive of college success."

"Parents occupy key positions in the wider circle of influences upon the changing motivations of the college student. . . . The lives of many college students are influenced in important ways by feelings of dependency, ambition, fear, guilt and rebellion, stemming from family aspirations, sanctions or disapproval."

"Research difficulties are listed as one of the important causes of attrition, rating with motivation and study problems as one of the top three causes for dropouts. The annual incomes of parents whose children fail to graduate also tend to be lower than those who successfully complete college.

A general tightening of admissions qualifications throughout the country over the past two years is reported in results of the national survey of over 2,400 colleges conducted for the 1962 edition of "The New American Guide to College."

Dean A. E. Meder of Rutgers notes that whether any dropout rate is to be regarded as high or low depends on the underlying philosophy of the institution. "If it seeks to admit only students of exceedingly high qualifications who are almost predestined to make good, as do some private institutions, the dropout rate should be negligible. If it seeks to give worthy students with creditable records a chance to pursue higher education and prepare themselves for richer and fuller lives, it must be prepared for a somewhat higher dropout rate," he says.

"Rutgers," Meder says, "accepts the philosophy of the land-grant colleges and state universities—that of promoting the practical and academic education of every student who is likely to be able to profit by college attendance, both for his sake and in the national interest, as well as for the future betterment of society."

Robinson's Ramblings

Machines are now translating material from the Russian language, but human translators are still useful. Consider this story:

Not long ago a machine, charged with translating a technical article from Russian into English, whirred its wheels, searched its memory, ground its gears, and presented some copy into the waiting hands of interested bystanders.

They noted that the machine had indeed converted the unfamiliar Russian syllables into English. But, dismayed, they read the peculiar title which emerged from the machine: "New uses for water goats."

Only when a human translator was consulted did the expectant onlookers learn that what the machine had encountered were the Russian words for "hydraulic rams" and that "water goats" was the nearest equivalent in the machine's 850 word vocabulary.

Machines are not now used in translating from the Japanese language.

Mr. Takashashi has a wide face and a big belly but he couldn't read Mr. Okamoto's belly so it was quite easy for Okamoto to make him ride the nose wheel. This crushed Mr. Takashashi's liver but when I tried to warn him that Okamoto has a black belly it was a nail in bran.

Mr. Takashashi is a well known person who is broad-minded but he couldn't read Mr. Okamoto's mind so it was quite easy for Okamoto to cheat him. This amazed Mr. Takashashi but when I tried to warn him that Okamoto is crafty it was like pouring water on a duck's back.

CREATIVITY is where you find it.

As witness this story: A large restaurant was famous for its home-baked bread and it was one man's job to slice the loaves.

One day it occurred to him that if he got a longer knife and placed two loaves side by side, he could double his output.

Things went well for a while, but the man was not satisfied. He searched until he found a longer knife which could be used to slice three loaves placed side by side. However, the man still was not satisfied. He had been bitten by the bug of mass production and he searched for a longer knife which could be used to slice more loaves of bread.

As time went on and he could not find such a knife, he became discouraged and neglected his work. Since the patrons could not get the home-made bread for which the restaurant was famous, they began eating elsewhere and the restaurant began losing money.

One day the man confided in a butcher who sympathized with him, and then, picking up a large cleaver, began to cut up the carcass of a whole ox. The bread man suddenly became alert and asked the butcher about this large knife. The butcher told him where he could get one. And once aagin all is well. The restaurant's business is good, the man got a raise, and everyone is happy.

One day, when King Edward III was chatting with a group of his courtiers a French lady walked by. Just as she passed the group, her garter broke and fell to the floor. Naturally there was a good deal of snickering among the courtiers, but Edward picked up the garter and, handing it to its coquettish owner, said: "Honi soit qui mal y pense" — meaning:: "Honey don't look now, but your losing your pense." Whereupon one of the courtiers spoke up: "Hey, here's an idea. Let's order a new garter for her." There being no purchasing department to complicate the transaction, The Order of the Garter was completed on the spot.

Doc Field Lambasts Legislature

Am I led to believe that the Student Legislature is nothing more than a debating society equivalent to the Di-Phi?

According to Bill Dowell this would appear to be the case. In attempting to rebuff the petition signers and also my claims about the Student legislature he has obviously only further cemented our position.

In the first place several legislators on both sides of the issue have verified the petition's essential accuracy and, in some cases, signed it.

If, as according to Mr. Dowell, the Student Legislature was not acting in behalf of the students of the University of North Carolina, then we must assume that they were acting merely as a debating society.

Is this what we elected our Student Legislators for? Of course not! We elected them to represent us on campus issues pertaining to the university and the needs of its students. Why then do they take it upon themselves to bear the world's ills upon their shoulders while our own dormitories lack proper facilities for our students?

Unfair, Illegal

If they do claim to represent us, which any proposal of this nature would infer, since the recipient of the resolution would automatically and justifiably think that a legislature was representative of campus opinion then they are wrong again.

Little or no attempt was made to poll student opinion on this issue, so disregarding the fact that it was unconstitutional and illegal, the students were not being fairly represented .

Maybe the members of the legislature feel that the students do not care what they do. In some cases this is true, but on the whole totally inaccurate.

In circulating the petition around the dorms, we have found students to be extremely interested and they do care when their rights and trusts have been abused. The petition signers can see what this could lead to, and have decided that now is the time to put a stop to it.

No!

One of Mr. Dowell's arguments is is that the signers of the petition never laid eyes upon the bill and furthermore that they are uninformed. Is this all the fault of the student? No!

Seldom are students informed about campus politics. Inadequate coverage is partially responsible for this, but how often do our elected representatives attempt to inform us? Very seldom.

Students would like to be informed and take part in campus activities, but they are not responsible for taking all the initiative.

Mr. Dowell has very nicely supplied my conclusion for me in his article. He stated that, "the Student Legislature was designed to run the student government." This is 100% correct so why don't they do it?

Yankee Chick Rips Into Johnny Rebs

I am sick to death of Carolina Gentlemen.

They suffer from enormous superiority complexes revolving around their fabled good manners, capacity for cheap liquor, Milton's wardrobe and sexual prowess. In reality, they are hypocritical idiots with the most obtuse approach to women I have encountered since I turned Sweet Sixteen.

They have no idea what a good conversation consists of. I have personally witnessed many bragging about how dumb they are in a particular course and how they forget everything they ever learned as soon as the test is over. I wish they would bear in mind that no girl likes to hear how stupid her date is. She thinks she should be able to catch better . . . and she is right.

Another gripe I have with Carolina Gentlemen is their constant apologizing. They are several minutes late for a date; they can only afford to take you to the free flick; they don't have a car; they don't belong to a fraternity; they forget to open a door for you; they can't decide where they will take you.

Any and all of these things will send a Carolina Gentleman into fits of apologies and cataclysms of horror. Example: My first date down south was with a huge gangly individual of mediocre intellect. I was late and he apologized for making me hurry. He couldn't see too well and so once more I was subjected to profuse apologies because we had to sit in the front of the theater. I kicked off a shoe and lost it. He apologized because he couldn't rescue it. Afterwards, we went to a restaurant for a snack. I had a coke and he had milk, because "sweets make his face break out."

Please—won't somebody tell me where the Carolina men are?

Minister's Peace Plea

Mankind's chief objective now is for Kennedy to postpone tests. A sustained flood of letters, telegrams and cablegrams should roll into Congress and to the President; an unbroken tide of Americans from all 50 states should demonstrate before the White House until victory is won. If we cannot postpone tests there is little hope we can prevent thermonuclear war.

POGO—PEANUTS

Pianist Amada Will Perform Tuesday Night

Pianist Kenneth Amada will be featured Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Hill Music Hall. His concert is a part of the spring series of Tuesday Evening programs sponsored by the Music Department.

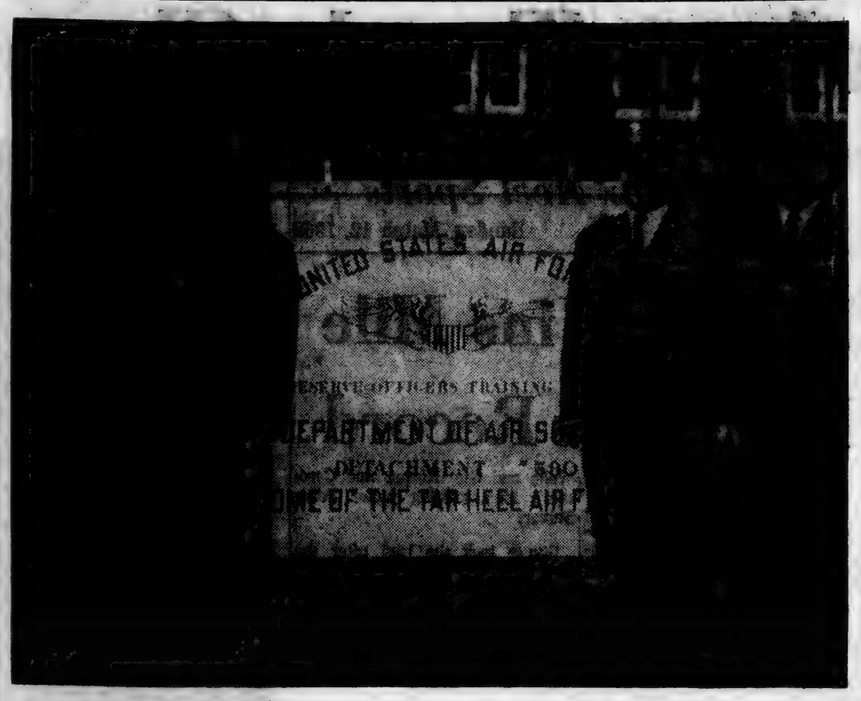
Mr. Amada, a young American pianist from New Jersey, began his study of the piano at the age of three. He made his Town Hall debut in New York in 1951, and has followed that with two additional Town Hall appearances. He has given numerous other solo recitals throughout the country, and his orchestral appearances include the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Detroit Symphony, the Buffalo Symphony, the Baltimore Symphony, the Warsaw Philharmonic, and the National Orchestra of Belgium.

An award-winning pianist in the 1960 International Queen Elizabeth of Belgium Competition, Mr. Amada also is the first pianist to have twice been a gold medal winner in the Leventritt International Competition for Pianists.

His program will consist of Beethoven's Sonata Op. 53 (Waldstein); Prokofiev's Sonata No. 7, Op. 83; and Brahms' Variation and Fugue on a Theme by Handel. Admission is free.

LION'S PROVIDER

The jackal is called the "lion's provider." When on the trail of his prey, his hideous calls disclose his whereabouts to the lion, who follows in his wake and drives him away from the carcass when the kill is made, leaving him only the fragments when his own hunger is satisfied.



TWO PAIR—The UNC AFROTC currently has two sets of identical twins enrolled in the program. They are (l. to r.) John and James Ward, freshmen from Hendersonville; and Duff and Bruce Greene, juniors from Wynnewood, Pa. This is the first time two sets of twins have been enrolled in the Corps simultaneously.

Sechs Bucher In Krautseries By Coenen In Year Released

Six new books have been released during the past year in UNC's "Studies in the Germanic Languages and Literatures" series edited by Professor Frederic E. Coenen of the Department of Germanic Languages.

Three of the books were just released. They are "Music of the Minnesinger and Early Meistersinger," by Robert White Linker, Professor, UNC Department of Romance Languages; Christian Reuter's "Schelmuffsky," translated by Wayne Wonderly, head of the language department, Western Michigan University; and "The Niebelungenlied Today," by Werner A. Mueller, assistant professor, University of Wyoming.

Dr. Linker's book gives a bibliography of all the music of the Minnesinger and their immediate successors. The Minnesingers were German lyric poets and musicians of the period from about 1150 to 1350. Dr. Linker includes pertinent material dealing with the relationship of the Minnesinger to the French troubadours and the troubadours of Provence.

Christian Reuter's novel "Schelmuffsky" is a humorous satire about an egocentric adventurer who claims aristocratic grandeur. Professor Mueller's "The Nibelungenlied Today" is a study of the moral values of the famed medieval German epic.

Other recent books in the series are "The German Baroque Lyric in English Translation" by George C. Schoolfield, head of the German Department, University of Cincinnati; "The Hermit in German Literature, 1749-1835," by Henry John Fitzell of Rutgers University; and Heinrich von Kleist's comedy "The Broken Pitcher," translated by Dr. B. Q. Morgan, professor emeritus of German, Stanford University.

A total of 34 books have been released in the series. The series gfive scholars in Germanic Languages an opportunity to publish material which normally would have a very limited appeal and which might not be considered for publication by large publishing houses, according to Professor Coenen.

AUSTIN—Control of the editorship of the Daily Texan, which has frequently criticized administration and regent policies, was taken away from the student body last week and given to a nine-member board, four of whom are from the U. of Texas faculty.

MORGANTOWN, W. Va.—The U. of West Virginia student body voted last week to disaffiliate the University from the National Student Association by a two-and-one-half to one majority.

STUDENT RITES

STORRS, Conn.—The Save Our Senate organization last week proposed a Bill of Student Rights that would prohibit discrimination because of race, color or creed in all University activities; assure that no student would be punished for taking part in any demonstration; allow a student on trial the right to face his accusers; prohibit any student being suspended for actions committed off the University campus.

Cornell Race Relations

ITHACA — James Farmer, national director of CORE, and Malcolm X, foremost spokesman for the Black Muslim Movement, debated American race relations Wednesday at Cornell University.

Farmer attacked the "vicious racists who claim that Negroes are innately inferior to whites" and said that Americans are suffering from a split personality, and "believe in freedom, democracy and equality but refuse to practice it."

Malcom said that the race problem was the most crucial problem to the whites at the present and that the whites are losing their ability to dictate to the black man. The Black Muslims, he said, wish to return to Africa where they originally came from, and to protect themselves from the white man by separation.

SNCC Buttons

MADISON—The Student Council on Civil Rights at the University of Wisconsin announced Wednesday its intention to start selling SNCC buttons in order to raise money to give to the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee.

The buttons are inscribed with the words "We shall conquer" and with an emblem of a white hand and a black hand clasped together.

Illinois Peace March

CHAMPAIGN-URBANA — Fifty members of the Turn Toward Peace movement at the University of Illinois marched through Champaign-Urbana March 3 in protest against Kennedy's decision to resume atmospheric testing.

The demonstration resulted from meetings held earlier during the week. The TPP decided Thursday that if Kennedy announced the resumption of tests on Friday it would plan suitable action to follow the speech.

The marchers carried placards and distributed pamphlets.

The TTP then sent a telegram to the president saying, "Fifty Americans today walked through Champaign-Urbana urging our government to negotiate flexibly for a test ban by April." A similar messafge was sent to the Soviet Union urging a stoppage of Soviet testing.

Maryland Repeats As Indoor Track Champions

Two Mile Mark; Nourse Breaks UNC Takes 2nd

Duke's Jerry Nourse stole the show with first places in both the Weil Mile and two-mile events, but Maryland's track team once again took the ACC Indoor championship. Official scoring totals were not available.

After winning the mile shortly earlier, Nourse ran away with the two-mile race in record time of 9:18. He broke Wayne Bishop's old mark of 9:19.3.

Carolina captured first and second in the 880-yard run with Scott Brent and Bob Bennett bringing home the bacon. Brent's winning time was 1:58.7.

Carolina trailed only seven points going into the final two events, but the Terps' power was more than enough to capture their eighth championship.

Scoring totals, with only the mile relay to go, were Maryland 57½ and UNC 44 2/5.

ON HIS WAY to a new ACC Indoor Games record Saturday, UNC's Tom Clark clears the bar at 5'10".. The sophomore from Greensboro smashed the old mark of 6'5" before the afternoon was over by high jumping 6'7¾". Carolina jumped off to a narrow 12-11 lead after the day's first three events—the shot put, high jump, and pole vault—all held in the morning and early afternoon. Duke's Dick Gesswein also broke the Indoor Games record in the shot put with a heave of 54' 5¼". UNC's Harvey Henry was second.

Aaron, Furgol Take Lead At Pensacola

By DON MARTIN

PENSACOLA, Fla. — (UPI) — Newcomer Tommy Aaron of Gainesville, Ga., and veteran Marty Furgol of Coghill, Ill., broke par by six strokes Saturday to take an early lead in the third round of the seventh annual $20,000 Pensacola Open Tournament.

Aaron and Furgol, 23rd top money winner during the past decade, put together identical nines of 34-32 for 66's and a three-round total of 209, seven shots under par.

A dense fog rolled in from the Gulf of Mexico during the night and the early starters had difficulty locating the pins in the murky mist. The sun broke through shortly before noon, but light showers skittered across the course, making each hole play 10-20 yards longer.

Arnold Palmer of Miami and Paul Harney of Worchester, Mass., winner here two years ago, teed off with Sanders seven-under-par at 137. On the first five holes, Palmer picked up two birdies and Harney one.

Harney holds a 2-hole record here with a 269 total—19 strokes under par over the 66,700-yard, par-72 country club course.

Furgol banged a 12-footer on one for a birdie and picked up birds on the fifth and eighth holes with short putts. His only miscue came on the long, par four ninth when he overshot the green and was long shipping back. "I was putting real well," Furgol said. "Every cup looked like a bathtub."

Aaron also said he was putting well, knocking in a couple of 30-footers as he picked up seven birds and one bogey.

Russians Decline Mets Invitation

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (UPI) —A group of seven Russian yachtsmen competing here in the International Flying Dutchman Regatta first accepted and then refused an invitation from the New York Mets to attend their opening exhibition baseball game Saturday.

Tom Meany, public relations director for the New York National League club, extended the invitation to the Soviet goup last week. An interpreter checked with Meany to be sure there would be enough seats for the entire group.

Saturday morning, the interpreter notified Meany his group could not accept the invitation but gave no reason.

High Jumper Tommy Clark Breaks Indoor Games Mark

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

UNC sophomore Tommy Clark brought the ACC Indoor Games crowd to their feet yesterday afternoon as he leaped 6' 7¾" for a new ACC high jump record.

The 6-1 sophomore out of Greensboro, while jumping higher than anyone ever has before in Woollen Gym, erased the old mark of 6' 5" set jointly in 1961 by Maryland's Dick Estes and Jim Bland.

Clark, after his record-smashing hurdle, missed three times at 6' 8¾" but this didn't stop the large crowd from giving the youngster the greatest ovation of the games. Many rushed out onto the floor to congratulate Clark after his final miss.

Bland, Estes, and Tom Leonard, also of Maryland, finished in a tie for second at 6-2.

More Afternoon Records

Records were also established in the non-conference two-mile and 880-yard runs. In the two-mile, Charles Vickers of VMI was clocked in 9:49 as he broke the 1961 mark of 9:49.5 set by Dennis Patterson of Furman. In the first heat of the 880 non-conference preliminaries, Thad Talley of Furman covered the distance in 1:53.4 to erase his own mark of 1:55.8 established last year.

South Carolina took one-two in the conference broad jump event. Billy Gambrell, a halfback on the Gamecock football team, won with a jump of 21' 9¾" while teammate Dan Upton was second. UNC's Bill Croom leaped 21' 5½" for third place.

Tom Miller of the Citadel won the non-conference high jump with a leap of 6' 3" while Maryland's Tom Scherer took the frosh high jump on a 6' 4" effort.

Shot Marks Fall

All existing shotput records fell in the Tin Can yesterday morning as this colorful carnival, tabbed "The Indoor Track Classic of the South" got underway.

Duke strongman Dick Gesswein led the assault on the record books as he broke the ACC conference mark with a heavet of 54' 5½". The previous record of 54' 2¾" was set by Dave Coates of South Carolina in 1958.

In the non-conference and freshman divisions, shot records also fell as Pete Bracken of William & Mary and Dave Drosdov of Maryland walked away with their respective titles.

Bracken hurled the sphere 50' 4" for the non-conference record and Drosdov set a new standard with his 50' 2¼" throw.

ACC conference preliminary heats in both the 600 and 880-yard runs were held yesterday afternoon with Carolina showing very well.

Nourse Wins Mile But Misses Record

By MARTY KRUMING

It seems that a year in the service did little damage to Duke senior Jerry Nourse as this fleet-footed miler captured first place in the mile run of the ACC Indoor Games with an excellent time of 4:13. Although Nourse failed to crack the conference record of 4:12.5, he held a commanding lead soon after the halfway point in the race.

Stuver took the lead after the first lap and was running strong until blond-headed Nourse flew past him close to the halfway mark. Stuver continued to lose ground and soon fell to the fourth position as Harper and Wells poured on the steam.

The crowd was on its feet as the swift Blue Devil hit the final lap. Maryland's runners and Stuver picked up the pace but Nourse had built up too much of a commanding lead. The final tally showed Nourse in first with Harper, Wells, Stuver, and Everett behind him.

SPEAKS TOPS PACK SCORING

RALEIGH — When junior guard Jon Speaks, Lexington, Ky., led the 1961-62 North Carolina State basketball team in scoring with a 17.4 average, it was the highest scoring average for a Wolfpack player since Ronnie Shavlik and Vic Molodet averaged 18.2 points a game in the 1955-56 season.

EX-STATE HURLERS

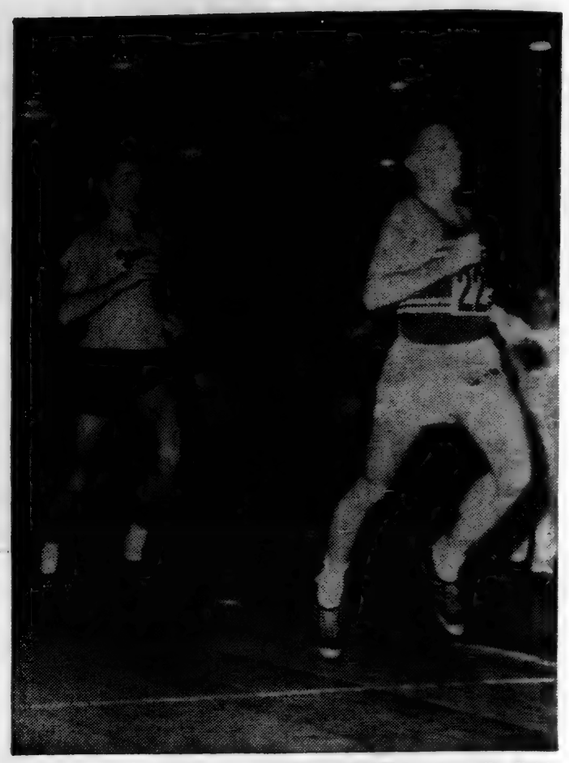
RALEIGH—Joel Gibson, all-Atlantic Coast Conference pitcher for North Carolina State last year, is on the Philadelphia Phillies roster and working out with the National League club in Clearwater, Florida.

Gibson, a right-hander who had the best ERA mark in the ACC last year, 1.34, winning seven and losing two for the Wolfpack in 1961, was a bonus signee by the Phillies.

Another former State pitcher, George Stepanovich, is assigned to Rochester this year in the Baltimore Orioles chain.

GLEE CLUB CONCERT

The UNC Men's Glee Club will sing at 8 p.m. Tuesday, March 27, in Hill Hall under the auspices of the UNC Music Department's Tuesday Evening Services.



MARYLAND FRESHMAN RAMSEY THOMAS crosses the finish line to take a first place in one of the 880-yard heats Saturday. Finishing second is Wake Forest frosh runner, J. H. Nichols.

Film Critic John Grierson To Discuss Changes In Art

John Grierson, the Scotsman who found and lead the British documentary film movement which exerted revolutionary and lasting influence on film production around the world, will address the Carolina Symposium on Monday evening, April 2. Grierson will share the platform on "Today's Revolutions in the Arts" with critic Gilbert Seldes. He will be the only foreign visitor to speak during the Symposium.

Grierson's visit to this country is jointly sponsored by the Symposium, the UNC-Chapel Hill Film Society, the Museum of Modern Art in New York and the Washington, D. C. Film Council. Introducing him in Chapel Hill will be Richard Griffith, Museum of Modern Art curator of motion pictures, who will be a special guest of the UNC-Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures.

A colorful, dynamic personality, Grierson became a legend in the motion picture world in his own lifetime. Queen Elizabeth last year bestowed the rank of Commander of the British Empire on him for his contribution to cinema and education and his farm home in Wiltshire, England has been designated a national monument.

Since 1958 Grierson has been affiliated with Scottish Television Limited, where he has produced various programs including "This Wonderful World," which the London SPECTATOR has called "The most exciting program at present available on the little screen . . . (Grierson) still commands more tricks than most of his juniors will ever learn."

He also is a special consultant to the Films of Scotland Committee, a government body set up to project Scotland, in film terms, to the outside world. Grierson wrote the treatment for the Committee's award-winning film, "Seawards the Great Ships," which is an Academy Award "Oscar" nominee this year. More recently he has written the treatment for "The Heart of Scotland," a film on his native county, Stirlingshire.

Before returning to Scotland in 1958, Grierson served as the head of UNESCO's Department of Mass Communications for three years, resigning in 1951 to head up Group 3 in London, a feature film unit which the British Government set up under the National Film Act to train new directors and other young film talent for British studios. Two of the films made by Group 3 have been shown by Free Flicks here at the University, "Brandy for the Parson" and Stephen Leacock's "The Brave Don't Cry."

Born in Deanston, Scotland in 1898, one of seven children of a schoolmaster of nearby Cambusbarron, Grierson entered Glasgow University as a Clark Scholar in 1914. His education was interrupted by the war and three and a half years of service in the Royal Navy spent chiefly in minesweepers and auxiliary patrol vessels. The experience confirmed him in his love of the sea and ships, and Grierson

Yale Chaplain To Speak Here At Corps Meet

Tickets Available For Luncheon

A speech by Yale Chaplain William Coffin will highlight a Saturday luncheon at the upcoming Peace Corps Day program that will give students a chance to "meet and hear" Peace Corps officials.

Tickets for the luncheon are still available at $2 per person in the lobby of the YMCA building from 2-5 p.m. from this Monday through Wednesday afternoon.

Anne Queen, co-ordinator of the University's Peace Corps Committee, said "The purpose of the luncheon is to give a chance for UNC students and delegates to meet and hear Peace Corps directors and to thereby gain an invaluable concept of what the Peace Corps is all about. I urge all students who may be interested in the Peace Corps, now or in the future, to attend the luncheon."

The principal speaker for the occasion will be the Reverend Coffin Well known on campus, the Rev. Mr. Coffin is a member of the National Advisory Board of the Peace Corps.

The luncheon will be followed by a round of discussion groups on Peace Corps programs in Africa, Asia and Latin America. The regional discussion groups will be held in Gardner Hall from about 2:30 until 4 p.m. or after. UNC professors will take part in the discussion groups.

Theater Ends Segregation Policies

The Carolina Theater was completely integrated last week after gradually lowering its color bar over a period of seven months. The move followed by two months the desegregation of the other commercial theater in Chapel Hill, the Varsity, which was integrated in December.

The Chapel Hill Citizens Committee for Open Movies has announced that it will disband itself as soon as integration is complete. The committee, a group of students and townspeople, has been working for theater integration here for more than a year.

The Carolina's latest admissions policy change culminated a move toward desegregation which began last August. At that time, the theater began admitting Negro University students who showed identification cards at the box office.

Since then, the theater had gradually liberalized its policy, admitting dates and families of UNC students, and then permitting non-student Negroes to attend as guests of white patrons.

Most churches in Chapel Hill and many restaurants have been integrated for some time. Chapel Hill schools voluntarily adopted a policy of integration last year.

Rusk And Gromyko Fail To Agree Before Talks

The A Cappella Choir of the Woman's College of Georgia, shown above, will present a musical program of sacred music Wednesday at 8 p.m. at the Methodist Church. The director, Dr. Max Noah, was formerly Head of the Department of Music at Guilford College. The group is en route to New York via Hartwell, Ga.; Farmville, N. C.; Strasburg, Va.; Washington, D. C.; and Wilmington, Del. There will be no admission charge.

Harassment Is Continued By Soviet Planes

GENEVA (UPI) — Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko failed Monday to crack the East-West deadlock on critical cold war issues in a three-hour talk marked by new American warnings and hints of a Russian deal on Berlin.

The Rusk-Gromyko talks were part of the Big Three foreign ministers conference preceding the start Wednesday of 17-power talks on disarmament. Gromyko will confer Tuesday with British Foreign Secretary Lord Home. France is boycotting the talks.

While the two diplomats conferred at the Soviet villa, the Russians renewed their interference along the West Berlin aerial lifelines and Rusk warned that further harassment would be met with storm measures — possibly jet fighter escorts for Allied planes.

The Soviets countered by publishing a proposal for the creation of nuclear-free zones, including one in central Europe. The Russian move appeared to be a prologue to a possible offer of some kind of European security arrangement package in return for a new Berlin agreement.

The Russian proposals, made in a letter to acting United Nations Secretary General Thant, called for freezing the transfer of nuclear weapons to non-nuclear nations and to create geographical zones in which such weapons could not be manufactured or stored.

A spokesman for Rusk Monday night dismissed the proposals as nothing new, but said Gromyko may present them to Wednesday's 17-nation disarmament conference. The proposals first were made by Polish Foreign Minister Adam Rapacki who arrived Monday for the arms talk.

The British delegation said Gromyko's letter "does not appear to contain any new or startling elements." He said Britain could agree with the idea of non-distribution of nuclear weapons "but there are other issues non-nuclear zones which are not in line with British policy and are not acceptable."

The Bonn government is known to oppose such moves in fear it might turn West Germany into a second class power and weaken NATO. The West German Foreign Ministry announced that Foreign Minister Gerhard Schroeder will pay a "courtesy call" Tuesday on Gromyko.

Chest Solicitations Begin With $1-Per-Student Goal

By Jim Wallace

Two hundred solicitors will contact students living in dormitories and sorority houses. Fraternity collections will be made through regular chapter meetings. Faculty members are asked to contribute through special boxes placed in each department office.

The drive will last through Thursday.

Students donating $1 or more will be given a Campus Chest button. Each button has a number on the back. Three numbers will be drawn at Saturday's carnival by Susan Woodall, Miss North Carolina, and students holding the lucky numbers will be given door prizes.

First prize will be a dinner for two at the Ranch House, second a Madras or Batik sport coat or a London Fog from Milton's, Third prize will be five 20-minute back rubs from coeds in Whitehead Dorm.

Students may vote for the "King of the Carnival" this week in Y-Court. Candidates are: Dr. Doug Sessoms of the Sociology Department; Charlie Bernard, Dean of admissions; Dr. Earle Wallace of the Political Science Department and Dr. A. P. Hudson, professor of English.

Money raised from this year's drive will aid the Children's Mental Hospital in Butner, the World University Service, heart research at Memorial Hospital and the Tours Scholarship.

Campus Chest Chairman Charlie Shelton said, "We are only asking for $1 per student because we feel that is enough. Duke is asking $1.40 per student and Harvard $10," he said.

The following has been pledged so far: ADPi, $55; ATO, $55; Chi Phi, $50; DKE, $58; St. A, $25; Lambda Chi, $30; Phi Gam, $25; Pi Kappa Phi, $32; Sigma Nu, $30; ZBT, $44; UP, $50.

First $1,000 To Be Raised Will Aid Children's Clinic

The first $1,000 received by the Campus Chest will go towards the purchase of a "photic stimulator" or variable frequency light, according to Dr. W. C. Rippy, Jr., Clinical Director of the Children's Psychiatric Unit located at Butner, N. C.

The unit is a residential treatment facility for children below the age of twelve years who have severe emotional illness. Due to the failure of the recent bond issue, it is one of the five organizations receiving benefit from the Campus Chest charity drive.

"The children we have at the unit are usually very intelligent, but they have a superhuman sense of the feelings of others towards them," explains Dr. Rippy. "We try to show the children that people do care about them, and it is my opinion that 60 to 75 per cent of the children, if they are meticulosly cared for, can lead a normal life," states the doctor.

The treatmen of children at the Psychiatric Unit lasts for several years and is described by Dr. Rippy as being "similar to the process of raising an infant." A large staff of house-mothers is available around the clock to provide the basic need of emotional feeding.

Before any child is admitted to the unit he undergoes a screening evaluation to determine if the psychiatric program will benefit him. No children are committed legally to the unit, the child and his family must desire treatment.

A typical day for a child receiving treatment would include getting up at 7:30 a.m., breakfast at 8, and then ½-1 hour in school. After school free time is set aside to allow the children to do whatever they desire. Later, a structural recreation time is devoted to finger painting or other such planned activities. In all, the children are fed six times a day and are carefully observed by the house-mothers and the staff members of the psychiatric unit. The ultimate goal of therapy, when it can be accomplished, is to return the child to his family at the conclusion of his inpatient treatment.

Dr. Sommer, Art Teacher, Dies Sunday

Dr. Clemens D. Sommer, 69, Carolina art professor and art historian, died en route to the hospital Sunday afternoon following an automobile collision in Chatham County south of Chapel Hill.

Mrs. Sommer suffered arm and leg fractures and chest injuries but was in fair condition at Memorial Hospital yesterday afternoon.

The driver of the other car was Ned Thomas Lassiter of Apex, according to Highway Patrolman John Raynor. Robert Powell, Apex, was riding in Lassiter's car. The collision occurred on a curve and was apparently head-on.

Dr. Sommer, a member of the UNC faculty for 23 years, was widely known as an art historian. He was the author of several books and a member of the North Carolina Art Commission.

He previously taught art history at Freiburg and Greifawald Universities. Arthur DeBerry, Mutual. years he was curator of Augustiner Museum at Freiburg, where he took his Ph.D. in 1919, and was assistant librarian of the Bibliotheca Hertziana in Rome.

He is survived by his wife and three sons. Funeral arrangements were still incomplete yesterday afternoon.

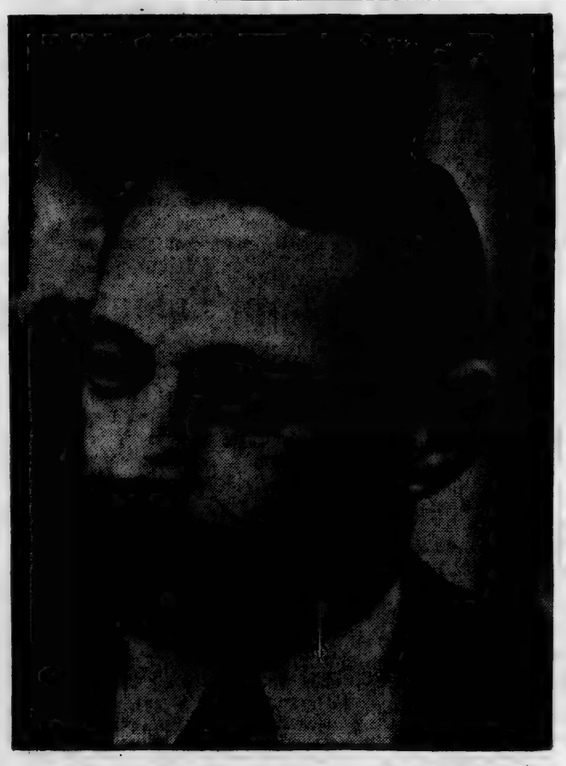
English Dept. Publishes Collection

"The Young Writer at Chapel Hill," a 50-page book containing short stories, poems and comments by students from the creative writing classes in the University of North Carolina English Department will be published here April 15.

The publication will differ from most of its kind, according to Editor Jessie Rehder of the Department of English at UNC in that it has not been edited with the intention of presenting a perfect work. Rather, it is meant to show what students in the writing classes are doing at Chapel Hill in the atmosphere of the University.

Short stories used in the volume, Miss Rehder said, are definitely works in progress. The stories are in several different modes or forms, including stream of consciousness, the realistic, and what has become known as the usual Southern fare, stories with "a hint of magnolia."

At least six authors, all undergraduates and two of whom are from the Honors Writing Class, are included in the volume. One writer has published previously in "the Carolina Quarterly."



SEAFARER SPEAKS HERE — Captain Irving Johnson, above, will lecture and show a special color film tonight at 8 in Memorial Hall. Johnson, who is being presented as a part of the GM Travel-Adventure series, will tell of his trips to the Trade Winds islands. Two persons can be admitted with one season ticket to tonight's performance. All others will be admitted for $1 each.

Health Meet Closes Today

President William B. Friday will greet the annual spring conference of the alumni of the Health Education Dept. of the School of Public Health this morning as the conference begins its second and final day.

The gathering of about 75 alumni is an extension function of the Health Education Dept. and which "gives graduates and others a chance to explore fields of their interest in some depth," according to Dr. H. B. Walker, publicity director for the event.

Today's proceedings will feature a lecture by Henry J. L. Rechen of the Public Health Service who will speak on Developments in Radiological Health this morning. This afternoon the conference will hear Dr. Edward C. Merrill, Dean of the College of Education of the University of Tennessee.

The topic of this year's conference is Human Relationships and seminars have been held during the two-day meeting which dealt with problems in both classrooms and case work settings.

At State Student Legislature

Hasty Decision

In a vote aided by the lateness of the hour and a general restlessness among the delegates, the State Student Legislature of North Carolina passed a RIGHT TO WORK bill last Friday.

The bill, submitted by Davidson College, addressed itself to the task of eliminating requirements for labor union affiliation in the entire United States, and stipulated that "Any employer or labor organization who shall violate this act shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of not more than $5,000."

A check of the various delegations the next morning indicated that most of those who voted in favor of the bill did not fully understand its content, and because of a lack of effective rebuttal were not aware of the faults of the Davidson proposal.

The right to work bill has produced good results in most of the sixteen states which have adopted them. These states (including North Carolina) are not great industrial areas, and have been relatively uncomplicated by the labor-management struggle. But to attempt to enforce the right to work law in a state with a massive unskilled labor force is to rent apart the fabric of the labor-management relationship.

America has been spared most of the excesses that capitalism caused in Europe because of the growth of labor unions with the growth of management. The history of labor and management has been further clouded by the fact that the public tends to absolve white collar criminals of the General Electric variety who, while cheating the public of millions of dollars, could still say without conscience or fear of rebuttal "Progress Is Our Most Important Product".

In a highly industrialized area, the right to work law would leave the working man with no job security except the good faith of his employer. It is not expected that such a characteristic could be universally developed and maintained among the managerial class.

Textile Barriers

The nineteen-nation agreement to juggle textile import figures reached last week will be met fondly by cotton textile interests in this country.

The result of the agreement is that low cost cotton-textile industries of such countries an India and Japan will be able to find markets for their increasing output of cotton-textile exports by finding increased markets in Western Europe. The U. S., whose textile interests have been fearful of the Japanese textiles will be protected by stiffer barriers. The gist of the charges under the agreement is that Western Europen Countries will buy more textiles; the U. S. will less; and textile interests — many in the South — will be able to operate under a protective blanket.

This agreement works well for most of the world, and particularly well for American textile interests. The American textile consumer, naturaly, comes out in a considerably less advantageous position. The availability of low-cost cotton-textile imports — mostly Japanese — will be greatly limited.

This situation is tolerable only because of the rather serious condition in which the textile industry in this country finds itself. But it is questionable just how much the industry itself deserves protection. While much of the price disparity between U. S. goods and imports is a result of the extreme difference between U. S. and Japanese or Indian wage scales, we are still not assured that the industry itself has done its best to compete through improved production methods.

Trade barriers are undesirable at best. If not absolutely necessary, they are intolerable.

Hospitality

State Student Legislature delegates were understandably incensed last week when a hotel security officer refused to allow a Negro delegate to the convention to enter the elevator and move freely in the Hotel Sir Walter in Raleigh.

The Negro student was stopped by the hotel official when he attempted to enter the elevator and was not permitted to go upstairs.

As a result of the incident, the SSL unanimously adopted a motion of censure. Duke University law student Leonard Logan, Jr., who spoke in favor of the motion, said that in addition to the elevator incident, the hotel official insisted upon accompanying the student when he attempted to get his luggage alone, and escorted him to the door when he left.

* * *

We're a little surprised that the SSL censured the Sir Walter. After all, the hotel prides itself in its Southern hospitality. And that's what the Negro student got. Good old, honest-to-goodness Southern hospitality, delightfully scented with the smell of magnolias and honeysuckle.

And maybe a slight stench of bigotry.

"On Second Thought, I Didn't Want It Anyhow"

Fad Drinks In Vogue With College Students

The survey, conducted by the research department of Hoffman Beverage Company on the campuses of some 50 colleges in Connecticut, New Jersey, eastern New York and eastern Pennsylvania, discloses a current undergraduate vogue for drinks with a milk base topped by exotic soft drink flavors.

The more conservative undergraduates and co-eds tend to favor simple mixtures such as one-third milk and two-thirds chocolate cream soda, a drink that originated at the Connecticut College for Women in New London, Conn. and is sweeping the college circuit.

Almost equally favored, particularly by co-eds, are black cherry and milk, and sarsparilla and milk.

Milk salesman President Kennedy would applaud the generous use of milk with soft drinks but physical fitness advocate Attorney General Robert Kennedy would not be so happy about the light or heavy cream preferred by a significant number of students. However, the growing popularity of the low calorie version of the soft drink throughout the college world would afford him some comfort.

A collegiate fad discovered by the Hoffman researchers is the concoction of far-out drinks. Some are milk-based with three, four or more flavors added in varying proportions at the whim of the mixer. Others are on the order of the combination liqueur, the pousse-cafe, with soft drink flavors such as grape, pineapple, orange and root beer substituted for the liqueurs.

The far-out drink fad is believed to have started in the ivy leagues but spread so rapidly around the general college circuit that its origin is in doubt.

Should the fad last, the Hoffman people will consider bottling a line of these exotic mixtures under the label of "Campus Cocktails."

Present day eastern college students are moderate consumers of alcohol, according to the survey, falling far short of the national average consumption of around 7.8 gallons per year per drinker.

Why Are You For Peace?

While the fight for a conscious student committment on public issues rages within the Student Party as a result of the up-coming student elections and among the candidates themselves depending on how much they WANT to be elected, the average student, perhaps rightly, views all this turmoil and deal-making as something to be avoided. To him, perhaps, these are private matters which go much deeper than simply being for or against any particular issue.

In a sense, he may realize it's a revolution — a private revolution - that occurs within him when he outwardly and consciously stands for or against any issue. And maybe he hesitate to take-his-stand precisely because of the implications of his private revolution and maybe because he's not so certain about just what all the haggling and hoop la means to him, or at least, is supposed to mean to him. Anyway, that's what every one tells him — it's supposed to mean something to him.

But sometimes it just doesn't. Why? Well probably because no one has really presented him with the issues. The old story about the "silent generation" (that's TIME'S cliche for us) just doesn't hold up when you look at Fraternity Row on Saturday night, or when you listen after Odetta finished her gig, or when you walked out of Kenan Stadium after President Kennedy stopped speaking. If there was one epithet that wouldn't hold up it was silent. So maybe, here's a splendid chance to at least question TIME magazine and I, frankly, will take the opportunity every time. But I'm digressing.

Insipid Candidate?

Here's everyone all stirred up (if you don't believe me, drop into BYRON'S all-nightery after twelve and see) about the forthcoming elections — politicking away — and beneath all the exterior noise, there's that familiar question again: Why aren't the students interested enough in public affairs to realize that they must have active, committed and responsible people representing them in office? (And of course it goes without saying that this is applicable to all the candidates. After all, which one of them would campaign as a passive, insipid and irresponsible candidate? But it might be good for laughs and educational too, if someone did. And, I venture to say, there would be a good deal of truth exposed. Can't you just see the TAR HEEL headlines alerting the most intelligent — because they have Black and White choices before them — voters in the history (and I like that word history) of U.N.C. Active vs. Passive, Committed vs. Insipid, and Responsible vs. Irresponsible: VOTERS GO TO THE POLLS TODAY TO DECIDE. But I'm digressing again, although not quite so far a field this time.

What I really wanted to write about was all the noise over PEACE. It's coming at you all the time and one has to do some pretty fancy softshoeing to sidestep hearing about it. Yet, it seems that the result the noise has produced is still pretty much unsatisfactory. We're not at war, I don't guess, although occasionally I feel as though we were, what with the huge budget expenditures on armaments and ex-President Eisenhower's comments on the "military-industrial complex" and President Kennedy's announcement that we'll probably (what does that word MEAN) resume atmospheric tests even though they'll be the direct cause of forty thousand serious mental and physical birth defects and twenty-three million minor physical birth defects. No, the figures aren't his but they translate correctly from President Kennedy's "less than one per-cent fallout" comment. They belong to you and me but they came from Linus Pauling, the Nobel Prize scientist, when he spoke informally here in Chapel Hill a week ago.

'From the Horse's Mouth'

And that's another thing. I didn't get to see or hear him and it sort of upset me. After all, I am one of those committed guys — who isn't for PEACE? — and although the statistics are correct and I believe them, I would have liked to have been sitting there when he spoke. Sort of makes you feel good to SEE a man who will stand up when everything — including his own freedom — is at stake. And it's good, I think, to take advantage of "getting it from the horse's mouth" rather than second hand. I already knew the opposing view on the grounds that President Kennedy didn't define what "less than one per-cent" meant. So there is quite a wide breach between the two. And that's really strange isn't it? Here's that black and white again. But which way does one go? Or better yet, where do we vote?

It's sort of been a round about approach but all this is to invite you to find out. Who knows which of us are included in the forty thousand or the twenty-three million. That is, of course, if the statistic is correct. So there's the appeal to your self-interest. And as we learn every day inside the hallowed halls, self-interest is the primary motivation of man. Take heed then, man. And there's a relatively easy way to begin a committment to becoming informed and that's through taking advantage of an invitation to attend the meetings of the Chapel Hill Peace Study Committee at the Presbyterian Church. The group is sponsored by Charlotte Adams, Rev. Vance Barron, Professor (Physics) and Mrs. Wayne Bowers, Glen Erickson, Dan Okun, Rev. Robert Seymour, Rev. Claude Shotts of the "Y", and REFLECTIONS Magazine.

Its a positive approach to a situation that demands clarity. How can one expect people to become "cimmitted", "active", and "responsible" if they just don't have information to evaluate? Well, this Committee will try to erase that problem by providing the required ground on which a person CAN become "committed", "active", and "responsible". And like all the candidates, this does describe us so why not support what we already know by attending the committee's meetings.

U. S. A-Testing Is Up To Russia

By GEORGE J. MARDER
United Press International

President Kennedy has, in effect, put Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's finger on the button which would set off new American nuclear weapons tests in the atmosphere.

He has given Khrushchev the power to call off the tests, planned to start late next month, by signing a cheat-proof test ban treaty.

There have been serious reservations within the government over giving Khrushchev such power. They spring from:

— The uncertain science of nuclear test inspection, or policing.

— The even greater difficulty of spotting preparations to test. Russia made secret preparations for its own tests last fall while going through the movements of negotiating a test ban treaty at Geneva.

Decade of Deception

The past history of the Soviets on nuclear arms negotiations isn't conducive of confidence. Its pussyfooting stretches over more than a decade, going back to the days after World War II when the United States had a monoply on nuclear power.

The U. S. offered through the United Nations to give up the monopoly, step by step, if the U. N. would see to it that no other nation acquired nuclear weapons.

Moscow gave the appearance of negotiating while going all out to become an atomic power on its own, aided considerably by secrets stolen from the United States.

It later became obvious that, all the while, Russia was either secretly or openly building up her nuclear might. The only possible exception was the 34-month test ban moratorium — supposedly a gentlemen's agreement — which Khrushchev broke last fall.

Doubts Moratorium's Value

There are serious doubts even about the effectiveness of that moratorium. Among those who suspect the Soviets conducted tests during the moratorium was Dr. Edward Teller, one of America's great nuclear scientists and father of the hydrogen bomb. But no one outside the Soviet Union knows for sure what the Russians were doing under cover of the gentlemen's agreement.

It is now certain, however, that at least during the last few months of the moratorium Khrushchev was clandestinely preparing for Moscow's massive atmospheric tests last fall.

It is possible that in the other two years the Russians were either conducting secret tests underground or were fully occupied analyzing the results of previous tests and building new and less complex devices to explode.

President Kennedy, when he gravely advised the nation that U.S. atmospheric tests must be resumed, said the Russians had scored weapons advances which forced the United States to take steps to stay out in the nuclear arms race.

Wellman Rebuffs Mrs. Otelia Connor

I see that Otelia Connor, that great and fearless lady crusader, has once again taken pen in hand to crusade — this time against morning songbirds. One is reminded of a quote from HAMLET III, scene I:

. . . . Soft you now!
The fair Otelia. — Nymph, in thy orisons
Be all my sins remembered.

Better yet, this slightly warped excerpt from Act IV scene V:

O rose of May!
Dear maid, kind sister, sweet Otelia!
O heavens! Is't possible a young maid's wits
Should be as mortal as an old man's life?

Too much of water hast thou, poor Otelia;
And therefore I forbid my tears.
Thus I also mine.

Poetical Potshots

Dim View

Poets are going through a phase
That puts me in a sorry maze.
No labyrinth is more confusing
Than words some modern poets are using.
I only wish I had abiilty
To comprehend them with agility.
For there's no earthly sense in reading
And finding everything misleading.
It would be a worthy charity
To start a vogue for crystal clarity,
Candidly, I have no leaning
For blindly guessing at the meaning,
And I've no doubt some of the stuff
Is just a bluff!

No Jaunt?

My car will not Go any place—
Not while I've got
A parking space.
I contemplate
No further spin
Until the date
I trade it in.

Reflections

The French are not attending the curent test ban talks in Geneva. Perhaps they like the warm weather in Paris a lot better than the snows of Switzerland. The plastiques haven't gotten into the hills yet.

POGO PEANUTS

– Film Critic John Grierson To Address Symposium –

never spoke of the interruption with any regret. The knowledge gained served him well in his first film, "Drifters," now considered a landmark in motion picture production.

At the end of the war he returned to Glasgow University and graduated in philosophy. It is said he sat for and won so many bursaries that he was practically making a profit by going to the University.

After lecturing at Durham University for a year, in 1924 Grierson was awarded a Rockefeller Foundation research felowship in social science. The next three years were spent in the United States studying the press, the cinema, and other instruments affecting public opinion and action. He worked for short periods on several American papers, including the NEW YORK SUN. It was in a Sun film review that he first used the term 'documentary' to describe Robert Flaherty's "Moana." Grierson later defined 'documentary' as "the creative treatment of actuality.

Grierson's study of cinema took him to Hollywood where he first met Chaplin, Erich von Stroheim and other cinema greats of the period, but it is to Walter Lippmann that he gives credit for directing him to the film media rather than press or radio to achieve the social purposes Grierson had in mind. It was as a medium for reaching public opinion that aroused Grierson's interest in film. By the time he returned to London early in 1927 he was deeply absorbed in the possibilities of film as a medium of education and persuasion.

His enthusiasm and the force of his arguments were quickly recognized by Sir Stephen Tallents at the new Empire Marketing Board. A cautious Treasury was won over, and a film about the North Sea herring fisheries and fishermen, the now famous "Drifters", was approved as a trial effort. What were then new and striking images, showing workaday Britain, were brought to theatre screens with all the impact of startling discovery. "Drifters" was a critical and box-office success, confirming Grierson's belief that in the film he had found the most useful medium for sociology and propaganda.

Following "Drifters, with strong support from the British government, Grierson sought and trained creative talent to make the new documentaries, names famous in motion picture production today as then — Paul Rotha, Basil Wright, Arthur Elton, Henry Watt, Humphrey Jennings, Raymond Spottiswood, Cavalcanti, Len Lye, Norman McLaren, Stuart Legg and Edgar Anstey. Others like Robert Flaherty, H. G. Wells, scientist Julian Huxley, poet W. H. Auden and composers Darius Milhaud, Benjamin Britten and Walter Leigh gave their talents at various periods to what was then mushrooming as the British documentary film movement.

Grierson wrote voluminously for major newspapers and magazines on the purposes of the documentary group and its films and lectured anywhere he was invited. The movement soon spread to young film makers of many countries, including Pare Lorentz, Williard Van Dyke and others in America.

A book on documentary published by the Museum of Modern Art points out the movement's particular significance because of its continuity, its consistent purpose of public information and public service, and its volume.

Grierson and a small number of his government group resigned in 1937 to set up Film Center, a central advisory group to provide consultative service and act as a policy forming centre for a movement now rapidly expanding in many directions.

In 1938, Grierson was invited to visit Australia, New Zealand and Canada to advise on government film production. When UNRRA was formed in 1944, he also was asked by Governor Herbert Lehman, UNRRA's first director-general, to design UNRRA's film program.

In October, 1939, Grierson was appointed Film Commissioner of Canada, with offices in Ottawa. There he initiated and supervised two major war-time film series for theatrical and non-theatrical markets. He also developed a non-theatrical audience of nearly 10,000,000 by establishing film depositories across the country, arranging industrial circuits and by sending travelling units into the far-flung rural areas of Canada.

At the close of the war Grierson, with Stuart Legg and Robert Flaherty among others, set up International Film Associates in Washington as a research organization patterned after Film Center in London. Its producing counterpart, The World Today, was chartered in New York. Two films were finished — "Searchlight on the Nations", a 50-minute film for the United Nations, and "Round Trip" for the Twentieth Century Fund, when Grierson returned to London for a short business stay. He was refused a re-entry to the U. S. and, without their leader, the group decided to discontinue operations and return to British or Canadian productions. Grierson then accepted Unesco's offer to be its first director of Mass Communications.

Almost all of the leading British 'realist' directors were members, at one time or another, of Grierson's film units. They have a passionate loyalty to the man who trained them and led them during documentary's difficult years. More significant for the light it throws on Grierson's leadership, they have retained the sense of documentary's social purpose which he sought to instil.

While on his present trip to the U. S. and Chapel Hill, Grierson has been sent invitations to speak before the Screen Directors Guild in New York, the New York Film Council, Columbia University, and the national convention of the American Film Assembly. Because of television commitments in Scotland, he will be unable to make any but the Museum of Modern Art and the Washington Film Council where he speaks April 12 and 11, respectively.

Tennis Outlook Bright For UNC

By LOUIS LEGUM

It has been almost fifteen years since the great Carolina tennis teams of the Vic Seixas era when UNC was a national power. A significant figure in that Tar Heel reign of glory was the present coach, Donald Skakle. This season Skakle in a different role may help engineer his netters again to national ranking and status.

Last year the tennis team streaked to twelve consecutive victories and the ACC championship with a brilliant senior, Bruce Sylvia, and a handful of talented sophomores led by Keith Stoneman. These now experienced veterans have all returned with the exception of Sylvia, yet paradoxically, many of them may not see regular duty this season.

The primary reason is a group of four more sophomores, George Sokol, Ted Hoehn, Bitsy Harrison, and Charlie Shaffer, who along with Stoneman could succeed in bringing big-time tennis back to Carolina. According to Coach Skakle "the potential of his 'Big Five' is unlimited," a statement applicable to the entire edition of the 1962 team.

As a first-year man, Stoneman played behind ACC singles champion Sylvia in the number two position. After dropping a match against Dartmouth on the first day of competition, the 6-3 captain of the '62 squad won nineteen matches in a row, and in the ACC singles tournament narrowly missed defeating teammate Sylvia in the semi-finals. Sylvia and he combined to take the ACC doubles crown.

Both Sokol and Hoehn paced the freshman team of last year to a 10-1 record. Sokol, a tiny 5-7, has one of the most consistent forehand strokes in the country. He was listed 27th nationally in the juniors, and this past summer carried Davis Cupper Whitney Reed to an all-out effort in the Newport invitational. Hoehn, the son of the Dartmouth tennis coach, was ranked just behind Sokol both in the juniors and on the freshman squad. He has probably the most versatile repetoire of shots of all the Carolina netters.

Neither Harrison nor Shaffer played for the freshman. Harrison a 6-5 giant on the court, transferred from Tulane and had to sit out the season. Despite this inactivity, he was able to smash Crawford Henry, the 11th-ranked men's singles player in the country, on the summer circuit at South Orange N. J. Jack-of-all-trades Shaffer sustained an injury in a yearling football game, and was forced out of remaining freshman participation. However, his credentials, besides his all-around athletic ability, include his holding of the Eastern Interscholastic singles championship, one of the most coveted junior titles in the nation. In contrast to Stoneman, Sokol, and Hoehn, both Shaffer and Harrison employ an old-fashioned power game on the court, taking advantage of their cannonball serves.

Backing up the "Big Five" are five lettermen who Skakle hopes will provide the needed depth for his youthful team. From Dave Morgan, Kirby Jones, Garland Carlton, Stan Cocke, and George Zimmerman, the coach will probably pick his sixth starter, as well as some solid doubles teams. Morgan and Jones usually held down the three and four slots on last year's team. Carlton, the only senior, came on strong in the past season to salvage several clutch victories. Zimmerman and Cocke proved to be valuable both in singles and doubles and should prove so again.

The rest of this year's team will come from more sophomores with strong potential, Sam Applegate, Pete Myers, J. K. MacDonald, Rich Henderson, and Elmer Oettinger, along with juniors John Pouzzner and Mark Schnitzer.

The 1962 schedule is one of the toughest in several years. Among 23 opponents are most of the powers on the east coast, including Harvard, Dartmouth, Williams, Georgia, and Rollins, Toledo and Michigan State will be representatives from the midwest.

On May 4, Carolina's status in big-time tennis may be determined. Miami's heralded team with a string of consecutive conquests reaching into triple figures will invade Chapel Hill for the final match of the regular season. Skakle, usually cautious in his predictions, believes that his netters can harness the Hurricanes, and thus achieve a major upset in the annals of intercollegiate tennis history. But before Miami, Skakle admonishes, "there are 22 other hurdles."

Six Conference Marks Bite The Dust At Indoor Games

Six Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Games records were broken in the conference division Saturday as Maryland once more captured the team championship — their seventh straight.

Carolina's Tar Heels finished second with 44 2/5 points, Maryland totaled 61. Clemson finished a surprising third with 28 1/2. Duke 22 1/5, South Carolina 17 1/5, Virginia 13 1/2, State 4, and Wake Forest 3 1/5 rounded out the team scoring.

Furman won the non-conference division, defending the title it had won in 1961, while Maryland's freshman ruled supreme in the first-year group.

Duke's Dick Gesswein broke the first record of the day when he heaved the shot put 54 feet 5¼ inches.

The only field event which escaped the wrath of the record-breakers was the broad jump. Maryland's John Belitza broke his own pole vault record, set in 1961, by vaulting 15 feet.

But it was Tommy Clark, UNC's high jumping sophomore, who gave the Tar Heel rooters something to cheer about in the field events. With Jim Bland and Dick Estes back to defend their 1961 title Clark ran away with the event and set a new record with his 6 feet 7¾ inches leap.

Carolina's two mile relay team of Charlie Little, Mike Folk, Bob Bennett, and Scott Brent chopped 5.2 seconds off the old record as they toured the wooden boards in 8:00.2 for UNC's second Indoor Games record.

Duke's iron-man, Jerry Nourse, set a new record in the two mile run, after winning the mile shortly before to become the meet's individual star. His record-breaking two mile time was 9:18, breaking the old mark of 9:19.3.

NEW YORK (UPI)—Ohio State was elected the nation's No. 1 college basketball team by a unanimous vote of the United Press International board of coaches for the second straight season Friday and shortly can prove its claim as one of the best of all time.

For the second year in a row, every one of the 35 leading coaches who comprise the UPI rating board cast his vote for Ohio State in the final ballot of the regular season. Prior to last season, no team ever had been no honored by a unanimous vote.

Coach Fred Taylor's Buckeyes now face an opportunity to succeed where they failed last season. Last year they were beaten in the finals of the NCAA tournament by Cincinnati, 70-65. Ohio State starts play in this year's NCAA tournament next Friday night.

Ohio State also has the unique record of having topped the UPI ratings for every week of two consecutive seasons.

Cincinnati, which ranked second to OSU throughout every week of this season, wound up the national runnerup.

Coaches Predict Finish

The coaches had forecast before the start of this season that Ohio State and Cincinnati would finish 1-2 in that order.

Kentucky, one of the surprise teams of the year, was No. 3 in the final ratings, followed by Mississippi State. These two teams finished in a tie for the Southeastern Conference championship.

Kansas State was ranked fifth, followed in order by Bradley, Wake Forest, Colorado, Bowling Green and Utah.

Oregon State headed the second 10 group, with St. John's 12th and Duke and Loyola of Chicago tied for 13th. After them in order came Arizona State University, West Virginia, UCLA, Duquesne, Utah State and Villanova.

Bennett Says Odd Combinations Are Part Of Planning

White Bricks Cannot Be Used On UNC Buildings Any More

By JOE HODGES

J. S. Bennett, University Director of Operations, yesterday offered some explanation for the clash of brick colors in some buildings on campus now under construction.

The annex of Hill Hall, Music Building, in red brick as contrasted to the yellow brick of the present building, has caused quite a bit of consternation from some campus factions.

In a recent article in the DTH, the following opinion was expressed concerning the minds of the designers:

The different type of brick is not the result of the absences of planning, but is part of an overall positive plan to beautify the campus. "We've had some atrocious architecture around here in the last 50 years, and the planning committee is now taking action to correct it and see that future structures are properly planned and built," Mr. Bennett said.

He explained that many of the light colored brick buildings on campus were built with little architectural refinement and do not meet the required construction standards which have since been established by the state.

North Carolina state laws require that all brick used in state institutions be obtained in this state. Since there is no light colored clay in the state, university buildings must now be constructed of red brick.

Light-colored brick buildings, in most cases, are not fireproof and all present campus construction according to state rules must be fireproof. The non-fireproof buildings will eventually be replaced with red brick fireproof buildings in the colonial architectural style, such as is evidenced in the building between South Building and the Library and in most of the existing dorms.

Old East, Old West, and South have already been rebuilt within their original walls and now meet state specifications. Because of their historic significance, these buildings will be preserved in this form. The buildings that were built in the 1920's however have no historical significance, nor architectural beauty that would justify preserving any part of them. Alumni Building, for instance, is not fireproof and contains five different major architectural styles. Carr, built according to the wishes of its donor, is likewise a hodgepodge of architectural efforts.

Because of fund limitations, however, many of these buildings will probably remain in use for many years. Some, like Caldwell, are considered firetraps and have been equipped with large independent fire escapes in order to allow their continued use in relative safety.

Hill Hall is not the first building to have an annex in a different color brick. Hopefully, it will someday be converted to all red brick with colonial styling similar to Peabody Hall which has been almost surrounded by this new styling and has only one rear corner of yellow brick exposed. Red brick fronts are also proposed for Swain and Davie.

When asked about future plans for university building, Mr. Bennett explained the grouping of buildings of different fields of study to make them more convienent to students who will be mainly concerned with that one subject area. Similar to the medical complex, a science complex will center around Wilson with the ne wBotany building at its side and the new Geology-Geography building behind it. The arts, including music and drama will most probably be centered in the area between Hill Hali and Ackland, where a theater may be built.

A colisieum type of building, complete with classrooms and offices in the basement, is being considered for the area now occupied by the Ram Varsity parking lot. "Memorial Hall and Woollen Gym have always been handicapped as far as size is concerned," Bennett said. This new building, which would probably have to be subsidized by the Federal government, would house both Air Force and Navy ROTC units.

This same planning committee which is also concerned with the parking problem (over 30 per cent of students have cars) has the additional job of landscape planning. "We always try to keep enough trees in our planning to keep the campus naturally beautiful," Mr. Bennett added.

It looks as if student sneed not be dismayed by temporary architectural incongruities; they're all part of a far-reaching, well thought-out plan.

Ruffin Residents Protest Change To Freshman Dorm

By RICHARD BURNS

"How would you feel if you woke up one morning and read in the paper that you have been evicted from your neighborhood?

This is the question of the residents of Ruffin Dorm, who woke up last Thursday morning and read in the Daily Tar Heel that the administration planned to make Ruffin one of the all freshman dorms.

Their evicton came as a shock, but spirit runs high at Ruffin and the "Ruffinites" weren't about to take it lying down.

"The students spontaneously called a meeting," said Roger Asher, chairman of the "Save Ruffin Committee," and "it wasn't something a few of us started," he added.

The first thing the group did was to see Bill Long, Assistant Dean of Student Affairs ,Thursday afternoon. That night the committee was officially started with "a great number of students volunteering their help."

The committee is following the advice of Long who said they should submit a proposition of their grievances along with an alternative plan.

Petition Of Displeasure

The group is also circulating a petition stating that the residents are displeased with the administration's handling of their case and that they do not wish to be evicted.

One of their grievances was the abruptness of the announcement. Said Barry Craig, a member of the committee, "a lot of friendships have been formed here. We are a homegeneous group . . . The housing office can give no guarantee of unity when we are moved."

Another Committee member, Gerry Good, pointed out that Ruffin had won the dorm participation trophy last year and was "well on the way to winning it again this year."

Strong's Reasons Rebuffed

The committee was in general agreement as to their disapproval of the arguments which Assistant in Student Affairs George Strong presented to them regarding the selection of Ruffin as a freshman dorm.

Another point which the Committee brought up was the fact that they as freshman wouldn't have wanted to be segregated from the upper classmen. They also said that this year's freshmen in Ruffin were "100% in agreement that they were glad we (upper classmen) were here."

In summing up the Committee's views on the subject, Barry Craig said "we feel that the choice of our dorm as an all freshman dorm without our notification is inconsistant with the University's principles of student participation in student affairs."

SP Platform Calls For Dorm Activity, Academic Emphasis

Spring Talks Planned By Fraternities

Faculty and fraternity members will meet here Saturday to discuss such topics as deferred rush, the 80 per cent rule, and the role of the Inter-Fraternity Council.

This conference is a follow-up on the Mid-Pines Student-Faculty Fraternity Conference held at Southern Pines last May, and the topics will be evaluated in the light of last year's findings.

The conference, financed and sponsored by national Sigma Nu fraternity and its local chapter, will bring about 25 UNC faculty members and 65 UNC fraternity members face to face to consider many of the problems of fraternity life.

Starting at 1 p.m. in Peabody Hall, the conference will be divided into six groups which will go to six different fraternity houses to hold their discussions. At 6 p.m. all members will hear the National Executive Secretary of Sigma Nu, Mr. Richard Fletcher as he addresses the banquet in the Carolina Inn Ballroom.

The office of Student Affairs will compile the results of the conference. As an outline for the meeting they have presented the three general topics of The Fraternity in Scholarship, The Fraternity in Discipline, and The Fraternity in Finances. Dean Long said that the conference should offer more "face to face consultation between fraternity and faculty members than there has been in a long time."

U.S. Cautious Toward N-Ban, Kennedy Says

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy told Democratic congressional leaders Tuesday that the United States will take a "realistic" approach to a nuclear test ban and general disarmament at the Geneva conference opening Wednesday.

The leaders quoted the President as saying that this country would try to "secure agreement on a complete disarmament program under effective international control and, to this end, to seek the widest area of agreement at the earliest possible date."

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said if any agreements are reached, the United States is ready to put such disarmament measures into effect immediately.

"We believe this to be a realistic approach to the need for a beginning to the end of the nuclear arms race and we hope it is an approach that will be shared by all the nations at the conference," Mansfield said in a statement issued after the weekly legislative meeting at the White House.

The statement appeared to be a new U. S. call for Russia to forego any effort to turn the 17-nation disarmament conference into a propaganda circus. The President and other U. S. officials have issued similar demands in recent days.

The latest American statement came as Western officials in Geneva reported that Russia appeared ready to attempt a propaganda coup. Their skepticism was reinforced by Soviet publication of nuclear proposals without advance notice to the United States or Britain.

In his statement, Mansfield said the President "made clear the determination of our negotiators to seek realistic avenues of agreement that will permit the world to move forward from this time of nuclear peril to a more secure and promising future.' "

DEAN CARMICHAEL

Police Search Saigon Home Of UNC Dean

The apartments of two UNC professors teaching in South Viet Nam were searched Saturday morning by a squad of at least 30 Vietnamese police, government agents and soldiers.

The apartment of a third American professor, Dr. Stanley Millot of Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., was also searched.

The UNC professors, Dr. Katherine Carmichael, Dean of Women at Carolina and Dr. Frank Durham are in Viet Nam to teach for one year under the Smith-Mundt Act.

Dr. Durham, who has taught English literature at Saigon University since August, said he "looked out the window and saw the driveways around the house swarming with men, most of them in uniform. They apparently were searching houses all up and down the block."

He said that he and his wife "saw them checking around Miss Carmichael's apartment, who lives alone, and called out to her to make sure she was all right. She said she was."

Polite Police

Dr. Durham said that the police "were polite, but they searched very thoroughly . . . They said at first they were looking for a thief, then one said they were looking for a prisoner."

Four policemen were posted outside the apartment building following the raid. Said Durham:

"I believe we are under very close surveillance. We haven't protested fomally or anything," he added, "as far as I know, we're not suspected of anything."

An investigation of the incident was begun by the U. S. embassy. There was no official comment however.

The three pofessors all live in the same apartment building. Two Vietnamese men, an adult and a 17-year-old, live with Dr. Millet and were arrested by the police.

The incident is probably related to the Feb. 27 bombing of the presidential palace by two rebel fighter planes. The apartments searched are only a few blocks from the palace and the planes flew directly ove them during the attack.

None of the Americans were arrested.

Infirmary

Those in the infirmary yesterday included Betty Smith, Phyllis Bowers, Margaret Parrish, Judy Fuller, Judith Harlow, Serena Parks, Lindell Upp, Sandra Strawhum, Suzanna Johnson, Roy Pons, Richard Hayes, Richard Brand.

Travis Glover, Lucius Moore, John Thuss, Paul Casey, James Estridge, John Jones, Norman Owens, Brenda Pryor, Frank Weaver, James Ness, Robert Duggan, James Gober, Robert Sandarg, and James Cooke.

Party Pushes Degree In Fine Arts

The Student Party aimed at greater dormitory participation in campus government and more activities for dorm students in their 20-plank platform adopted at a party meeting Monday night.

Communication between the different areas of the campus also was stressed as the party proposed the expansion of the communications committee and the improvement of dormitory newspapers.

Dorm Libraries

The establishment of libraries of basic texts in the dorms and of a central quiz file under the control of the communications committee, and the revision of the academic affairs committee so that membership would be limited to students o foutstanding scholarships were also called for.

The SP pledged active support of the National Student Association and promised more publication of NSA activities and an effort to make NSA more representative of American students.

Berlin Talks Are Fruitless At Conference

GENEVA (UPI) — Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko met Tuesday in the third straight day of apparently fruitless talks on Berlin. Gromyko indicated later the Russians have stiffened their stand on the isolated city.

Rusk and Gromyko conferred in "businesslike" manner for three hours. But indications were the talks failed to reduce East-West differences on Berlin and other key issues before the opening Wednesday of the 17-nation Geneva disarmament conference.

Gromyko told newsmen after the lengthy discussion that Moscow's proposal for a broad settlement based on a German peace treaty would be preferable, by far to an isloated accord on Berlin.

Gromyko's stress on this point appeared to foreshadow a new Soviet attempt to frustrate U. S. and British desires for a limited accord on Berlin and indicated a Russion campaign for a broad settlement that would recognize the sovereignty of Communist East Germany.

"An agreed solution based on a peace treaty would be the best solution," Gromyko said.

Harry Golden To See Performance Of Play

The Playmakers have scheduled two holdover performances of "Only In America" for Monday and Tuesday nights due to the "best pre-opening ticket sales of the season."

Harry Golden, editor of the Carolina Israelite and author of the best-seller from which the script was adapted, will view the production but has not disclosed which evening he will attend.

"There's nothing quite so frightening as seeing yourself portrayed on the stage," Golden has remarked.

The action of "Only In America" is set in Golden's Charlotte home and in the State Capitol at Raleigh. Kai Jurgensen, an instructor in the Dramatic Art Dept. who will portray Golden, recently spent several days with Golden preparing for the role.

WHOSE IDEA?

The platform of both the UP and the SP this year include planks designed to increase emphasis on cultural and creative aspects of campus life. Both also include various programs aimed at solving the perennial problem of dormitory social activities—or the lack of them. The two platforms overlap also in other areas—dorm libraries, NSA participation, streamlining the bureaucratic sprawl of committees, improving communications between executives and the student body, and so forth.

Because the platforms are essentially similar in many areas, candidates on both sides have currently been lapsing into what is nothing more than petty mudslinging and charges of "idea theft," more colorful phrases, including references to ancestry.

While this might make for more interesting campaigning, the whole question seems a little pointless. What difference does it make who came up with the idea originally? If it's a good idea or a good program, who cares whether it came from the UP or the SP?

The question is, which party, or which slate of candidates has shown the ability to carry them out. Both parties would do well to get out of the name-calling game and put some more energy into figuring out exactly how some of these high-flying ideas are going to be pulled down out of the heavens and translated into results.

Summer Newspaper

The Daily Tar Heel is run by and for the students. The summer school newspaper, the UNC News, is run by students for the Office of Student Affairs.

Although the Administration has been conscientious in its control of the News, there nevertheless is a strong argument for placing the newspaper under student government.

Bills presently being considered by student legislators ask that summer school student government expenses be transferred from the Office of Student Affairs to student-control. The primarily social activities in which the summer school activities board is interested would become student responsibility. The administrative work previously done by Asst. Dean of Student William Long probably would be transferred to students, according to these bills.

. . . And by this legislation the UNC News would become the product of student government instead of the ward of South Building.

The UNC News is published weekly during the summer sessions here. It is put out by two paid staff members (an editor and associate editor) who are selected by Dean Long with the approval of the summer school activities board.

Many members of the Administration wish to se the summer school paper a University bulletin, with no features, editorials, investigative or critical stories. But the Office of Student Affairs has worked to keep it a "newspaper" rather than a "bulletin."

The editor of the News is directly responsible for his actions to Dean Long and indirectly responsible to the activities board.

Student Affairs has allowed editors considerable freedom in the selection of editorial and news subjects. Efforts by other Administration officials to subject editors to rigid censorship have been opposed by Student Affairs.

(As an example . . . one of this writer's primary goals as UNC News editor was to promote student debate in an atmosphere which was extremely complacement . . .) encourage controversy via a newspaper which had traditionally been dull and uninteresting . . . publish an alive, interesting paper. Our use of reputedly "extreme" means—integration articles, controversial quotation-filler and columns—was accepted to attain these goals.

(The UNC News, obviously, is a very different kind of newspaper than i sthe Daily Tar Heel. Method, which had to be employed to promote lively controversy in a unique situation—with a weekly, summer school, tabloid-size newspaper — would not be used in the Tar Heel, which has made a tradition of student debate.)

As long as the Office of Student Affairs pays the bills for the UNC News it has the right to get what it wants. But should the Administration control the summer school newspaper?

A student newspaper should be published by students, with the needs and wishes of students in mind. No matter how indulgent Administrative control may be, it is still Administrative control. Dean Long is an indulgent overseer of the UNC News, but he is an overseer all the same.

The editor of the UNC News should be appointed by the regular-session Publications Board, and his actions should be governed by the summer school activities board or a board sub-committee. The editor should be able to name his staff, except for the business manager, who should be named by the Publications Board.

An additional advantage of a student-run News is that it and the Daily Tar Heel could then work together more effectively. Presently the Administration-run News operates from the same office as the DTH, using the same equipment and facilities as the student-supported Tar Heel. Two student-run newspapers could work together in economic equality and eliminate some of the first-of-the-session administrative problems.

It would be better of all concerned, particularly summer session studentry, for the UNC News to be run by student government.

Campus Chest: 'We Do Care'

President Of Student Body

The validity of the Campus Chest speaks for itself through the agencies that they propose to aid. Each agency is thoroughly investigated by a competent committee and thoroughly discussed before selection.

As students, we are directly concerned with several of these agencies. Students here at UNC benefit from information and services provided by the World University Service, American Friends Service Committee, and our new Tours Scholarship program.

The solicitation program of the Campus Chest is competent and colorful. It needs student support. It would be worthwhile for each student to support the Campus Chest.

—BILL HARRISS
President of Student Body

Student Party Chairman

The Student Party is primarily concerned at this time with supplying the students with a slate o fofficers to serve the campus through student government. However, after speaking with many of the party members, I can say the Student Party is behind the Campus Chest one-hundred per cent.

Ever striving for a more responsible Student Government, the party feels this committee is one working for a worthy cause. From the past record it seems that we students have not realized the true value of contributing to the causes chosen by the committee. Regardless of whether we give more per person than Duke or not is a factor of pride, but whether the challenge is met in some way finance these projects is the issue. This method, we all agree, is best. Therefore, let us all join in to help the drive be successful, realizing it is the only such project all year.

—JIMMY WEEKS
Student Party Chairman

I. F. C., President

Within the next week you will probably be approached by someone asking you to give to the Campus Chest. This is a once-a-year campaign on this campus for those who cannot help themselves and for those who need money in order to help in their advancements of scientific endeavor.

Fraternities have an important role on this campus and this is only one way in which they can show that "we do care." The average of eighteen cents per persons that was given last year is a poor indication of caring. I believe that we do care, so please give generously to the Campus Chest.

—JIM DILLASHAW
I. F. C., President

YWCA, President

As time approaches for our Campus Chest Drive at UNC, it is likewise time for us as students to forget ourselves, think of others, and of these charities, and rise to a wholehearted, undivided student support of this project. The sects and schisms on our campus must merge. We've been seperated long enough. Let's us show the campus of the University of North Carolina to be a truly loyal and dynamic school.

We are in the limelight. Yet, our Campus Chest project has been publicized all over the country. LIFE even sent a representative last year to cover the Carnival. We must give of ourselves to make this a record year, for our Campus and for those outside our Campus. We have been accused of being an apathetic student body. Are we?

Most of all, let us not forget the true spirit of giving which should be the core of any charity drive anywhere. When we do give of ourselves to something better, we also become a part of that which is better.

— JACKIE DAY
YWCA, President

IDC Vice-President

Within the next few days, scores of your classmates and mine will be visiting the dormitories, fraternities, sororities and various off-campus residences inviting all Carolina students to contribute to the '62 Campus Chest.

Our classmates will not be begging for money; they will be giving each of us the privilege of working to alleviate many of the needs of the twentieth-century — those concerned with education and the international exchange of knowledge and the fostering of understanding plus those needs arising from heart disease and mental illness — these among countless other possibilities.

This is a privilege we students must not overlook; surely, a good response should be forthcoming from all!

Particularly in the men's dormitories will these students be working, and it is here that the most outstanding contributions may be made. Our response must be more than just "out-contributing"; it must far surpass the average of eighteen cents ($.18) given by Carolina students last year. For if we dorm residents scale our response, even partially, in terms of the "extras" of student life for which we annually spend a considerable sum, then it is most reasonable to consider contributing in terms of, for example, the $1.50 we spend annually for just dorm socials alone!

Our education is a many-sided process in which such opportunities as those presented by the Campus Chest Fund are a vital part. However, we all would do well to consider this privilege before us. Knowing of these needs, Carolina should give a good response and one in which I am sure the dormitory residents will contribute outstandingly!

—JOHN MITCHENER
IDC, Vice-President

It is not often that we, the women students at Carolina, have an opportunity to make a contribution to something other than our self-interests.

We daily become embroiled with bettering ourselves — academically and socially — and any responsibilities we assume are usually self-motivated. Our wits and energies tackle such things as the battle of the hair against the weather, a peaceful co-existence with Carolina gentlemen, or a summit conference with a faculty member.

We are not to be condemned for these things; they are a natural consequence of our university life. Nevertheless, we are not to be excused for ignoring any opportunity for assuming responsibilities beyond ourselves when an occasion arises. Campus Chest provides this opportunity for us with its solicitations drive this week.

The Campus Chest solicitations drive is unique in its conception and its purpose. No other fund raising organization is given permission to solicit funds from women students. This special permission clearly denotes that Campus Chest is conceived as a STUDENT effort. Its purpose is to evoke a STUDENT response to the needs of five worthy organizations. We, as women students, should respond with our support.

—PAM PARKER
Chairman, Women's Residence Council

YMCA President

The only fund raising drive authorized by the University of North Carolina for the solicitation of funds on our campus is the Campus Chest.

The March of Dimes, Red Cross, Community Chest, and the many other charities we will be expected to donate to after we graduate from Carolina will not seek the spare change we happen to have in our pockets when a solicitor approaches us, but meaningful donations that can be measured in terms of a percentage of our salaries. We will be called on to give and hopefully to develop a spirit of giving.

Our Campus Chest should be taken as seriously as any of these charities. The Chest is different from many other drives in that students themselves decide upon the specific charities which will receive donations. I feel the most significant feature of the Campus Chest is that it is an expression from the students of the University of North Carolina.

People talk about student apathy and complain about the attitude of students at the University. Our critics, many of whom showed their ignorance and lack of concern for such things as mental health and higher education during the recent state bond referendum, may not know as much about charitable giving as Carolina students. The Campus Chest will give us a good chance to prove this point.

—TAM LEFLER
President, YMCA

The Carolina student is asked to give money for charity, research, and a scholarship once a year. Many calls for money are made but in this one a student is asked to give toward something which is a University of North Carolina effort. He is asked to represent the University in doing something worthwhile. An average of 18c was given to help fellow students on all continents get the basic requirements of an education — housing, health facilities, and educational material; to aid heart research; and to help send a student to France.

Nobody follows a game that does not mean anything to him. The Carolina student showed that he did not care. Harvard students care. They gave six dollars each to their charity drive. Duke and State students did better this year than we have in the past. This year Duke raised $2 each and the "cow college" five times better than our last year's effort by receiving an average donation of $1.

The fact that a person can have a feeling for people across the world, or in a mental institution at Butner, is not automatic. Like other phases of life, one must be in the situation and actually understand what he is doing before it will mean anything. Giving is an educational process. I urge you to learn where the Campus Chest money is going and give it a test. Of course, everybody has given money for things before, it's expected at many times, but the act can have real meaning for each if he will really ponder over the consequences. It is a truly profound act if seen as such and it can be. It is a personal thing. Last year I did not contribute a penny to the Campus Chest and this year i plan to give several dollars. The change in outlook, however, small it may be, was an educational thing, and I consider the change well worth the cash. Most people must examine the facts before they can feel any reason for giving. I find that that Campus Chest is representing some worthwhile causes and I urge you not to reject it as you have done in the past. College students as near as Durham and Raleigh have found themselves deciding to give to college organized drives.

—BILL BOWERMAN
W.U.S. Representative

I am very happy to have this opportunity to express my interest and to urge everyone to show theirs by supporting the Campus Chest — one of the most worthwhile projects the Carolina student body undertakes.

This year the proceeds go to five worthy groups, and I feel sure that anyone who gives it any thought will agree that these groups provide us with valuable services. This, then, is our opportunity to provide THEM with the funds so necessary for their continuance.

In the coming week try to do as the Campus Chest slogan suggests — "Think seriously" and "Give generously."

"The Packaging Isn't Nearly As Confusing As The Labeling!"

Coed Rebuffed By 'Gentlemen,' Is Defended By Wuamett

So Miss T. J., you're sick to death of the Carolina Gentleman, who not only suffers from an enormous superiority complex, but who also displays an inferiority complex with his constant apologies. You've found everything that could possibly be wrong with him, ranging from his good manners to his sexual prowess. Really, Miss T. J. you have certainly come to know the Carolina Gentleman well. By personal experience, I suppose? If so, I dare say that the few isolated examples that you have come into contact with could have been the best examples of Carolina Gentlemen. With the ratio of men to women as it is at UNC I fail to see how any coed could not find a better date than your "huge gangly individual of mediocre intellect". This hardly sounds like a fair description of a normal human being, much less the average man attending an accredited university. If this is the best you can do, you must not be much of a catch yourself, kiddo.

Your editorial shows clearly that you are tactless, conceited, and far more hypocritical than you accuse the Carolina Gentleman of being. Only an idiot with these vices would attempt an assault on the opposite sex such as you have attempted. Yet, you seem to think you are extremely intelligent, being able to point out the stupidity of others. I don't see how anyone capable of losing their own shoe, while wearing it, can afford to call another person stupid. In fact, I can hardly believe that anyone with any intelligence at all would stoop to pointing out the same shortcomings that they themselves, are guilty of having.

No, Miss T. J., I can't even believe that you exist.

—LeROY CURTIS

Dear T. J.,

I well understand your disgust for the "Carolina Gentleman" for it is similar to my dissatisfaction with the Carolina Coed. In an article in a recent magazine Jonathan Yardley said that the Carolina Coed, being outnumbered seven to one, is "Queen of the Campus" and SHE KNOWS IT. Small wonder that the more eager of the swains of the campus are obsequious in lavishing their attentions upon the conceited "sophisticates" of the female minority. I place sophisticates in quotes because the average coed has neither the background, the talent, nor the assets necessary for such a role. She is snobbish for she can always find a date, or, more appropriately, she can "allow" him to find her.

The Carolina coed lives a life of imitation, appearances, and concern for the tinsel of life. She does not concern herself with the true pleasures or values of life but only cares to exist with the least inconvenience. She wants to be on the go at all times and hardly ever takes the time to examine herself, her acquaintances, or her life.

You want to know where the men are. They're waiting. Waiting for the girl who is really concerned with life. For the girl who is HER OWN SIMPLE SELF. They are biding their time.

— J.H.J.

To the Editor:

Where have all the young men gone? To Carolina?

Don't just sit there, boys, defend yourselves.

Show this carpetbagger T. J. she doesn't know what she is talking about. Show her that empty fifth of Old Grandad you drank at that last party. She can't accuse us of drinking cheap liquor. Pull those pants-legs up high and show her those Weejuns you bought at Lacock's and flip that lapel so that the Julian's label stands out sharp and clear. Don't let her slander us by saying that we are Milton's snobs.

And she has the nerve to accuse us of being conceited about our sexual prowess. Tell her about that waitress you made when you were home for the holidays.

Certainly everyone knows that apology is necessary. She can't really expect us to be proud of our shortcomings. How can we be proud of the fact that we work to stay in school and can't afford the uptown movies. Think of just nonchalantly saying, "I don't have a car," or puffing our chests and boasting, "I don't belong to a fraternity." That sort of thing just isn't done at Carolina, kiddo.

Tell her about that B you made in BA 71 if she says you aren't intellectual and tell her about the time you found your date's shoe when it was three rows away. And, above all, ask her what right she, a northerner, has to criticize only the southerners at Carolina. Everyone knows that most of the slobs here are really immigrants from the colder parts of the country (despite the 15 per cent restriction on out-of-state enrollment.)

Have all the young men gone to graveyards?

Don't just sit there, BOYS, tell her the real facts of life.

— BILL WUAMETT

Pop Tells Story Of Baby's Death

EDITOR'S NOTE: In the following dispatch, Frank Beale, a photographer for the Binghamton, N. Y. Sun Bulletin whose newborn daughter died after taking salt - polluted formula, tells what happened to him, his wife and four-day-old daughter after they brought the infant home with a formula which authorities say apparently contained enough salt to kill a baby of that age.

By FANK BEALE
As Told To UPI

BINGHAMTON, N. Y. — We brought the baby home Wednesday afternoon along with a bottle of formula. The formula was still warm and we had all the bottles ready. The baby had been fed at 10 o'clock in the morning and we arrived home with her about 1.

My wife and my sister, Mrs. Helen Gasper, were giving the baby her 2 o'clock feeding. But the baby wouldn't take the bottle. She appeared to choke and gag. The formula wouldn't come up or go down. She made a funny noise like gurgling.

She couldn't take the milk down. My wife and my sister kept trying for a while and managed to get about one ounce of formula mula down. The baby was supposed to get 4 ounces at a feeding. Then, we decided to give the baby some water. She drank the water like nobody's business. We let her drink about 2 ounces but she probably would have taken all the water we would have given her. After this, we tried to give her the formula again. She tasted it and wouldn't take any more.

Doctor Is Called

This continued until 5 o'clock the next morning, during which time she had taken 5 ounces of formula all together. She slept well in between the feedings but didn't want to take the formula. We got a little concerned so we called Dr. Charles A. Mossew, our family doctor, about 7 in the morning. He told us to take the baby to the emergency ward of General Hospital. My wife and I took the baby to the hospital. The baby was admitted to the pediatrics ward.

Friday morning we got up and took my son Francis, 4 to get a pair of shoes before taking him to my wife's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Casimer Carres, where he was to stay while my wife and I went to the hospital.

My son wanted to pick up one of his toys at home to take with him to his grandparents home. Our house is on the way so I stopped and went upstairs for the toy. My wife told me that the hospital had called and wanted us there right away. Dr. Mossew was working on the baby when we got there. She was being given oxygen and had a tube down her nose into her stomach.

Calls Priest

"I don't like the looks of what's going on," I said to myself. You know, with all that happening you get worried. I told my wife that if this thing keeps going like it is, we had better have the baby baptised. We called Father Alexander Maczkov, pastor of Holy Spirit Church, and he baptised the baby about 2 in the afternoon. Dr. Mossew told me about then he was bringing in Dr. Mark H. Williams.

The baby was X-rayed twice during the afternoon. The baby kept drooling. It was like foam. She was wheezing and her hands were moving more than usual. I thought she was getting better. Her cheeks had a pink color rather than the sallow one she had earlier.

About 12:50 Saturday morning she stopped wheezing and put her hands down. It was just like that. I called the nurse and she started giving the baby artificial respiration. Another nurse came in and called an intern. After the intern examined the baby, he turned to me and shook his head. He said nothing further coud be done.

I broke, I guess. That was it. I called my sister and told her to be at the house when I got home. It was about 2 a.m. My wife knew something was wrong.

Business Notes

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Labor Department reported Tuesday that manufacturing employment and the factory work week increased in February, reflecting a "sharply improved" job picture.

The department said manufacturing jobs increased by 55,000 to 16,425,000 last month. They usually remain unchanged at this time of year.

NEW YORK—American Airlines said business has been picking up in recent months and that if general business conditions remain good total air traffic volume should increase by 10 per cent. But President C. R. Smith said the airline industry can only hope to solve its problems by eliminating duplicating services and facilities.

NEW ORLEANS — The federal government started what was expected to be one of the richest tidelands oil lease sales in history. The Bureau of Land Management received nearly $178 million in the initial phase of an auction covering 401 tracts. This week's sales were expected to produce a boom in the oil drilling supply business.

Merrill—Educator Must Promote The Thinker

Today's educator is committed to promote a "thinking man" and he is expected to do this under a great handicap, Dr. E. C. Merrill, dean of the College of Education of the University of Tennessee, told the annual spring conference of health educators here yesterday.

"The history of the teaching profession is a noble one," Dr. Merrill said. "Medicine is a profession responding to the need to heal the human body. Law is a profession responding to the need to establish justice among and between human beings. The ministry is a profession dedicated to the purpose of establishing a redemptory relationship between man and God. Teaching is a profession dedicated to the purpose of assisting man to develop and use his intellectual capabilities in resolving the problems of life which beset him."

Dr. Merrill said that educators must organize themselves for action as well as for deliberation, in order that political and social changes might be effected.

"Organized labor has been a godsend to millions of men and women in our nation who were for years without a voice and without representation in a great captalistic enterprise. I need not review the steady, roughshod growth of organized labor. We regret that at times its abuse of power has overshadowed the benefits it has brought to the working man."

On the other side of the issue the Tennessee educator said, "I think that the unionizing of teachers runs contrary to our professional heritage. It is, however, a reality and we may see more of it. It is not the answer, but I firmly believe that it constitutes the biggest issue facing us."

Dr. Merrill said one of the most significant research findngs that has come out of carefully designed and conducted educational research shows the relationship between public understanding of education and quality of education in schools and colleges.

"Where the public understands education, they want good schools and colleges. Where they do not understand education, they do not want, do not support and generally do not have good schools."

Putting the case of education on a dollars and cents basis, Dr. Merrill explained that the life income of a college graduate was $425,242 as compared with $257,557 for the high school graduate, or a difference of $167,685. Still using figures from the Bureau of Census (1958) he said that a high school graduate would earn during his lifetime $75,862 more than a person with only an elementary school education.

"The differential in dollars," according to Dr. Merrill, "accounted for by an education represents living standard and buying power. This, ladies and gentlemen, is what the public must understand."

8 Professors Granted Leaves To Pursue Academic Research

Eight UNC faculty members in the Division of Academic Affairs have been recommended for leaves of absence to pursue academic research, serve as visiting faculty members, and complete publications, University Chancellor William B. Aycock announced Tuesday with the approval of President William C. Friday and the Board of Trustees.

Those faculty members recommended are: Kenan Professor of English Richmond Pugh Bond, to serve as a resident fellow at the Newberry Library, Feb. 1-June 1, 1963; Professor of English Norman E. Eliason, to serve as visiting professor, University of London, fall semester, 1962; Claiborne S. Jones, associate dean of the General College and Professor, Department of Zoology, to study education in the sciences in American and foreign universities, the academic year 1962-63; and Gerald R. MacCarthy, professor, Department of Geology and Geography, to collect research data, fall semester, 1962.

Also, John M. Ehle, associate professor, Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, to complete work for publication from August 31, 1962 for one year; Associate Professor of Romance languages William A. McKnight, to complete bibliography of Spanish plays in the L. R. Wilson Library, fall semester, 1962; Associate Professor of political science Donald R. Matthews to work under a Social Science Research Council grant, February 1, 1962 to January 31, 1963; and Assistant Professor of English Daniel W. Patterson to complete work for publication, spring semester, 1963.

Peace Group Formed Here

An organization with the purpose of studying and discussing proposals for peace and disarmament put forth by various governments, private groups and individuals has been formed here under the name of the Chapel Hill Peace Study Committee.

One of the aims of the committee is to publicize and promote specific proposals which are felt to offer the best chances for acceptance and eventual disarmament and peace.

The group is sponsored by Charlotte Adams; Rev. Vance Barron, a Presbyterian minister; UNC Physics Professor Wayne Bowers and Mrs. Bowers; Rev. Charles Jones and Rev. Robert Seymour of the Community and Baptist churches; Claude Shotts of the UNC YMCA; Glen Erickson, a research associate at the UNC Institute of Field Physics; Dan Okun; and "Reflections" Magazine, edited by Robert V. N. Brown.

To increase its effectiveness the Peace Study Committee intends to study and affiliate itself with other groups working nationally to achieve peace and disarmament.

The CHPSC invites all interested persons to join their group.

Foust Will Teach In Summer School

A University graduate with a master's degree in social work, Robert Long Foust, will return to UNC this summer to teach part time during the second summer session, July 18-August 25.

Mr. Foust will serve as a visiting lecturer in the School of Social Work. A native of Graham, he attended UNC where he majored in sociology and received a B. A. degree in 1952. He received a MSW degree with a major in community organization from UNC in 1958.

As associate executive director of the Community Welfare Council of the Greater Sacramento Area, Inc., Mr. Foust provides professional consultation and direct services to council divisions and committees, community agencies, and civic groups regarding methods for developing health and welfare services. He has maintained this post since December, 1958.

Before working in Sacramento, he served as a case worker in the child welfare division of the city and county of San Francisco De-

Research Triangle Grants To Double, Herbert Says

The Research Triangle this year will double last year's revenue in contract grants for research for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1962, it was predicted yesterday by George R. Herbert, president of the Institute, speaking to the UNC Faculty Club.

Last year the Research Triangle Institute performed research amounting to $700,000. At present the income from grants for the current year is over a million dollars, and a $1,400,00 for the entire fiscal year appears to be a conservative estimate.

Herbert reviewed the beginnings of the Research Triangle Institute in 1959, located in the Research Triangle Park between UNC, Duke and State College. He said it was expected that there would be an operating deficit for a time, and $500,000 was allocated to acquire the research and professional staff first, prior to attracting research projects.

Now the almost four years old organization has 112 staff members, 70 of which are professional research personnel, including 33 Ph.D.'s 18 M.A.'s and other technically proficient scientists or economics or mathematicians.

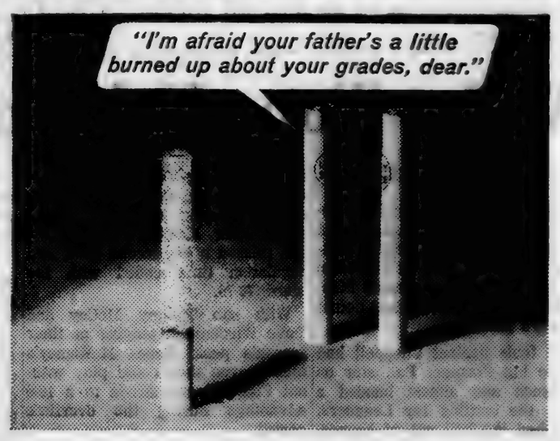
LUCKY PUFFERS
"PARENTS' WEEKEND"



BREAKING THE ICE FOR DAD. When Dad comes to visit, help him bridge the years with questions like this: "These old ivy-covered buildings never change, do they?" "Say, aren't those girls the cat's meow?" "Dad, do you remember how great cigarettes used to taste?" Then inform your Dad that college students still smoke more Luckies than any other regular. He will realize that times haven't really changed. He'll be in such good, youthful spirits that he'll buy you a carton.

Yale's basketball team gained a berth in the NCAA playoffs and took the court against Wake Forest Monday night wit ha familiar strike against it. The Elis are a member of the unheralded Ivy League, a conference which seldom produces a basketball power.

Each season the Ivy League entry into the post-season tournament is taken lightly and given little chance of winning its game. Last year it was Princeton that won the conference title and defeated George washington, the surprise Southerner Conference champion ,in the first round. The Tigers then gave St. Joseph's a good battle in the Eastern semifinals at Charlotte before falling to the team which had three players involved in the point-shaving scandals.

And every year the coach whose team is paired off with the Ivy League team in the tourney's first round is quick to sprout out the words, "They're dangerous, we'll have to be up for the game or we'll be on the outside looking in," or "Sure they're from a weak conference, but they haven't had the chance to prove themselves against a strong team!"

Wake Forest's towel-tossing coach, Bones McKinney, made one of those annual quotes early hti sweek when he said, "We will not take Yale lightly, they had an 18-5 record for the season and 13-1 in the Ivy League."

In 1954 North Carolina State defeated Cornell, 65-54, to take third place in the Eastern Regionals. In 1957 UNC's national champs rolled over Yale, 90-74. Two seasons ago Duke blasted Princeton by 84-60. These Ivy Leaguers haven't given ACC teams much trouble in the past.

A check of North Carolina's records since the organization of the Atlantic Coast Conference shows that Tar Heel teams have defeated the Ivy Leaguers in the three games they've played with them in nine years. During the 1952-53 season Pennsylvania slapped a defeat on UNC, for the only Tar Heel loss to any Ivy League team in ten years. The ten year mark for Carolina is 4-1.

N. C. State hasn't lost to an Ivy League team in more than 16 seasons.

Other Big Four and ACC teams have met with similar success against these northern teams.

But, back to the Wake-Yale clash. McKinney's quote has more meaning now than it did a few years ago. For the first time since the two league winners have faced each other in the playoffs, the Ivy League team came within a hair of winning. If Dave Shumacher's foul shot with two seconds remaining hadn't bounced off the rim, the Baptist college over in Winston-Salem would still be in mourning this time next week.

It would have been downright sad if Len Chappell's fifth and disqualifying foul had been his last accomplishment in a Wake Forest uniform. The big All-American was Wake's leading scorer in each of the 26 games prior to the Yale contest. He scored only 25 against Yale, but once more led his team. If Shumacher's toss from 15 feet out had gone through the nets, big Len would have been sick. He takes his basketball seriously, so seriously that he finds it impossible to study well during basketball season. He will have to go to summer school before he can graduate from Wake.

But the shot didn't fall and without Chappell the Deacs came to life and defeated Yale to advance to the Eastern Regionals at College Park, Maryland.

Yale's Elis had given it an outstanding forty minute effort. When their top scorer, Rick Kaminsky, fouled out early in the overtime they fell apart offensively, while the Deacs rolled up 16 points in five minutes.

Princeton's fine showing last year against much stronger teams and Yale's near-victory Monday night are indicative of the kind of basketball played in their conference. They players are not big and strong along the lines of Jerry Lucas and Chappell, but they are fast and talented. The schools in the Ivy League are handicapped in sports because of their stiff entrance requirements, but they do well despite the handicap.

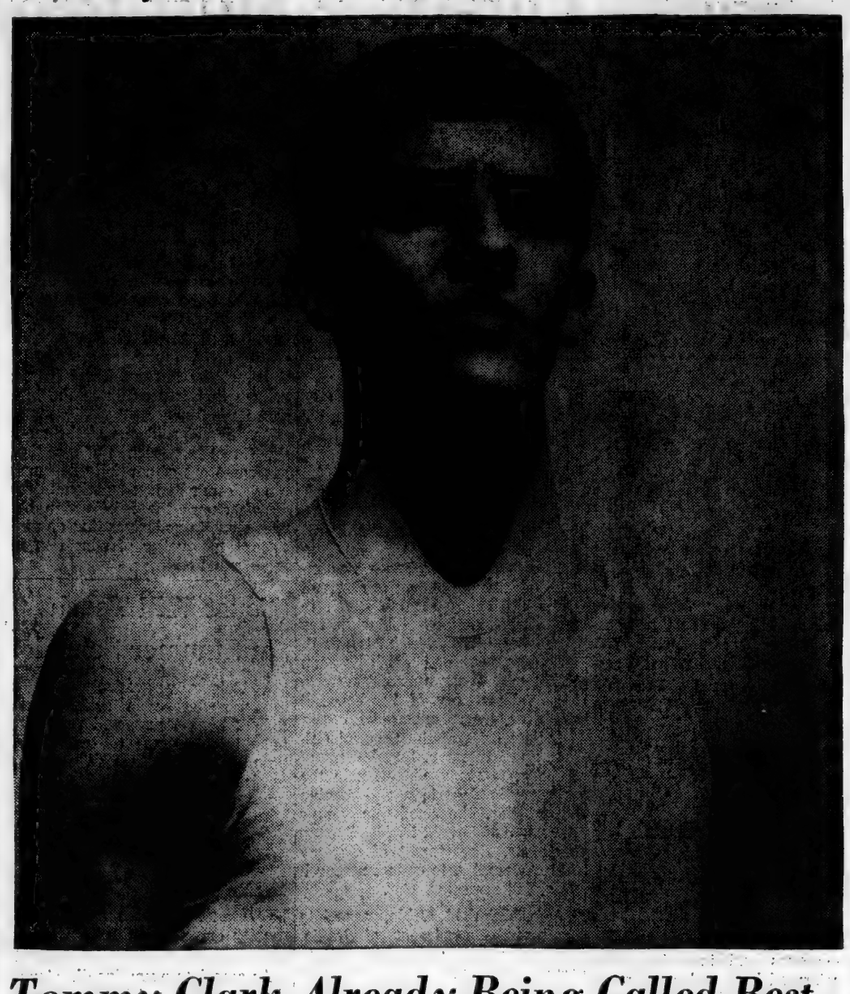
Princeton recruited two outstanding high school players last year and they'll move up to the varsity. nOe of these should be Joe Rohtman, a New Jersey boy who UNC Coach Dean Smith had hoped would be playing with Bill Cunningham and company on this year's frosh team. He's had a good season for the Princeton frosh. The other is Bill Bradley, a Missouri high school star. With recruiting like this, Princeton could be tough within a few years.

OK, Coach McKinney. We won't take Yale or the Ivy League too lightly after this.

SPORTS NOTES . . . We were more than surprised to see Wake Forest's sophomore Jerry Christie on UPI's All-America honorable mention list. While Duke's Art Heyman and Len Chappel were named to the second team and Jeff Mullins of Duke received honorable mention, other members of the All-ACC team were not mentioned. Christie's teammates, Dave Wiedemann and Billy Packer, each made at least one All-ACC team, while Christie missed the boat completely. Players like Larry Brown, Jerry Greenspan, Art Whisnant, and John Speaks were also considered better in the conference selections. Honorable mention A-A isn't the greatest honor a player can receive, but it does seem that writers in Winston-Salem must be holding All-American hopes for young Christie's senior year. Of course he may have to play his next two years against Billy Cunningham .

UNC's basketballers each shared in the little bit of glory during the 1961-62 season. Larry Brown led the scoring with a 16.5 average and made one first team All-ACC selection. Don Walsh hit a remarkable .560 of his field goal attempts to lead the team and set a new UNC percentage mark. Jim Hudock pulled down 171 rebounds to lead the team in that category. Charlie Shaffer came near having as high a percentage from the floor as on the foul line in his dazzling one-semester showing. He hit .636 of his field goal tries and .667 of his free tosses.

Daily Tar Heel Athlete Of The Week



Tommy Clark Already Being Called Best High Jumper In North Carolina History

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Last Saturday afternoon, before a packed Woollen Gym Indoor Games crowd, a young man from Greensboro North Carolina jumped higher than anyone in the history of the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Today, for his prodigious leap of 6'7¾", the Daily Tar Heel salutes Tom Clark as its fifth Athlete of the Week.

A 6-2, 158-pound sophomore, Tommy Clark started training early toward his present position as Carolina's finest high jumper and biggest track star since sub-four-minute miler Jim Beatty.

The lithe 20-year-old began high jumping at Lindley Junior High School in Greensboro when a Japanese gym teacher taught him the first fundamentals. In Senior High, Tommy went on to break both the sectional meet and state meet records. In the sectionals, Clark went 6-2⅛ and at the state meet two years ago, he cleared 6-1¼.

On entering Carolina in the fall of 1960, the dark-haired leaper continued his record-setting ways. He won the Carolinas AAU last spring with a jump of 6-6 and followed that up by establishing a new ACC freshman record of 6-6⅝ in a meet at Duke University.

This series of performances set the stage for this year's indoor season — Clark's first as a varsity performer. However, he got off to a slow start and had failed to go over 6-4 before the ACC classic carnival last Saturday.

Before that big one, Clark said he was nervous but it didn't look it as he gracefully went through his practice jumps. Tommy skipped the first height (5-8) and started his assault on the record book at 5-10.

When the bar had been raised to 6-2, only four jumpers remained. With Clark were Maryland's George Leonard, Jim Bland and Dick Estes. All of them cleared the height.

Clark then asked that the bar be raised two inches to 6-4. The Maryland boys objected, wanting first to try at 6-3! The psychology worked as Tommy cleared 6-4 and the three terps all missed at 6-3.

With Estes and Bland, who shared the meet mark of 6-4, disposed of, UNC's Clark could concentrate on breaking the record. And concentrate he did as Woollen Gym erupted when Tommy cleared 6-6 on his first try. Clark then asked that the bar be raised to 6-8—and after running halfway around the track, he cleared this height (it was later announced as 6-7¾), easily.

The crowd again exploded and many rushed out to shake the youngster's hand. He was visibly overjoyed at his effort and even three misses at the next height, 6-9, could not dampen his spirits.

Afterward, Tommy admitted he was a little tired when he came to the latter jump, but there will be other years and other meets and the magic mark of seven feet may easily be his.

This thought is echoed by Rev. Charley Hubbard, himself a great trackman at Carolina. Says Hubbard, "The boy will have seven feet before long."

Varsity track coach Dale Ranson says that Clark is without a doubt the greatest jumper Carolina has ever had and that he will definitely get better.

With these knowledgeable experts' praises and predictions behind him, all North Carolina hopes that Tommy Clark — math major and member of Chi Phi fraternity — will become the athlete of many more weeks to come.

Lucas (Who Else?) Tops UPI; Lennie, Art On 2nd Team

NEW YORK (UPI) — Jerry Lucas of Ohio State, college basketball's "Mr. Wonderful," today was elected to the 1962 United Press International All-America team by a unanimous vote — the first player ever so honored.

This was the third straight year that the talented 6-foot-8 Buckeye center was voted All-America. Lucas thus matched the feats of La-Salle's Tom Gola (1953-54-55) and Oscar Robertson of Cincinnati (1958-59-60).

Every one of the 202 basketball writers and radio-television broadcasters who participated in this year's nationwide UPI poll made Lucas a first team selection.

The four other players selected were Terry Dischinger of Purdue; Bill (The Hill) McGill of Utah; Lucas' Ohio State teammate, John Havlicek, and Chet Walker of Bradley.

Dischinger and Walker, like Lucas, were repeaters from last year's UPI All-America. McGill and Havlicek moved up from the 1961 second team. All five players are seniors.

This is an unusual honor squad, averaging 6-foot-7 per man and possessing a scoring average of more than 27 points per-man pergame.

McGill, Utah's 6-foot-9 beanpole, led the nation in scoring with a 38.8-point average that was the second highest ever recorded by a major college player.

The 6-foot-7 Dischinger averaged 30-2 points and led the Big Ten Conference in scoring for an unprecedented third straight season. Walker's average was 26.4, Lucas' 22.3 and Havlicek's 17.0.

Four of the five players chosen on the UPI second team were from the South. Cotton Nash of Kentucky and Rod Thorn of West Virginia were the highest vote-getters in this group. Next came Len Chappell of Wake Forest, Art Heyman of Duke and John (The Shot) Foley of Holy Cross.

Wake Tops Yale In Overtime, 92-82

By ED DUPREE

With All-American Lennie Chappell sitting on the bench and a five minute overtime period awaiting them, Wake Forest's Demon Deacons rose to the occasion Monday night and pasted a 92-82 defeat on Yale's Elis.

Five fouls against Chappell had put the big Portage, Pa., star on the bench and almost handed a win to the battling Ivy Leaguers. Wake had the ball out of bounds, following a time out, with two seconds remaining when Billy Packer heaved a long pass down court to Chappell. But big Len, trying to get the ball and a game-winning field goal, pushed Yale's Dave Shumacher and a foul was called. The scoreboard clock at the University of Pennsylvania's Palestra had not moved as the foul was called before the ball had touched a player, so it still showed two seconds and Shumacher was on the foul line with a one-and-one opportunity.

6-8 Chappell went to the bench and confusion reigned momentarily near the Wake Forest bench. The Deacs returned to the court, Shumacher missed his shot, sophomore Rick Kaminsky rebounded and missed a last-second shot, and regulation time ended with the score 76-76.

With sub Tommy McCoy and Dave Wiedemann playing at their season's peak, Bones McKinney's men proved they could play without Chappell and strode to a 16-6 advantage during the overtime period.

After Kaminsky, Yale's top scorer with 23 points, had scored a field goal, Wiedemann popped in two foul shots—and was fouled by Kaminsky who went the way of Chappell with five personals against him.

Frank Christie connected on a lay up and Wake never trailed again. Billy Packer hit a foul shot, Bob Woollard tapped one in ,and the Winston-Salem crew held an 83-78 lead.

After Yale's Bill Madden had scored, McCoy tallied four points and Packer hit a free throw to make it 88-80..

The final ten-point margin did not justify the play of Yale's underdogs. The jumped off to an early 21-12 lead and trailed the nation's 7th-ranked team only 46-42 at halftime. While their Atlantic Coast Conference foes hit 53 per cent of their field goals in the opening period, Coach Joe Vancisin's Ivy League champions hit 47.5 and outscored Wake by two points from the floor.

Yale continued to play steady ball, hitting 47.2 from the floor for the game, but the taller Baptists outrebounded the northerners, 51-37. 6-10 Woollard led both teams with 11 rebounds. Kaminsky and Rich Evans pulled down 10 each for Yale, while Chappell snared eight..

Chappell hit eight of 13 shots from the floor and nine of 15 foul shots to lead both teams in scoring with 25 points, slightly off his 30.7 pre-game average. Wiedemann scored 22 in one of his best performances of the year and Packer and McCoy added 15 each. Woollard just missed double figures by chalking up eight points, half of them on the foul line.

Madden with 14, and Evans and Lynch with 12 each trailed the soph guard Kaminsky's 23, as Yale made an all-out effort to upset the Deacons, who had rated as high as third in the nation in pre-season polls.

In other games played at the Palestra in the first round of the NCAA Eastern Regionals, Villanova stomped West Virginia, 90-75, and NYU took the measure of Massachusetts, 70-50.

Wake Forest will meet St. Joseph's, a team that holds a 65-63 win over the Deacs earlier this season, in the regional semi-finals Friday at College Park, Maryland. In the other contest Villanova meets NYU. The two winners meet Saturday and the Eastern champ advances to the semifinals and finals at Louisville the following weekend.

It was a rebuilding year and Dean Smith promised no miracle team. When he was named coach after Frank McGuire's anounced resignation he said, "We'll have a good team, but not a great team."

There was a point when it seemed that Smith's shuffle offense might take the Tar Heels to another top finish in the ACC, but losses to top dogs Wake and Duke sent UNC spinning. They finished 8-9, certainly not a big surprise considering the loss of Doug Moe, York Larese, and Dick Kepley.

Next year's team will be colorful and will win more games, maybe many games. Smith says that he will have the fastest team in the nation if Cunningham plays and hopes are high that he will be back. With Billy in the lineup, UNC can give any team trouble next season.

Wrye, Clotfelter Now Officially Candidates

They promised "a newspaper which would provide facts and insight into the major problems facing the student, the University and education." The Tar Heel should also "stimulate students to think, to participate in student debate and controversy," they said.

Pub Board

They are the first candidates to officially announce for the editorship. Spring elections will be held March 27.

"Campus, regional, and national news would be selected according to student interest, degree of student participation and importance to the student," said the candidates in a statement yesterday.

'Beat' System

They proposed "the addition of a full-time staff member to work with news sources and staff personnel; the establishment of a 'beat' system with reporters regularly assigned to important areas of the campus; and setting up an associative relationship with other North Carolina, southern and major national college newspapers, for the rapid exchange of student-interest stories."

Clotfelter and Wrye said they would impose no restrictions on student letters-to-the-editor, and would work to enliven the editorial page.

Sports Editor

Wrye was assistant sports editor last spring. He has also served as editorial assistant for "Reflections" magazine.

Clotfelter has been on the DTH staff for a year-and-a-half, working as news editor, assistant to the editor and night editor.

Wrye, a senior English major from Greensboro, will be in graduate school next year. He is a candidate for Phi Beta Kappa.

IFC

St. Anthony Hall's representative in the Interfraternity Council, Wrye has been in varsity swimming and varsity soccer.

Chest Begins Solicitations Campaign

Dorm Residents Average Goal

Chapel Hill merchant Bob Cox formally kicked off the Campus Chest solicitations drive Tuesday night by speaking to 200 solicitors on the techniques of soliciting.

Although contributions from the dormitories are incomplete, the dorms are all averaging this year's goal — one dollar per person. The Campus Chest feels that it is each student's responsibility to give, especially since the contributions average less than a penny a day for the whole year.

Money So Far

The Campus Chest has received pledges from the following: Alpha Tau Omega — $55, Delta Kappa Epsilon — $58, Saint Anthony's Hall — $25, Phi Gamma Delta — $25, Pi Kappa Phi — $32, Sigma Nu — $30, Zeta Beta Tau — $44, University Party — $50, and Alpha Delta Pi — $55.

In addition, the Carolina Women's Council earned $21.15 shining shoes Wednesday.

Prizes

Several prizes are being offered in order to stimulate additional interest in the contributions. One of the buttons being given to those donating a dollar will be drawn at the Campus Chest Carnival, Saturday, March 17, by Miss North Carolina.

The prizes are: a steak dinner for two at the Ranch House, a madras sport coat from Milton's for the boys or a london fog raincoat for the girls, and five, twenty minute backrubs by the physical therapists from Whitehead Dorm.

Elections Board

The Elections Board will meet Thursday at 5 p.m. in the Grail Room in Graham Memorial. Anyone unable to attend this meeting should call Dave Buxton.

UNC Hams Help On Coast

By RICHARD BURNS

Three members of the UNC Amateur Radio Club went to the storm stricken North Carolina coast Saturday to aid in the operations of the "Tar Heel Emergency Network."

Grabbing what they could from the UNC unit plus a complete amateur installation from Walker's home in Spot, N. C., they drove to Kitty Hawk in Hembree's radio equipped car.

Helicopter Lift To Manteo

After arriving at the Red Cross station set up in the Kitty Hawk High School, they were advised to take the equipment to Manteo as soon as possible. This was done with the aid of an Army helicopter. due to the washed out roads.

At the Manteo Red Cross station, they relieved two emergency radio operators who had been working since the storm struck.

According to Nields DeVere. "hundreds of health and safety messages were handled by the amateur installations in the area," and added that, "excellent cooperation was maintained between the various units."

Aided Heart Patient

On several occasions the students aided in procuring urgently needed medicine. One of these was a woman with a serious heart condition who they later assisted in being flown to an Elizabeth City, N. C. hospital.

In describing the scene, DeVere said that most of the damage was done in the Kitty Hawk area. "Cottage after cottage," he said, "was completely destroyed."

"Sands were piled up several feet above normal in most areas. The biggest difficulty was the washed out roads," he added.

According to DeVere, the three boys slept on "mattresses on the floor of the school," during their stay.

As telephone communications were restored, "the need for emergency operators lessened, so we returned to Chapel Hill Tuesday . . tired but happy," Devere said.

Campus Chest

Voting for the position of "King of the Campus" will be held in Y-Court this week. Students may, by dropping their money into the respective box, select a faculty member or dean for this position. The candidates are Dr. Sessoms, Dr. Wallace, Charlie Bernard, and Dr. Hudson. Each penny will count one vote.

Campus Visit Is His First In 10 Years

Billy Graham, one of the world's best known and most dynamic evangelists, will speak here tonight at 8 in Memorial Hall.

UNC students will be admitted until 7:45 when the general public will be allowed in. Officials say that the hall which seats 1,640 will probably be filled by 7:45.

At State

Graham spoke last Tuesday to an audience of 8,500 in Reynolds Coliseum at N. C. State College. It was his first visit there in 10 years.

Graham said that the Bible was still the answer to most of the problems facing modern society. The modern world is totally different, he said, from the events which produced the Bible, yet it still holds eternal truths for Christians—"an increasing minority in an increasingly unfriendly world." Graham went on to say that modern society is a neighborhood without being a brotherhood; there has never been a time like the present.

Sponsor

Graham's visit to Chapel Hill will also be his first in 10 years. He is being sponsored by the Billy Graham Committee which is working closely with the Religious Emphasis Committee of the YWCA.

In the past decade Graham has talked to an estimated 30 million people in person. His daily newspaper column, "My Answer," is read daily by an estimated 60 million people. It is published in 125 newspapers throughout the United States.

Besides the column Graham's ministry which is called the Billy Graham Evangelical Team produces "The Hour of Decision," broadcast each Sunday night over the American, National, Mutual Broadcasting Companies and affiliate stations. The program has one of the greatest network coverages in the United States and is broadcast to 17 additional countries by short wave

Published

Graham has also published several books. "Peace with God" in 1953 hit the best seller lists and its sequel "The Secret of Happiness" in 1955 was listed as one of the nation's 10 best selling nonfiction books within six weeks of its publication.

Billy Graham was born in Charlotte. He attended the Florida Seminary in Tampa, Fla., and received his Th.B. degree in 1940, the same year that he was ordained a Baptist minister. After graduation he received his A.B. from Wheaton College in Illinois and an LL.D. degree from Houghton College in New York.

School President

From 1947 to 1951, Graham served as president of Northwestern schools in Minneapolis. He became president of the schools in 1951.

In 1952 Graham made a Christmas tour of the Korean battle fields. In 1954 he made a 12-week crusade in London, climaxed by a gathering of 120,000 people in the rain in Wembly Stadium.

During 1957 Graham led a 4-month crusade in New York that reached an estimated 2 million people. A crusade in San Francisco a year later reached a million people.

Art Museum Trying To Raise $3,000

A $3,000 goal has been set in the North Carolina Museum of Art drive to raise funds for the purchase of a Josef Albers painting for the museum.

According to museum General Curator Ben Williams, the painting will help fill gaps in the Museum's modern collection. "An Albers should also be of great value in state art education," Williams said. Former Student's First Novel Is Given National Book Award

Lewis Mumford, winner of the non-fiction award for his "The City in History: Its Origins, Its Transformation, and Its Prospects," and Alan Dugan, winner of the poetry award for his volume, "Poetry," each received $1,000 also.

SAE Rocker

In the press conference following the presentation of the awards, Percy claimed that he spent his four years at Carolina "mostly rocking on the front porch of the SAE house in the morning and going to the movies in the afternoon."

His book, "The Moviegoers," has been called a "polished first novel." He threw away two earlier such attempts at a "young man" novel.

"Truthful" Novel

It has been called "a truthful novel with shocks of recognition and spasms of nostalgia" for Americans. The moviegoer in the book, Percy says, symbolized "pathology in everyday life."

When asked if the South was as good a place to live in as to write about, Percy evasively replied, "I like both the North and the South."

OROZCO'S WORK AT DARTMOUTH

Mural Studies Displayed In Ackland

The frescos are considered one of the most outstanding examples of mural art in this country. This was not always so, as when Orozco completed them in 1934 they aroused a great deal of controversy. Commissioned by Dartmouth in 1932, the murals cover 3,000 square feet of wall space in the college library. In two sections, one representing aboriginal culture, the other, the machine age, Orozco interpreted the forces that have molded American civilization.

Sketches To Final Drawings

The exhibition at the Center was shown for the first time in November, 1961, at the Museum of Modern Art in New York, it is being circulated by the Museum with the aid of a grant from the CBS Foundation Inc. The drawings, in ink, pencil, gouache and crayon, were selected from the collection of the late artist's son, Clemente Orozco.

Many Mexican Murals

Orozco, an outstanding Mexican painter, was born in 1883 and died in 1949. He completed many major mural commissions in Mexico.

Ehle Will Work On Novel

Novelist John Ehle, the associate professor of RTVMP whose five books in the past five years are rapidly promoting him as an artist of stature and position, has been granted a year's leave of absence in which time he will complete work on a fourth novel.

The New York publishing house of Harper's Brothers has given the young Chapel Hill writer an advance payment on the new book to aid him financially in his 12-month leave from the University. The author will devote his full time to the new fiction work.

Ehle, whose course in radio and television scriptwriting at UNC regugarly draws the best of student talent, is the author of three previous works of fiction and two biographical books.

Book Award Contender

His first book, "Move Over, Mountain," published in 1957, launched him as a writer of ability and promise and his recent "Lion on the Hearth" was widely-praised by reviewers as a serious literary achievement, was a contender for the National Book Award, and was heralded as his finest prose work to date.

His three other books are "The Survivor," "Shepherd of the Streets," and "Kingstree Island," the Asheville native has won 12 national awards.

He is chairman of the Mass Media Committee of the American Educational Theatre Association, and special advisor to that association on television network proposals and projects. He is a member of the Radio Network Committee of the National Association of Educational Broadcasters.

John Ehle

Among the network plays to Ehle's credit are 26 studies of the basic values and characteristics of the American people, made on grants from the Fund for Advanced Education. These were broadcast by NBC, by National Educational Television, and are used now by Armed Forces Radio and Radio Free Europe. They are circulated to schools by the National Archives in Kent, Ohio.

Recent television projects include the writing of the pilot script for a CBS Television series, produced last year in New York City, and a series of eight folk-music programs, featuring 'Cile Turner of Forrest, Virginia, which were written for National Educational Television on a grant from the Educational Television and Radio Center.

Among the documentary films he has written and directed were three award-winning films on North Carolina. He also wrote the film still in use on UNC.

Ehle, who joined the UNC faculty in 1951 after study here, has arroused much consternation as a result of his appraisals of the creative atmosphere of the University.

NEED LESS OIL

AUSTIN ,Texas —(UPI)— Purchasers of Texas crude oil notified the Texas Railroad Commission the state's oil regulatory agency, that they will require slightly less crude oil in April than in March. Most refiners indicated they want continuation of the eight-day producing limit in April the same as in the two previous months.

It Must Fall

The Social Barrier

On January 6 of last year, white and Negro picketers first began pacing with quiet determination in front of the Varsity theater in protest of segregation policies there.

Now, well over a year later, after countless hours of meetings, discussions, sporadic picketing, promises, and evasions, both theaters are completely integrated. After the initial uproar, negotiations between the Citizen's Committee for Open Movies and the managements at the two theaters moved with a minimum of protest from the segregationist segment.

This relative lack of reaction to the integration of the theaters is significant. Opposition to acceptance of Negro has been most pronounced in the social area. It is here that the greatest obstacle remains to be overcome. And although theater-going cannot be definied as strictly social, it does fall loosely into that category. The rascist's emotional reaction to taking a theater seat alongside a Negro is less pronounced than it might be to attending an integrated dance, for instance, but it is there nonetheless.

For this reason, if for none other, the integration of the theaters is a decisive step toward true integration — a state which will exist only when the word "Negro" is used only as identification and nothing more.

The great barrier that stifles total acceptance of the Negro is the social taboo that permeates the South.

The image of the Negro at the bedroom door that is impressed on most white Southerners from birth usually manages to work itself into any segregationist's argument sooner or later. Let a young Negro in a Southern town so much as smile at a white woman and the rascists conjure up the most inspired of charges. Let him enter a restaurant and white womanhood has been insulted. Let him try to vote and a Negro plot is being hatched to take over the government and allow mongrelization of the races. Let him sit at the front of a bus and your sister is in danger. Let him educate himself and he becomes a threat.

These are the arguments. Opposition voiced in terms of legality, morality and practicality are usually mere rationalizations for the hidden arguments, the emotional ones. And it is the emotional barrier that must fall before real integration can be effected. Legislation can't do that, although it can help by providing the framework. Reasonable argument can't do it, although it can help destroy the rationalizations. Removing the overt indications of discrimination can't do it, although it can help remove the physical barriers.

None of these can provide the final realization of the Negro's goal. All will help. They are first steps in opening the avenues. But the final step in integration will come over coffee cups, backyard fences, punch bowls and bridge tables. It will come through handshakes and conversation, through personal contact and social enterchange.

Intergration of the theatres is a first step toward these things.

Conservativewise

At Antioch College, where boys will be agitators, we have noted, tongue-in-cheek, some superficial evidence of conservatism. But the changing of the spots has progressed further than we had ever imagined. It is reactionary.

No, this has nothing to do with the John Birch Society, which merely wants to put the political system in reverse. It is something called the Society for the Protection of the English - American Language (SPEAL) and is described in Antioch Notes as the "oldest conservative movement on the campus." An "informal" organization whose founder and self-appointed president is Mrs. Martha Dean (Antioch '37), class schedule secretary. SPEAL is devoted to maintaining the "highest possible standards" in spelling grammar and usage.

* * *

But so far as usage is concerned this really is a lost cause — the mostest. The "purists" are trying to maintain something the language never had — to wit, purity.

SPEAL's Target No. 1, for example, remains for the current year what it was in the last, the suffixwise "as in educationwise, proportionwise and piecemealwise."

But obviously, since this venerable combining form has refused to yield under SPEAL's assault, the campaign against it is moving crabwise. Leastwise, we would gather from the fang-and-claw attack that SPEAL has been nowise successful in rooting it out.)

* * *

In this matter, we trust Antioch's students will remain rebels no matter how otherwise the college trends conservativewise.

Kenya: Another Blood Bath?

Editor's Note: Emilee Hines of Nathalia, Va., was a student at the university last year and worked at the Computation Center. She is now teaching in Machakos, Kenya.

* * *

"Kenya is confused. Tribalism is spreading. Are we going to have peace, prosperity and unity — or another Congo?" This was Tom Mboya's challenge to Kenyans in a speech in Nairobi February 3. (East African Standard, Feb. 5, 1962)

On the eve of the conference which will give Kenya its independence, the fate of this colony is on the minds of millions of people. Kenya, one of the most beautiful lands on earth, has been beset with problems and strife throughout most of its history, the most horrible example being the Mau Mau atrocities in the early 1950's.

Great Britain is eager to grant UHURU (freedom) to Kenya — long a financial drain on the British taxpayers — but the example of the Congo is too fresh for Britain to pull out with irresponsible haste. Uhuru is promised when the political parties have achieved unity and worked out a plan for peaceful government. This time seems quite remote at the moment.

Tribal Dissension

The tribes of Kenya are divided into two political parties — Kenya African National Union (KANU) and Kenya African Democratic Union (KADU) — but even in these parties there is dissension. The politicians speak against each other and threaten to pull out of the main party and form their own party.

KANU is composed chiefly of the three largest tribes: the Kikuyu, the Kamba, and the Luo. They plan a unitary government, which would insure Kenya's domination by the Kikuyu. KADU's membership is made up of the other tribes of Kenya, who fear domination by the Kikuyu. KADU demands six regional governments with internal matters to be settled by these governments. External matters would be handled by a central government with a two house legislature. Each party threatens darkly that there will be bloodshed and tribal warfare if its people are ruled by the other party.

All the Europeans who are able to are leaving Kenya. Police and administrative officers are collecting their compensation and looking for other jobs. They are replaced by Africans, sometimes competent, sometimes not. Landowners are selling land they have spent a lifetime on, often at less than half its value. Many more would like to sell land and leave, but the government has no more money to pay for land; too, many Africans have been told by politicians — chiefly KANU's Paul Ngei — that land will be theirs free after UHURU. The third race, the Asians, are caught between the Africans and Europeans. They call themselves the "forgotten men". They have no other home but East Africa: they have no wish to return to crowded India; indeed, many of them are second generation Kenyans who have never seen India. They are despised by Africans and Europeans alike.

Economically, life in Kenya has almost come to a standstill. Asians and Europeans have for several years been sending money out of the country to be invested elsewhere, and new money is not coming into Kenya to replace this. For an obvious reason: no businessman wants to establish a business in a country only to have it confiscated as the "people's property" just when it begins to show a profit. Farmers have ceased to make improvements on their land, or to plant anything more permanent than the immediate crop, for they do not know how soon it will all be taken. Merchants of all kinds have less business, for no one wants to buy something only to leave it behind when he is forced to go in a hurry. A car dealer reports that there are 14,000 used cars for sale in the Nairobi area alone, by those who are leaving or would like to.

Tax collection is also affected by the promised UHURU. Many Africans are delinquent in taxes, since they have been told that after uhuru education will be free. Consequently, schools are being closed, and many African District Councils have money enough to operate only for part of this year.

Floods, Drought

Even the weather seems to be working against economic progress in Kenya. The recent floods, coming on the heels of a three-year drought, have destroyed crops and washed out bridges and roads which will require precious funds to replace — funds which were earmarked for new work.

The granting of UHURU may be the destruction of Kenya, geographically as well as politically. Uganda is asking for the return of the "lost counties" in the northwestern part of Kenya. The Somalis in the northeastern portion of Kenya demand the right of secession. The Coastal strip also wants to be an independent nation, with the possibility of later coming under the jurisdiction of the Sultan of Zanzibar. The Masai along the southern border would perhaps like to join with the Masai in Tanganyika. All this leaves little hope for any East African Federation later on.

In the area of international politics, Kenya may well go Communist. Conditions here are just the sort Communists operate best in: the end of a colonial regime, backward people with too few trained for leadership, poverty, and dissension. Communist literature has recently been seized from Nairobi newsstands, and Communist money — in the form of scholarships for students and money given directly to politicians — has come into Kenya in large amounts.

Takes 'Lady' To Recognize Southern 'Gentleman'

To the Editor:

(An answer to the letter by T. J. that appeared in Sunday's DTH.)

I do not know where to begin telling about myself for there is so much to tell. For instance I am extremely cultured. I speak four languages and dabble in writing, art, and music, among others. Needless to say, I am Phi Beta Kappa. My comoisseurship is very discriminating and tolerates only the best is cuisine, liquors, and women. But my interests are not completely one-sided. I enjoy the adventurous life also, sports such as sailing and sports car racing.

I read three chapters from Amy Vanderbilt and two from Emily Post every night. All my friends say that I am the perfect gentleman, a model of propriety. I am really proud that I always do the right thing on every occasion.

I am the scion of an old established family in the state and the only heir of a rich father. My life would literally be perfect if I could find the prefect woman. After years of futile searching, I had almost despaired of finding her, but when I read your letter this morning . . . Having almost a surfeit of such wonderful attributes, I must surely meet with your approval just as a girl of your sophistication, discriminating tastes and astute criticisms meets with mine. May I call on you soon?

To the Editor:

I think a few words will suffice to answer Miss T. J.'s question concerning the whereabouts of Carolina Gentlemen. First of all, I don't see how she can be "sick to death" of them, because she obviously hasn't met one yet — a fact she acknowledges in her closing line.

Those she describes as suffering "from enormous superiority complexes revolving around their fabled good manners, capacity for cheap liquor, Milton's wardrobe and sexual prowess" would certainly make one wonder what kind of company she has been keeping. Undoubtedly these men do exist and are not just a figment of her yankee imagination. There are the so-called "losers" even in the South, but there can't be as many of them. The census itself is one proof of that.

I feel that Miss T. J. should examine herself and her own rather limited field of vision. She may find herself to be one of the many highly embellished Northern coeds who knows that she has some sorts of physical attributes (I could never use the word "charms"), who wears the "right" clothes (though they can't help her), who throws a vulgarly coquettish "_____" into a conversation for some reason or another, and who usually parades without a "thank you" through a door being politely held open by some nonentity.

Carolina Gentlemen (or Southern Gentlemen) do exist, but I might add that it takes a "lady" to know one when she meets one. Although I realize Miss T. J. holds apologies in disdain, she should perhaps apologize for the fact that she will not have the good fortune to turn "Sweet Sixteen" again and start over in her search for genteel company. If and when you date again, Miss T. J., be kind.

Letters To The Editor

Dorm Plan Blasted; Co-Editors Backed

To the Editor:

Encouraged by Mr. Coble's letter criticizing Dean William G. Long's radical new dorm policy in Saturday's DTH, I urge other Carolina students to look into a problem that concerns us all, yet one of which few are aware.

This problem can loosely be defined as the administration's subtle attempt to undermine existing student government and to eventually subordinate all students to stringent control by South Building. While fraternities are affected by this policy, I address this letter to dormitory residents because they are the least aware of the danger, particularly that phase inherent in the dormitory advisor program, and evident in next year's abolishment of dorm managers.

There are two reasons why I am deeply alarmed at this situation which also worries many others. First, I deplore attempts to weaken traditional student government and courts because I am a candidate for the Men's Council believing that a more positive attitude is needed toward student administration. Second, as President of Old West Dormitory, I fear that the effectiveness of dormitory officers will be lost if Old West is designated a "quiet dorm" under the jurisdiction of resident advisors. It is already a quiet dorm, but the authority of the IDC and the fine record of the IDC Court have made this possible rather than the advisors.

It is significant that the leading candidate for the "Most Improved Dormitory Award" given annually by the IDC has reached this position solely because of the efforts of the duly elected dormitory officers and the dormitory manager. This proves that resident advisors are unnecessary in some dormitories, although the administration seems to feel that the IDC and dormitory managers are undesirable instead.

Resident advisors in Old West, for instance, have contributed nothing toward its improvement while the officers have coordinated its important activities. But many residents are unaware of an advisor in the building and I contend that none have needed advice or have received anything but the feeling that "South Building is Watching You."

I submit that Dean Long's plan is unpopular with the resident of each experimental dormitory and I doubt the plan had the endorsement of Director of Housing James Wadsworth, who always has the best interests of students at heart. More important, I hope that students will take enough interest to stop South Building's encroachments on student government which included misuse of the student advisor system and imperious regulation of dormitories.

Alternative Wanted

To the Editor:

I realize that Doc Field is very upset about the legislature passing a bill. I would like to hear Mr. Field suggest some alternative reason for electing a legislature if not to have them pass bills. Certainly this is not illegal for I have been led to believe that the UNC legislature has not passed any laws which forbid them to pass laws.

Legislators are meant to pass laws. If they pass a resolution that is displeasing to a minority then they have passed a resolution that is displeasing to a minority. Our national and state legislature have built up long histories of passing bills which are displeasing to certain minorities. Most of us get over our little fits and begin to work, so Mr. Field I would advise you not to cry anymore, but to work to see that legislators who displease you shall not be re-elected.

Steel Negotiations Resume

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — Negotiations on a new contract in the nation's basic steel industry resumed today under presidential urging. An air of cordiality which prevailed among top bargainers during two weeks of earlier talks appeared to be missing.

A solemn-faced David J. McDonald, president of the United Steelworkers Union, told newsmen: "We are resuming exploratory talks upon the insistence of President Kennedy. I have no further comment."

He then cut short the questioning and led his union committee into the same conference room in a downtown hotel where the discussions broke off abruptly the night of March 2.

The finals in the Frat White division will be played next Tuesday night.

Graduate Playoffs

The Peacocks and the History Grads won their first-round 'quarter-finals) games Monday night, then took on each other Tuesday night in the semi-finals. The other semi-final game, also played last night, was between the Pharmacy and the Dental Darts.

Dave Knecht burned the nets for 16 and Eddie Burke was right behind with 15 as the Peacocks rolled over the Med Scalpels, 52-33. Sharpest of the Scalpels was Lou Phillips with 13.

The History boys also had an easy time of it, mauling the Med Maulers, 49-27. George Melton was the big gun, scoring 22 points, while Ben Hammett topped the Maulers with 10.

Jamerson Presented Honor Award For PE Contributions

A 1962 Southern District Honor Award has been presented by the American Association for Health, Physical Education and Recreation to UNC Professor Richard E. Jamerson for his "many outstanding contributions to the field of physical education."

The award was made recently in Little Rock to Jamerson, who served as varsity swimming coach for UNC for a number of years and chalked up a record of 107 wins and only 15 losses. He is now freshman swimming coach and his frosh teams have had a won-lost record of 43-9.

In presenting him with the award, the Southern District cited his exceptional work as "a professional leader, school board member, and community organizer."

Jamerson is a graduate of Rice Institute and the Teacher's College of New York, where he completed study for the doctorate degree. He came to UNC in 1938. He has served as president of the College Swimming Coaches Association of America, and served as committee chairman and secretary-treasurer of the College Physical Education Association, before his election to the presidency of that organization this year.

Spring Sports Start Soon

Spring sports action will be heavy next week as the varsity baseball travels south for games with Florida, Vanderbilt, and Georgia Southern, while the track and tennis teams open their seasons at home.

After taking second in the Indoor Track season, Coach Dale Ranson's men open the outdoor season next Tuesday against N. C. State on the Fetzer Field track. Don Skakle's tennis team hosts Dartmouth of the Ivy League on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Carolina's golfers will be busy next week, meeting Dartmouth's golf team Tuesday and Wednesday and Michigan State on Friday and Saturday. All matches will be on the Finley Golf Course.

Golfers Open Season In Florida Tourney

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Coach Ed Kenney's UNC golf team opens its biggest schedule in history this afternoon when the Tar Heel linksmen begin play in the Florida Intercollegiate tournament at Ocala, Fla.

The Tar Heels, who last year finished with a 4-4 record (2-4 in the ACC), have scheduled 17 dual meets. In addition to the tournament beginning today, Kenney's linksmen will play in the Southern Intercollegiate at Athens, Ga. in May and the ACC Championships at Winston Salem.

Pete Green, a senior from Franklin, Mich., will captain and play number one man for Carolina this year. The Blonde All-American tied for medalist honors in the ACC meet last spring with a 36-hole total of 142.

Beginning their first year as varsity performers for Carolina will be sophomores Abe Andes of Miami Shores, Fla., Jere Ayers of Greensboro, and Harvey Hill of Plymouth. Senior Sam Duckett, out for the first time, is also slated for action.

The Newport, R. I. native gave up tennis some years ago to concentrate his efforts on golf. He became an assistant golf pro at the Old Town Country Club in Winston Salem before coming to Carolina in his present position in 1949.

Supporting Green will be five returning lettermen and four newcomers. Kennedy expects big things from lettermen John Brabson, a senior from Charlotte, Jay Harris, a junior from Mebane and seniors George Murphy of Greensboro and Dinny White of Durham.

Peace Corps Conference Opens Today

Dr. Paul Geren, deputy director of the Peace Corps in Washington, will open a two-day college conference on the Peace Corps here tonight when he speaks to student delegates attending the first North Carolina Peace Corps Conference.

Approximately twenty colleges are sending delegates, including the University of Tennessee, Randolph Macon and Sweet Briar colleges in Virginia. All others are North Carolina schools.

Chancellor William B. Aycock will introduce Dr. Geren in opening ceremonies tonight at eight o'clock in Howell Hall. Jim Wagner, student chairman of the campus Peace Corps, will welcome visitors and delegates. The public is invited to attend.

Other Peace Corps officials attending and participating in the Conference, in addition to Dr. Geren, are Lee St. Lawrence, Senior Staff Officer; Franklin H. Williams, Special Assistant to Director Sargent Shriver; Richard Graham, Deputy Associate Director for Public Affairs; Dr. Gregg Newton, Field Recruitment Officer, and the Rev. William Coffin of the National Advisory Board of the Peace Corps. Mr. Coffin, chaplain of Yale University, spoke in Chapel Hill last year.

Following the program in Howell Hall, there will be a reception for delegates and visitors in the main lounge of Graham Memorial. Several local folk singers will perform at the reception including Mike Hall, Dan Brock, Marinda McPherson, Gerry Matthews, Hans Frankfurt, Dick Mandell, Cherill Heaton, Joan Moser and a Carolina-Duke quartet who will play recorders. Bill Coffin will present the performers.

Saturday events include a morning symposium (10 a.m.) on the Peace Corps conducted by the Peace Corps officials, in Howell Hall, a luncheon in the Carolina Inn ballroom, at 12:30, and afternoon seminars on Peace Corps area programs, conducted by Washington officials and UNC faculty in Gardner Hall. An official Peace Corps test will be given at 2:30 in Gardner Hall to 53 North Carolinians registered to take it.

Annual Carnival To Be Saturday

Rides, booths and beauty queens will highlight the second annual Campus Chest Carnival to be held tomorrow on the Intramural Field beginning at 1:00 p.m.

Highlight of this year's event will be five rides including the merry-go-round, the merry mixer, the octopus, the ferris wheel, and the tilt-awhirl. Operation of the rides will begin just as soon as someone shows up to ride and will continue until the last person goes home. Tickets for the rides will be 25c.

There wil be over 50 booths in operation sponsored by various campus organizations. These will include a basketball free throw booth, a dunking machine, a hugging booth, a tricycle obstacle course, a greasy pole, and bingo booths.

Prizes will be awarded again this year for the best booth in different categories. Tickets for the booths are five cents each.

The King of the Carnival will be crowned this year by Susan Woodall, the reigning Miss North Carolina. Last year's king was Dr. Alfred T. Brauer of the Math Dept. This year's contestants are Doug Sessoms, Charles Bernard, Dr. Earle Wallace, and Dr. A. P. Hudson. Votes are a penny apiece, and votes may be cast in Y Court.

Food and Drink

Booths will also be set up for those who get hungry while attending the carnival. There will be popcorn, peanuts, cokes, ice cream, and cotton candy. Homemade food has been donated by the Chapel Hill Newcomer's Club and by the Episcopal and Catholic Church Women's Leagues.

A Campus Chest parade will be held today at 3:00 p.m. to publicize the carnival.

Featured in the parade will be appearances by Susan Woodall and Mary Ann Henderson, the current Miss Chapel Hil. Doug Clark's "Hot Nuts" and the AFROTC Band will provide music, and the parade will also include the Yack Court and David Lobdell, the Ugliest Man on Campus.

Billy Graham Says Colleges Are Scene Of Conflict Today

'Pie In Sky Religion Not Christianity'

By BILL WUAMETT

UNC was challenged last night to start a spiritual regeneration of man that would spread across the country as Billy Graham spoke to an overflow crowd in Memorial Hall.

He offered what he considered to be the "best solution" to man's dilemma in an age characterized by revolt, fear, escapism, philosophical uncertainty and spiritual emptiness.

"Man's problem is himself," he stated, "and his soul is stricken by an outmoded disease called sin. The cure lies in a change in man's dilemma" and then offered faith as an answer.

Need Of God Cited

"I cannot demonstrate God," he said, "I have to accept him by faith. I was not converted by intellectual endeavor, but by pure, naked faith.

"Man is by nature a worshipful creature, and needs a God — even if it is one of his own creation."

A "pie in the sky" religion is not the religion of Christ, he stated, "It is going out and helping our fellow man. "It is action directed toward your fellow man and not toward yourselves.

"This is not the full solution," he said, "but will create a new atmosphere of opportunity that will bring man nearer to solving his dilemma."

Basic Problem Is Man

Man's basic problem is not social reform or the spread of civilization to the backward parts of the world, he said. When we solve our material problems, we still have problems with man himself.

"That which makes man hate, bear prejudices, cheat and steal — this is man's dilemma with himself."

In an age where man is about to blow himself up, "faith can bring the inner peace and security that may bring man nearer to coping with his dilemma."

He stated that he knew that "all will not agree with me, but I have come to present my case in answer to our dilemma."

Evangelist Supports State Universities

By HARRY W. LLOYD

Evangelist Billy Graham, on a one-day stopover in Chapel Hill, said in a news conference yesterday that "the battle for the mind of mankind may be decided in the halls of learning."

Graham, the Charlotte native who made his first return to the campus after a 10 year absence, disclosed that he will devote the latter part of next year and much of 1964 and 1965 to crusades at various colleges and universities in this country.

"The greatest number of those attending our services in Latin America were college students, Graham said. "The battles I see are emerging in the universities. The communists are not making any inroads among the minds of the masses. I see a religious curiosity on campus that I did not detect ten years ago.

"Students in the western world are searching for something to believe in. They have created a religious inquiry.

"I spoke at Vassar not long ago. The officials there told me to expect about 200 to 300 students. I gave the address in an auditorium seating about 1,400 and it was completely filled. Following the address, we were supposed to break into small discussion groups. We met in a smaller room, and there were over 400 students there. We took them in groups of fifty, and weren't through there until after midnight.

The Baptist evangelist said that state-supported colleges could fulfil a student's spiritual needs as well as religious schools, and may do a better job. "A student may come out of a secular school with much stronger belief than he would have had by attending a school where his beliefs were not tested," he explained.

When asked if this country's colleges would have to raise their academic standards to higher levels in order to relieve crowded conditions, Graham said that he was in favor of high academic requirements. "I was amazed when I traveled in India, where the ate of illiteracy is so high," he said. "The academic standards are much higher there than they are in this country. But we should build more schools too."

The minister, who has held crusades on six continents, said that his warmest remembrances came from little personal experiences. "One of those was in New Zealand. I was in bed at night after preaching and a college senior, majoring in philosophy, came to see me with what he called a very urgent problem. We talked there in my room for at least an hour. Today he is a minister."

In reply to the questions of whether his crustades have had any lasting effects, Graham said that while Christ was preaching for three years, he drew very large crowds. "But when he was crucified, only a small, dedicated minority remained with him. But would you say that his cause was a failure? Much of our work is carried out by one person.

"In 1934, I was converted in an evangelistic meeting in Charlotte. Only a small group came forward that night, but it now includes eleven ministers, among which are me and my associate, Grady Wilson. A columnist writing in the paper the next morning said that the meeting was unsuccessful."

Graham said that his movement was in no way connected with the anti-communist movement, but that he was encouraged by the advances being made by the churches in Russia. "Atheistic propaganda hasn't been able to squelch belief in God," he said. "Lenin gave the churches the right to open up, in hopes that other protestant churches would run out the Orthodox church. The revivals were so successful that Stalin closed the churches until the Russians went to war against Germany.

"People in Russia go to church only at tremendous costs. The children of church members are not allowed to attend the universities. They are only given the most menial of jobs. But the churches in Russia are still crowded. There is one Baptist church in Moscow, but it is filled five times every Sunday. For every active believer, I am sure that there are many secret believers.

"There are many differences among people—in races, languages, and cultures, but there is a common denominator spiritually. The belief in God is innate.

"No man has gone so far that he cannot be saved by God. If I had 30 minutes to talk with Khrushchev, then I would tell him what he could do to become a Christian."

Graham said that he was in full support of the Peace Corps program. "It is giving a necessary challenge," he said.

" 'American young people are searching for a creed to believe in, a song to sing, and a flag to follow,' Dr. Pusey has said.

"John Glenn is now the idealism of an American hero. He combines the intellectual with the physical, the spiritual, and the moral. He isn't afraid to get up and say that he believes in God."

Graham's visit was sponsored by the UNC YM-YWCA. He met with this group in a luncheon yesterday, and spoke last night to the student body in Memorial Hall. He will speak at Camp Lejeune Sunday, and at Wake Forest College two days next week. On March 26 he will be at Harvard. He begins another Latin American tour later this year.

Shining Coeds Grab Scuffy-Shoed Males

By CHUCK MOONEY

"We've collected $59.81 as of today," said Cam Taber, chairman of the Carolina Women's Council Shoe Shine project.

"People have been so wonderful about giving," she said. "We haven't shined that many shoes. We've been given a lot of tips."

Volunteer coeds from dorms and sororities across the campus have been shining shoes at 25c a shine in Y-Court since Wednesday. The money will go to the Campus Chest.

The girls have gone all out to get customers, asking all passers-by to stop for a shoe shine. They won't accept any excuses for not stopping.

"I have a class," one boy yelled.

"I've got a quiz," another boy pleaded.

"Study while we shine," a second girl said.

"We even have delivery service," a third girl added. "Leave your shoes while you're in class and we'll bring them to you after we shine them."

Much to the girl's surprise, a third boy, who was hurrying into the snack bar, left his shoes to be shined while he went in and got some coffee — in his stocking feet.

The girls have had a few hecklers too.

"How long have you been shining shoes, little girl?" asked a student.

"Since nine. How about a shoe shine for the Campus Chest?" she said.

Another boy asked, "Working your way through school?"

"Yeah, get a shine for the Campus Chest," a different girl quipped.

"We'll wash all the socks that we've accidentally polished, too," said one of the girls after getting several complaints.

Professors have also joined the ranks of customers. Dean Henderson, Dean Long and Housing Director James Wadsworth all bought shines Wednesday.

Not all donations were for charity though. One student bought a shine for psychological reasons.

"It'll be good for ego just to have a girl shine my shoes," he said and tipped them when they finished.

The girls are donating their tips to the Chest, as well as their time and energy. They will be shining shoes today in Y-Court from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. for the last day.

Under this rule, 80 per cent of the active members of the sorority must make a C average for the present semester or the sorority will lose rushing and pledging pri-

Second U. S. Astronaut Disqualified

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI) — U. S. astronaut Donald Kent (Deke) Slayton, scheduled to make this nation's second manned orbital flight, has been disqualified because of heart trouble, informed sources said Thursday.

The 38-year-old Air Force major has reportedly developed heart palpitations — a condition that could endanger his life should he be allowed to undergo the stresses of flight through space.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration NASA said it had "no comment" on the report.

Slayton was at Cape Canaveral earlier this week, but left by airplane earlier Thursday. He was believed headed back to astronaut headquarters at Langley Field, Va.

Slayton, one of the nation's seven "Mercury" astronauts for nearly three years, was to have gotten his crack at an orbital voyage within a few weeks, possibly May or June. The flight was planned as a three-orbit mission similar to that of spaceman John H. Glenn Jr.

It could not be learned immediately which of the astronauts would move up to Slayton's position. However, there was speculation the job would go to Navy Lt. Cmdr. Walter M. Schirra, who had been designated as Slayton's "back-up" man, or to Navy Lt. Cmdr. M. Scott Carpenter, who served in the same role during Glenn's flight.

The seven astronauts undergo numerous physical and psychological examinations in preparation for spaceflights. It was reported that Slayton's heart difficulties had shown up during one of these tests.

I Musici Gives Concert At 8 In Memorial

I Musici will present a concert in Memorial Hall Friday night at 8, sponsored by Graham Memorial in conjunction with the Chapel Hill Concert Series. The entire balcony will be reserved for UNC students and admission will be free upon the presentation of ID cards.

I Musici means the Musicians, and there are twelve in the group. The ensemble, comprising 6 violins, 2 violas, 2 cellos, a bass and a keyboard instrument, concentrates on Italian music of the 17th century.

The group sits in a semi-circle and plays without conductor or first violinist. Emphasis is on tone and ensemble. At times the orchestra suggests "the full-bodied sonority of an organ which can be accounted for by the purity of the Italian string intonation."

The name of the winning teams will be engraved on a large championship plaque kept in Woollen Gym. Individual trophies will be presented to the winners of each event.

Most Of It Is Uninformed

Criticism Of NSA

With both political parties putting a concentrated effort into salving the "problem" of NSA participation on his campus—with some ardent politicos re-writing the NSA charter in the bargain, it seems—some good results might be the end product.

NSA here, and to a greater or lesser degree at every affiliated school, is the target of a lot of less-than-skillful-aimed arrows loosed for political purposes. "Re-orienting and reforming NSA" has been a rallying cry in more than one campus in recent years. Schools pop into and out of NSA with the regularity of a coo-coo in a well-oiled clock. Behind the ins and outs are usually to be found one or more "dedicated" young campus politicians ready to hoist a banner spelling out FOR or AGAINST—often without knowing exactly why they are either.

This year, the familiar pattern will probably be duplicated—but with one important difference. This year NSA delegates will be popularly elected along with the big four officers, legislators, and the others who share the spring election ballots.

This method of choosing delegates will make some important differences in campus attitudes toward NSA. Currently, most of the campus either does not know what NSA is all about, or oppose it. Many people fit into both categories.

The level of discusion about NSA on this campus is generally abysmally low. Students speak in supergeneralities about "misrepresentation," "oligarchical control," "dogmatic Leftism" and a bucketful of other ills that someone told them existed in the NSA framework.

Some of it has basis. Generally, however, criticism is leveled at the organization out of ignorance rather than well-thought-out opposition. How many of those who scream "ologarchy," for instance, know that NSA functions along the most democratic of lines? How many, in fact, have more than a vague notion of how it functions at all? Both parties this year are sponsoring a slate of four candidates for NSA delegates. All eight candidates have a good working knowledge of NSA. Their opinions of it, in most cases, will be well-founded in facts. All are articulate and can get their ideas across.

Suggestions will probably come thick and fast when these eight begin seriously campaigning. We feel sure that listening to them will strenthen NSA on this campus. The most outspoken criticism, when it becomes criticism, will cease to exist.

Subsidize 'The Worker'

The United States Court of Appeals, with good cause, has stayed the six months sentence given James E. Jackson, editor of THE WORKER, for contempt of court, originating in his refusal to answer questions put to him in District grand jury proceedings.

In his refusal to answer, Jackson invoked the Fifth Amendment, on the grounds that his responses would be self-incriminating. The merits of that legal argument apart, there are other grounds on which the imprisonment of Jackson, while injuring him, would injure the country more. At least one question asked was an affront to good sense, and another was an affront to the press freedom. The U. S. Attorney asked: "Does the editorial policy of THE WORKER reflect the viewpoint of the Communist Party, U. S. A.?" More seriously he asked: "Have the leaders of the Communist Party ever suggested the subject matter of THE WORKER'S editorials?"

If the inspiration for editorial comment is an appropriate matter for legal inquiry in this case, it may be equally appropriate in the case of newspapers summoned before grand juries for offenses having nothing to do with communism. And if the press is accountable to authority, in this manner, its freedom to criticize and comment is going to be seriously inhibited.

In a larger political sense, it is to be deplored that the editor of THE WORKER must be harassed at all. By the publication of the puny rag he edits, he is keeping alive, at no risk whatever to this country ,a smybol of press freedom, liberty and tolerance which is so valuable to this Nation that it would be worth subsidizing THE WORKER if it could not be kept going by any other means. It will be nothing less than folly if zealous officers of the law now step in and, by jail sentences and legal action, rescue this innocuous publication from the utter ignominy of its absolute failure to maintain enough readers to survive. There are not many boons that authority could confer that would do communism more service than a jail sentence for Jackson.

The Men In Kenya's Future

Editor's Note: Emilee Hines of Nathalia, Va., was a UNC student last year and worked at the Computation Center. She is now teaching in Machakos, Kenya.

This is the second of a three part series on the present situation in Kenya.

Who are the men who will rule Kenya after UHURU? What threats and promises have they made? How influential are they?

The Kenyan receiving the most attention at present is probably Jomo Kenyatta, released last August after six years detention for his alleged activities with the Mau Mau.

During his detention he was wooed by both Kenya African National Union and Kenya African Democratic Union, chose KANU, and became President of the party after his release. He is revered by many Africans, who call him "Mzee", a complimentary term which means "the old man", or "the sage". He denounces the use of violence, but is fiercely determined that Kenya shall be ruled completely by Africans, not Europeans. He claims that all land belongs to Africans, but it is not to be given to them free. Landless ones should buy land from the government with thirty-year loans.

Iron Curtain

Vice President of KANU, A. O. Odinga, is a colorful, flamboyant figure more noted for his pranks and costumes (he often appears at Legislative Council in skins and sandals) than for his ability. He has been repeatedly accused of having accepted money from the Communists, and last year had his passport seized by immigration officials when he returned from visits to Iron Curtain countries.

Tom Mboya, General Secretary of KANU and head of the Kenya labor unions, is perhaps the man to watch. He has until recently stayed out of the spotlight, hence has no political enemies. He has the support of the workers, and has made no inflamatory speeches against Europeans or Asians. He has had more experience in world politics than the other African leaders, has recently returned from Israel with a loan for the workers of Kenya, and is thought to be a moderate.

While others scream threats, Mboya says "KANU and KADU have different opinions, but that is no reason to fight. Mr. Ngala is no hyena waiting to devour us. He is ready to listen to our point of view, as we are with him." (EAST AFRICAN STANDARD, February 5, 1962.) Mboya urges cooperation, and hard work.

Extreme Threat

Paul Ngei, who holds no official position other than being one of the Legislative Council (Leg Co) members from Machakos, has perhaps received an undue amount of attention. He loses no opportunity to speaks before crowds, and screams that Europeans must leave Kenya, that their land will be seized, and any compensation which the owners receive will be the responsibility of the British Government. He has a sizable following because of his extreme threats, and his promises of something for nothing.

Of the forty-four tribes in Kenya, the three largest are predominantly KANU supporters. A few tribes are not allied to either party (for example, the Somali, who demand the right of secession from Kenya regardless of which party wins). A few are politically unawakened, such as the Turkana, who are not even interested in independence. The remainder of the tribes belong to KADU, including the Masai, Kalenjin and Kipsigis. Europeans and Asians generally support KADU also, as KADU has given them greater assurances of security, and has on the whole made more concrete plans for uhuru, including the consulting of a Swiss expert on financial matters.

Whistle To War

KADU's leaders are not so colorful as KANU's, but they hold more responsible positions in the present government. KADU's President, Ronald Ngala, is Leader of the House (Leg. Co). Masinde Muliro, Deputy leader of KADU, is Minister of Commerce. KADU's W. C. Murgor is Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Internal Security, and a leading Asian member of KADU, J. Jamidar, is Minister for Works.

Since KADU's tribes fear domination by the three tribes of KANU, they demand regionalism in the new government. If there is no regionalism, their tribes will rebel. Mr. Murgor said in a January 14 speech: "If the British Government rejects our regionalism policy at the London constitutional conference I will sound a whistle to my people declaring war, and that will be the beginning of civil war." (East African Standard, January 15, 1962.)

One of the freedoms ADU wants assured in the "bill of rights" is the freedom from intimidation. This is a result of repeated instances of intimidation of Africans and Asians by the KANU Youth Wing, a delinquent group which has gotten beyond the control of the main party.

At this point no one in Kenya predicts which party will be triumphant, or exactly what solution the London Conference will offer to the thorny problem of a government for Kenya.

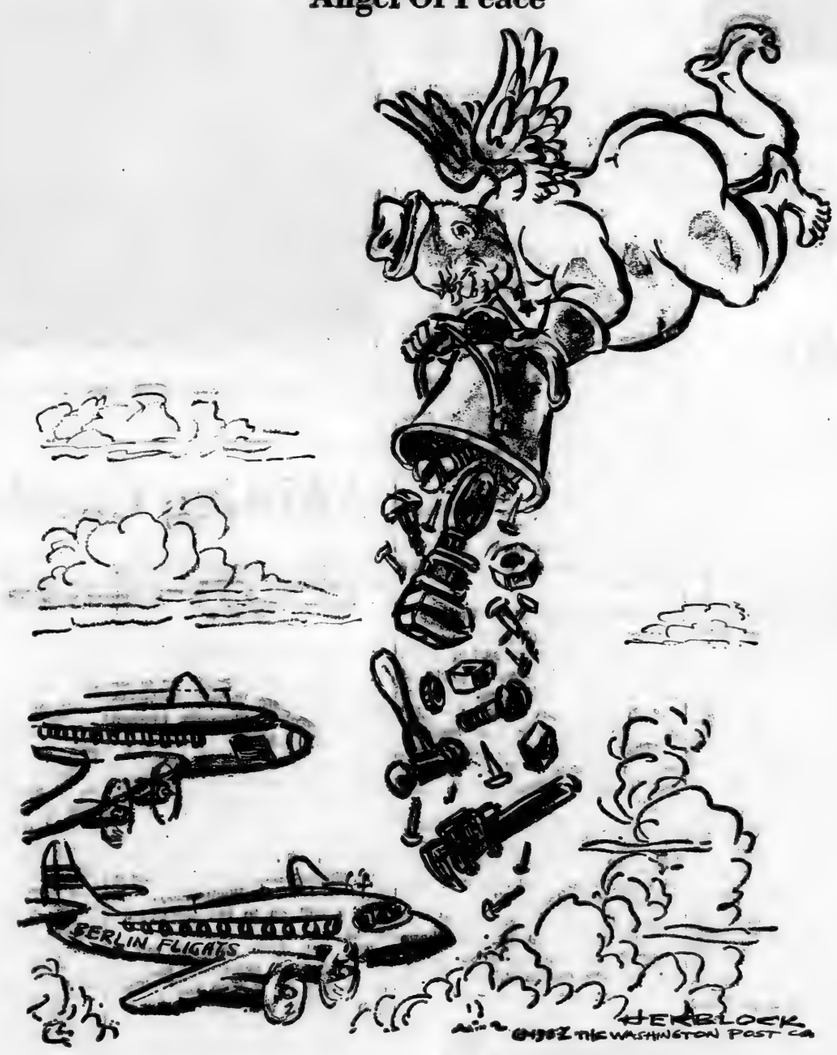
TOMORROW: Why the Whites of Kenya Are Leaving.

Angel Of Peace



Independents State Platform

Many members of the U.N.C. student government have accepted this little campus world. "No, no," they say, "student government should not speak on the vital issues that affect our destiny, nor should it do anything to encourage an awareness of these issues." As a consequence, they have tied their own hands. The election campaigns have become farcical comedies. No really enlightening discussions result from them, only childish, inane gibberish.

There is only one way to create an awareness within the student, and that is to go directly to him, wether he be in the dormitory or the fraternity.

We believe that the office of the president and vice-president are the two starting points. They, by their very nature, are the focal point of student attention. It is much easier for these offices to create the necessary conditions for political awareness because they can contact on-campus and off-campus groups necessary for discussion and action.

Admittedly there are many important political issues; but for us as students, two seem to dominate our discussion: disarmament and integration. As members of the younger generation we desire to some day be members of the older generation. And present trends in many ways darken our hopes of attaining this position. As for integration, this is a moral issue that we as students must resolve within ourselves and in the community if we are to create a better world.

The following are our proposals for the creation of this political awareness on our university campus:

(1) The establishment of graduate seminars in disarmament and peace issues, open to interested graduate and undergraduate students.

(2) The establishment of undergraduate study projects both inside and outside the curriculum, in collaboration with faculty members already in the field.

(3) The organization of a student speakers' bureau of those who have studied the issues and have something to say to the community both inside and outside the college.

(4) Preparation of articles on relevant issues for the DAILY TAR HEEL, student magazines and dorm newspapers.

(5) The circulation of student newsletters on campuses throughout the area to promote inter-school co-operation.

Campus Chest Drive Boosted

Each year the Campus Chest undertakes several projects to raise money to be given to various charitable institutions. It is not the fact that the group of individuals directly involved with the Campus Chest are working for these worthwhile aims, but the opportunity that they give each student, which is of most significance.

Through the several projects of the Campus Chest and the Solicitations Drive itself, we, as individuals have the opportunity to do a great service to ourselves and to our fellow man. I am sure that all of us will meet this opportunity with a spirit of generosity and appreciation.

—INMAN ALLEN
UP Candidate for President of Student Body

To the Editor:

As most people are aware, the Campus Chest is Carolina's only charity. When one donates to it, the contribution is helping to support five different charities. It presents an excelent opportunity for student service reaching beyond the limits of the campus.

Many freshmen have already availed themselves of this opportunity by assisting in the planning and publicizing of Campus Chest activities. I urge all other members of the class to make their contributions both through the fund drive and by attending the Campus Chest Carnival.

Letters To The Editor

'We're Confused'

Dear Miss T. J.,

We, of third floor Aycock, were very interested in your opinion of Southern manhood. But we are slightly confused. You first describe us as having a superiority complex and then procede to cite examples that could be characteristic only of an inferiority complex.

Since you have such an aversion for apologies, we assume that you did not apologize for your own shortcomings, such as your being late or your sending your date searching fruitlessly for your lost shoe.

We wonder why you signed your letter with the anonymous T. J. Are you afraid that you will not get any more dates with these sickening men at UNC.?

We suggest two solutions to the problem that seems to plague you so. Either do without dates or "Yankee Go Home!"

—JIM HUNEYCUTT

Editors note: This letter was also folowed by ten other signatures.)

To T. J.,

Our Gentlemanly ears are burning. Why man, we had no idea that Carolina Coeds felt this way! I'm sure that most Carolina Gentlemen agree with me in saying we are truly sory. Please accept our most humble apologies.

You are completely justified in wishing that your dates would show their intelligence. We again apologize for our unfounded ignorance.

Most of us we must apologize for our inability to provide for you Carolina queens as you deserve. After all most of you are members of the elite, and by God you should have the best of everything.

Please, please, please accept our apologies for apologizing so much. If you can find room in that tremendous heart of your to forgive us, we will repay your kindness by telling you a little secret. If a survery were to be taken, the results might show that a large number of the Carolina men for which you search were in Greensboro this past weekend, displaying their fabled good manners and sexual prowess where they are appreciated.

Minister Attacked As Impractical

To the Editor:

I should like to reply to the frightened Rev. Henry Ratliff.

Mankind's chief objective is perhaps peace, but better a free peace. Ministers who shiver in their sandals from fright of a nuclear war should, rather than squirmingly appeal to their flocks of sheep, take confidence in the government officials who have been trained and elected to make decisions concerning national policy.

If this horror or nuclear war should happen, then we endanger ourselves by not being prepared. If such a war develop, I think the rabbits opposing nuclear testing would prefer to be on the winning side. Perhaps the best way to prevent partial or entire nuclear destruction of the earth is to take a stand and match power for power and threat for threat. The U. S. is not going to win (if such a war can be really won or lot) by serving the whims and gaining the sympathy of tenagers, preachers, and malcontents.

Again, a better objective for confused Americans might be freeing the neck of the world from the approaching noose of communism and promoting freedom first, and second a peace where everyone can talk and yell and write what they think and believe. Where everyone gets enough to eat, and all girls can put roses in their hair and scream on rollercoasters, and all men can do the work they choose and still have time to appreciate life and spring.

—R. HEILMAN

To the Editor:

Reverend Henry Ratliff may be a welfare of mankind foremost in his dedicated minister, and have the thoughts and prayers, but is overlooking realism when he implores the citizens to write to President Kennedy to postpone thermonuclear testing. He implies that the President's course will result in war.

I am a Republican and my political beliefs oppose Kennedy and his party's philosophy. As President, it is his duty to maintain our military preparedness. We no longer have geographical isolation as an ally. Therefore, if further atomic testing is necessary for our national safety, I'm for it.

Field Answered By William Dowell

Doc Field has made some pretty serious charges which should be answered either by him or by the Student Legislature.

If, as Doc Field says, the resolution passed by the Student Legislature was unconstitutional or illegal by any part of the Student Government constitution or by any law that now exists in Student Government, then action should be taken.

I personally think that Doc Field's charges were so much hot air. I think that he is coming very close to slander when he calls something unconstitutional and illegal with out backing his statements. I frankly do not think that he can back his charges with out creating his own divine right or his own constitution. The Student Legislature has been operating under the Student Government constitution and under the Student Government laws, not under those of Doc Field. I should like to see his charges backed point by point with the Student Government Constitution and laws.

WWH Veterans May Convert Insurance To Permanent Plan

More than two-and-a half million World War II veterans who have not converted their term insurance to premanent plan policies may use an easy-stage method of making the change, J. D. DeRamus, manager of the North Carolina VA Regional Office, pointed out today.

Both the law and VA regulations permit these term policyholders to convert as little as $1,000 to a plan with fixed premium amounts, in order to avoid the periodic increases in the cost of term insurance.

Mr. DeRamus said by converting $1,000 a year for the next ten years, the full amount of a $10,000 policy will be in pemanent plan insurance within a decade.

He further pointed out that annual dividends may be used in the process to reduce the cash outlay.

Permanent plan policies available to World War II term policyholders are ordinary life, 20-payment life, 20-year endowment, endowment at age 60 and endowment at age 65.

Permanent plans have certain values which term policies do not have, including loan value, cash surrender value, and an extended insurance value.

16 Schools Send Delegates To Symposium

An Intercollegiate Seminar with delegates from 16 different schools will again be held in connection with the Carolina Symposium.

The seminar will hold closed morning meetings for the 21 delegates from both in and out of state and will also be attended by the main symposium speaker of the night before, a member of the UNC faculty and several Carolina students.

The seminar program was started during the 1960 Symposium and has been copied by the University of Virginia. Representatives from as far south as the University of Georgia and as far north as Pembroke College in Providence, R. I., are planning to attend.

The visiting students will arrive Sunday afternoon, April 1, for an introductory meeting at 4 and will leave after lunch on Wednesday. They will be housed and fed in sororities and fraternities.

Assembly Room To Be Changed To Study Hall

The Library Assembly Room will be converted to a study room with facilities for about 125 students as soon as new furniture can be installed, Student Body President Bill Harriss announced Wednesday.

The Administration has begun preparations for ordering the furniture and hopes to have the room ready in time for spring exams, according to Presidental Assistant Dwight Wheless.

Wheless said it is hoped that social sciences and other basic texts for required freshman courses can be provided in the room itself.

Plans now call for 21 large tables and 126 chairs in the room in addition to improvement of the lighting system.

Playmakers Set Dates For 3 Tryouts

Tryouts for three new one-act plays to be presented March 30-31 will be held Sunday at 4 p.m. in the Playmakers Theatre.

"What Did You Lean in School Today?" by Hank Johnson of Forest Hills, New York, will be directed by Gordon Clark. This is Johnson's second play to be produced by the Playmakers this year. Clark is a graduate assistant in the Department of Dramatic Art at UNC.

"Indian Summer," by Gail Place of Bradford, Pa., will be directed by Larry Randolph of Ft. Smith, Ark. Both are graduate students in drama and Randolph is a technical assistant in the drama department.

"Waiting for Eden," by Douglas Young of Chapel Hill, will be directed by Sandy Moffett. Young is a former drama student at UNC. Moffett, a dormitory adviser, is a graduate student in drama.

There are roles for seven men and four women in the productions. All students and community people are invited to try out. This will be The Carolina Playmakers second bill of original one-acts for the current season.

Tomatoes are the No. 1 truck crop in the United States.

Beau Geste Is Next Feature To Be Presented By Society

"Beau Geste," a 1926 silent movie based on P. C. Wren's famous tale of Foreign Legion adventure, will be shown to UNC-Chapel Hill Film Society members at 8 p.m. Monday in Carroll Hall. The original musical score, which accompanied the film when it was released has been taped and will be played with the picture.

Directed by Herbert Brenon, a Dublin-born stage actor and director who in films became known as a 'spectacle' director, "Beau Geste" epitomized all that was romantic in the era. In it were some of the top stars of Hollywood: Alice Joyce, Ronald Coleman, Neil Hamilton, Noah Beery, Sr., William Powell, Norman Trevor, Victor McLaglen, Mary Brian and Ralph Forbes.

The picture won Photoplay's Gold Medal Award in 1927, a year before the first academy awards were given. Its opening sequence of a desert fort manned by dead legionnaires remains one of filmdom's greatest. When re-made by William Wellman in 1939, with Gary Cooper, the original version was duplicated scene for scene in the new.

A short showing of wardrobes of Garbo, Clara Bow and other famous stars of the Twenties, will precede the main feature.

A few memberships for the remaining five programs of the Society's spring series are available from the Film Society committee.

Assistant to the Dean of Women, Nancy Adams, said that the probation may be removed if certain active members whose grades are not yet available, get C's or better.

The overall sorority grade point average for the fall semester is 2.503 as contrasted to 2.163 for fraternities. A previous article in the DTH announced ten fraternities on probation with two losing spring rushing and pledging privileges.

NSA Sponsors Seminar In US Affairs

A National Affairs Seminar for students will be held in Washington the week of April 13-19, sponsored by the National Commission of the National Student Association. Interested students should contact Student Body President Bill Harriss by Friday. The week will cost approximately $45 .

NSA is promoting the seminar in an effort to "focus student thought and to develop informed leadership capable of mounting effective action on domestic problems."

The seminar will center around such national issues as federal aid to education, academic freedom vs. internal security, civil rights, the role of news media, the domestic Peace Corps, problems of economically deprived groups, and the political process.

The 1961-62 basketball season is down to its last nine days. Ohio State won the mythical national championship by topping the voting in both press polls, but it didn't go undefeated. Jerry Lucas has been selected the player of the year, but once more a perfect season evaded the talented All-American and his team mates. And Fred Taylor, the Buckeye coach, is the coach of the year, but how could he miss?

At midseason there were jokes that the Ohio State team should be limited to four players on the floor when Lucas was in the lineup or that the splendid Buckeyes should all play with one hand tied behind their back. That could have proved interesting, but Wisconsin turned back the top-ranked boys without those stipulations, and by the surprising score of 86-67.

And so, remembering that any team can be a giant killer on a given night, we'll venture forth with the following predictions for the regional basketball playoffs coming up this weekend in College Park, Md, Iowa City, Manhattan, Kan., and Provo, Utah.

Eastern Regionals at College Park:

Wake Forest over St. Joseph's—The Demon Deacons received a big scare Monday when Yale almost pulled a first round upset. The Hawks defeated Wake twice last year and once this season, but by only two points on their home court. St. Joe has never played on the court at Maryland's Cole Field House, Wake has. This home court advantage is slight, but coupled with the experience of Bones McKinney's men and the inexperience of Jack Ramsay's sophomores, it'll mean a narrow Wake Forest victory.

Villanova over NYU—Villanova trampled an already-crippled West Virginia team in the first round, and NYU toyed with Massachusetts. Hubie White leads Villanova, while two sophs, Harold "Happy" Hairston of Winston-Selm and Barry Kramer are the sparkplugs for the Violets. Ex-State College frosh Mark Reiner starts at guard for NYU. White's scoring will emerge victorious over the well-balenced NYU lineup.

Regional championship: Wake Forest

Mideast Regionals at Iowa City:

Kentucky over Butler—The combination of Adolph Rupp's coaching and the play of Cotton Nash and Larry Puriful will lead the Wildcats to a walk-away victory in this contest.

Ohio State over Western Kentucky—This Kentucky school also plays good basketball, but the Buckeyes are still thinking about that loss to Wisconsin. Win No. 24 for Ohio State.

Regional championship: Ohio State

Midwest Regionals at Manhattan:

Cincinnati over Creighton—The defending champs had to defeat Bradley in a playoff contest to defend their national title. They won't get off the streetcar at the first stop. Conducting their victorious trip will be Paul Hogue, Ron Bonham, Tom Thacker and a host of revenge-minded Bearcats. They want another shot at Ohio State.

Colorado over Texas Tech—In the tough Big Eight Conference Colorado had to beat out Kansas State for the NCAA tourney berth. Texas Tech, a Southwest Conference team, can't cope with the Buffaloes. The winner, regardless, plays its final game on Saturday night.

Regional championship: Cincinnati

Western Regionals at Provo:

UCLA over Utah State—Utah State gets to play in its home state, but the UCLANS had to beat out some tough competition in Southern California and Washington to get into the tournament. They'll get past the Utah State crew.

Oregon State over Pepperdine—Oregon State boasts seven-footer Mel Counts who an opposing coach once quipped about: "He's a good center, and if he were cut in two he wouldn't make a bad pair of guards." Pepperdine come from the league that produced San Francisco's national champs a few years back, but Counts and company will eliminate them easily.

Regional championship—Oregon State.

Winston Wieners, Phi Delt Blues Cop Basketball Titles

By JOHN MONTAGUE

The Winston Wieners and Avery Addicts battled right down to the wire in Tuesday night's Dorm White basketball championship, the Winston quint finally pulling out a 30-28 victory. Frank Gallagher's 11 points was a big item in the Wieners' total, while Bill Aycock put on a one-man show for the losing Addicts with a 16-point performance.

TUESDAY NIGHT'S INTRAMURAL CAGE SCORES

Peacocks 58, History Grads 42 (Grad Semi-finals)

ATO Rooters 28, Chi Psi Styles 21 (Frat White Semi-finals)

The Delta Sig's missed what would have been the tying basket in the closing seconds of Wednesday's Frat Blue Cage Championship, and the Phi Delts walked off with the trophy, 47-45.

The talented trio of Billy Hubbard, Riley Pleasants and Jerry Evans did most of the offensive damage for the champs, scoring a total of 37 points. But it was Delta Sig's own inability on the foul line which was the real difference in the closely fought game. The losers hit on only nine of 20 free throw chances, while the winners converted 11 out of 18, a figure which, though not spectacular, was at least superior in this case.

Deacons Meet St. Joe In Playoffs

By ED DUPREE

Wake Forest carries the banner of the Atlantic Coast Conference against St. Joseph's of Philadelphia tonight at 7:30 in the semi finals of the Eastern Regionals at College Park, Md.

St. Joseph's proudly carries the championship flag of the Middle Atlantic Conference, despite the fact that last year's regional champs were hit hard by the basketball scandals and graduation.

Only two St. Joe regulars returned to play for Coach Jack Ramsay, guards Jim Lynam and Billy Hoy. Six-footer Hoy and 5-9 Lynam join 5-9 Harry Booth and 6-0 Bob Gormley in Ramsay's in-and-out backcourt.

The Hawks' guards have put the pressure on opposing backcourt men all season while playing about 20 minutes each and these ballhawkers have been chiefly responsible for St. Joe's success this year. Their pressing defense has resulted in numerous steals and intercepted passes which enabled the Philadelphia boys to come from behind in 12 of their games. Their overall record is 18-8, Wake Forest's is 19-8.

Ramsay's Hawks made the NCAA playoffs the hard way, winning three straight conference games by coming from behind. They were behind 17 points against Delaware with five minutes left, 18 down to Lafayette with nine minutes remaining in the game that pushed them into the Eastern Regionals.

While Wake Forest trimmed Yale 92-82, in overtime, Villanova stomped West Virginia, 90-75, and NYU humbled Massachusetts, 70-50, St. Joseph's drew a bye to pit them against Wake in the semi-finals. Villanova and NYU clash in the second game of the regionally televised tilt.

The probable starters at guard should be Lynam and Gormley, while 6-5 center Tom Wynne, the team's high scorer with a 19-point average, 6-3 senior forward Bob Dickey, and 6-3 soph forward Jim Boyle round out the starting five. Boyle was sidelined on Feb. 18 with an appendectomy, but returned to the lineup in the playoff contest with Temple to score 13 points as he and Wynne paced the Hawks to their victory.

The Baptists from Winston-Salem, coached by Rev. Bones McKinney, have won ten straight games. After being rated third in the nation in preseason polls, the Demon Deacons ran up against the Ohio State Buckeyes and it took them half the season to crawl out of the temporary grave they dug for themselves.

St. Joe is no stranger to Wake Forest. The Deacons remember the Hawks well for losses the Philadelphians have inflicted in them during the past two seasons.

In 1961 the Hawks took Wake by two points in Winston-Salem in a regular season game. Then Hoy and Lynam teamed up with Vince Kempton, Jack Egan, and Frank Majewski to gain a berth in the Eastern Regionals. In their semi-final game with Princeton at Charlotte, Kempton, Egan, and Majewski teamed up with gamblers and shaved points, but St. Joe won the game and advanced to the Eastern finals against the Deacons. Without the point-shaving, the Hawks trimmed Wake, 96-86, to advance to the NCAA finals.

Earlier this season, when the Deacs were still having their troubles, St. Joe edged past them, 65-63. So, revenge would be sweet for the Forsyth County boys.

All-American Len Chappell, 6-8, soph Frank Christie, 6-4, and lanky Bob Woollard, 6-10, form Wake's front line. The backcourt starters will be Dave Wiedeman and Billy Packer. Packer is a wee 5-9, Wiedeman two inches taller.

How well the Deacs fare against St. Joe could depend on the ability of Packer and Wiedeman to play flawless ball against the tough zone press which Ramsay employs.

And how well the Pennsylvanians do depends on their ability to stop powerful Chappel, the high scorer in 27 consecutive games this season for Wake.

OSU's Fred Taylor Named Top Coach

By NORMAN MILLER

NEW YORK (UPI) — Fred Taylor of Ohio State, who in a sense had the easiest and yet the most difficult coaching task in college basketball, Thursday was voted the United Press International coach of the year for the second straight season.

The 35-year-old Taylor, a big-time college coach only four years, was elected in a nationwide poll of basketball writers and radio-TV broadcasters. Taylor received 79 of the 181 ballots cast, compared to 30 for runnerup Adolph Rupp of Kentucky.

Taylor's Buckeyes won 23 of 24 games during the regular season to earn the No. 1 ranking of the UPI board of coaches for the second year in a row. Ohio State starts play in the NCAA tournament Friday night against Western Kentucky.

There are many who might say that a squad which included the likes of all-Americans Jerry Lucas and John Havlicek and such supporting stars as Mel Nowell and Doug McDonald made Taylor's a "rocking chair" job.

There are at least as many who will argue that the task of maintaining a superlative record with a star array presents its own set of problems.

Taylor Triumphs

Taylor had to prevent individuality from harming the brilliant team play that had won for Ohio State in the past. He had to keep his Buckeyes "up" for each game and forestall complacency and boredom.

He had to guide the Buckeyes through the pressures of a tough schedule in which they were a marked team in each game. At Christmas time, for example, Ohio State competed in the Los Angeles classic, toughest of the holiday tournaments. And they won 2,000 miles away from home in a field that included Utah, UCLA, West Virginia, Purdue and Southern California.

The Buckeyes faltered only once this season. That was against Wisconsin, March 3, when they lost 86-67 at Madison, Wis.

This is the third straight year that Taylor has guided the Buckeyes into the NCAA tournament. They won two years ago, beating California in the final, and lost in last season's final to Cincinnati, in an overtime game.

More Than 50 Booths Featured

Stilt racing, donkey pole, and a limbo contest will highlight the action as the annual Campus Chest Carnival gets under way at one o'clock today at Intramural Field.

Other attractions will be rides, booths, basketball, beauty queens, and the crowning of the King of the Carnival. The King wil be crowned by Susan Woodall, the reigning Miss North Carolina.

Votes 1c Each

The present king is Dr. Alfred T. Brauer of the Math Dept., but he will be dethroned today by either Doug Sessoms, Charles Bernard, Dr. Earle Wallace, or Dr. A. P. Hudson. Votes are a penny each.

There will be over 50 booths sponsored by various organizations, and prizes will be given for the best booth in each category. Tickets for the booths will be five cents each.

For those who do not approve of the basketball team's foul shot percentage, there will be a booth in which students can compete against the team in a foul shooting contest.

Other booths will include lady wrestling, a tricycle obstacle run, garter throw, bingo, golf pitching and a dunking attraction.

Rides

Rides will feature the merry-go-round, the merry mixer, the octopus, the ferris wheel and the tilt-a-whirl. Tickets for the rides will be 25 cents, and they will begin as soon as someone shows up to ride and will not stop until there is no one there to ride.

For those who get hungry from all the activity, food will be provided in booths set up by the Chapel Hill Newcomer's Club, and by the Episcopal and Catholic Church Women's Leagues.

The food booths will have popcorn, peanuts, candy, cokes, ice cream and cotton candy.

'Four Horsemen' Flick Set

As a program 'extra,' the UNC-Chapel Hill Film Society Sunday night will show "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse", starring Rudolph Valentino in this original version of the Blasco Ibanez novel on the First World War. A Harold Lloyd short, "Never Weaken", will also be shown.

Tickets for the special showing, to be held in Carroll Hall at 8 o'clock, are not a part of the Society's regular series. They will be available at 75c from committee members and various professors and students selling them on campus. All proceeds from the showing will be donated to the Carolina Symposium.

Catapult To Fame

"Four Horsemen" catapulted the then unknown Valentino into stardom and as one of cinema's all-time great personalities. He was born Rodolpho Guglielmi in Castellaneta, Italy, on May 10, 1895. His mother was French and his father a captain in the Italian cavalry. Rudolpho was sent to military academy and then to the Royal Academy of Agriculture. After a short period in Paris, the future screen 'lover' came to New York in late 1913.

After short jobs in cafes and landscaping on the estate of Cornelius Bliss, Jr., Valentino began earning his living by dancing. While touring in a musical comedy, "The Masked Model," he landed in California and was encouraged to try the movies. He appeared in a couple of minor roles with Carmel Myers and as a "heavy" in a Dorothy Gish comedy when June Mathis discovered him and demanded that he be given the part of Jukio, the Argentinian tango dancer and libertine of "The Four Horsemen", a role calling for death on the battlefield. The film became one of the greatest grossers of all time.

Short, Dramatic Life

Valentino's life was dramatic but short. He was operated on in Polyclinic Hospital for peritonitis on August 23, 1926 and died that day. His body was laid out in a funeral parlor on upper Broadway, and 50,000 people broke police lines, smashed windows and rioted to get a glimpse of it. Hundreds of people were injured and souvenir hunters were everywhere. Pola Negri, whose assumption of 'widow's weeds' had angered many women, fainted dramatically and was lifted unconscious into her car. She was later thought to be the 'woman in black' who daily put flowers on Valentino's grave.

Appearing with Valentino in "Four Horsemen" were Alice Terry, Joseph Swickard, Alan Hale and John Sainpolis. June Mathis produced and adapted the Ibanez' novel, and Rex Ingram directed. The picture was released in March, 1921, at the Lyric Theatre in New York and received a tremendous reception. The greatest screen lover of all time was born.

Information about tickets to Sunday night's showing may be obtained by calling 942-1033 in the evening.

Diversification Cited In New Art Exhibit

By RICHARD BURNS

The second exhibit of "Paintings Upstairs," Chapel Hill's local art outlet, is currently featuring 25 works of "great diversification," according to co-owners Jane Haslem and Eleanor Smith.

This show, which began March 11, is composed of abstract, semi-abstract, and realist forms. "When we selected the material for this show, we tried to pick something for everybody," Mrs. Haslem said.

Three welded steel sculpture works are also featured in the show. One of these, "Knight," by Dwayne Lowder, has already been sold for $150. The other two, "Figure" and "Angel," are creations of Robert Shannon, well-known artist.

The owners encouraged "promising artists to bring in their work." They are trying to set a "standard of quality which will give buyers coming here something worthwhile to see."

Need For Local Gallery

"Paintings Upstairs," which is located at 113 W. Franklin St. directly over the "Country Store," was begun on Feb. 12. Said Mrs. Haslem:

"There was a great need for a place to show local art." She added, "Since Chapel Hill is a somewhat cosmopolitan town, its artists needed a good outlet."

The first show was described as "very successful, at least 500 people came to see it."

A Candidate....

Tempers flared in GM Thursday afternoon following a Constitutional Council decision upholding the Elections Board ruling on UP vice-presidential candidate Larry McDevitt's campaign expenses.

The Elections Board had ruled that the cost of printed cards distributed by McDevitt prior to his nomination by the UP did not have to be included in his statement of campaign expenses. The Board ruled that since McDevitt was not officially a candidate, according to the student Constitution, when he distributed the cards, they were not to be regarded as campaign literature.

The Constitutional Council, headed by Honor Council Chairman George Campbell, upheld the Elections Board ruling on the same grounds.

Student Government officials later pointed out that the members of the Constitutional Council had been selected improperly, and another hearing on the matter is scheduled for Sunday, after proper selections according to existing regulations are made.

All in all, it seems to have been a pretty sad showing. Although it is evident that McDevitt acted within the letter of the law, he knocked hell out of the spirit of it. The Elections Board seems not to have taken the intent of the ruling on campaign expenditures into consideration. The purpose for setting a limit on expenses is to insure that campus politics — which are rotton enough as it is — do not degenerate into contests between bankbooks. The regulation was not written into the elections laws to give campus politicians just another rule to evade.

To rule that a candidate is not a candidate merely because he has not yet gone through the formal filing procedures is outright bunk.

Most candidates are alrealy running hard long before any official announcement is made. McDevitt himself apparently considered himself a candidate. The cards he distributed pointed this out clearly enough with the designation "Larry McDevitt, Candidate for Student Body Vice-President."

There is already enough political chicanery going on here without the Elections Board and the Constitutional Council getting into the act with rulings that carefully avoid the real question. Both bodies, we are sure, ruled as they did on the supposition that McDevitt acted in good faith. This is a position we subscribe to wholeheartedly. McDevitt requested the hearing himself, and we in no way want to suggest that he was consciously violating the election laws.

We do feel, however, that he was in error in assuming that the expenses of printing the card would not be considered a campaign expense. The Constitutional Council and the Elections Board merely compounded that error by ruling on letter of law rather than spirit of law.

The sooner both errors are corrected, the better.

Governing Bodies Should Lead In Civil Rights, Not Follow

The North Carolina Advisory Committee to the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights has offered some sound advice to the General Assembly and city councils throughout the state.

It declared that state statutes and city ordinances are still sprinkled with outdated laws requiring segregation of races in certain public and private facilities.

Why not, the committee asked, wipe clearly discriminatory laws off the books instead of awaiting costly and drawn-out litigation?

Why not indeed? Why wait for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People or the Congress of Racial Equality to act? Why not do what is clearly indicated without awaiting outside pressure.

Statutory requirements on segregation in North Carolina have never been as extensive as those in other southern states. But we maintain a large number which appear both unnecessary and unconstitutional.

Some areas of contact between the races are more sensitive than others, of course. But there are classic examples in the state of barriers which have been removed with no adverse effects — such as those in public libraries.

The wise course of action would be for the General Assembly and city councils to examine all of their laws and ordinances with an eye to elimination of race barriers where such a course seems dictated by changed attitudes and legal precedents.

The advisory committee correctly pointed out that the existence of many of the laws is an invitation to misunderstanding, confusion and violence.

". . . . the danger is," said the committee report, "that so long as these compulsory statutes are on the books, some private citizens are more than likely to take it upon themselves to try to enforce segregation.

"Assaults and affrays, with each of the participants thinking that he is right, may follow, and when the policeman is called, he, too, is likely to be mistaken as to where his duty lies . . ."

Governing bodies should study these matters carefully and take into consideration prevailing local attitudes in determining the speed at which they move.

However, since they clearly can no longer justify many of these practices under the law, it would be wise to initiate and guide change rather than have it come through outside pressures.

Emilee Hines

The Whites Are Leaving

Editor's Note: Emilee Hines of Nathalia, Va., was a UNC student last year and worked at the Computation Center. She is presently teaching in Machakos, Kenya. . . .

This is the last of a three part commentary on the situation in Kenya.

* * *

"Yes, we're going," Kenya Europeans admit frankly. "What is there to stay for? To have our cattle stolen, our houses broken into, rocks thrown at our cars? That's happening already. Should we wait and see what will happen after uhuru? Not me! I'll tell you what will happen: the same thing that happened in the Congo."

This was a farmer speaking, but one hears the same sentiments from people all over Kenya, in all jobs. There is no security for one's job, one's property, or even one's person. Theft and armed attack are increasing, and the European hears even small children scream at him: "Mzungu, kwenda kwetu!" (European, go home!)

From a teacher: "I'd planned to teach in Kenya the rest of my life, but I'm going to look for another job when I go on leave in April. There's no assurance of a pension, or even my job, out here! How do I know what will happen after uhuru? I just may be given my check and told "Thank you very much. Kwa heri." (Goodbye.)

An administrator reports, "Who knows where we'll be or what we'll be doing next year at this time? Africanization is going on all over the place. I'm training the man to replace me, but he doesn't know how to go about the work. Hasn't a CLUE! I'm glad I'll not be around to see the mess."

Another administrator, a District Officer, says, "I'm going in June. I could stay longer, but I figure I'll be kicked out sometime, and it's better to go now instead of in ten years when I'll be married and have a family to support. I'm luckier than most out here. I have my college degree and business experience. The ones it's toughest on are the older men. They came out when they were young, and they're not trained for anything else. They're going to have it rough. You know what it's like to try to find a job after you're forty?"

With A Penny

A wealthy Asian contractor whose family also owns a tea plantation and processing plant, two lumber businesses and an automobile agency, is disbanding the Nairobi part of the businesses. "We're getting what we can out before the Africans take it away from us. There's nothing we can do about the tea plantation, of course, but we're investing what we can get in Persia. My father came to East Africa in 1927, without a penny. He worked hard, and saved, and invested. We're millionnaires now, but next year at this time, we may be penniless." He shrugged. "I suppose I can go somewhere and start from nothing the way my father did."

Many owners of large farms have sold their property, and are merely waiting for the current crop to be harvested. "We sold just in time," one admits. "The farm is worth 60,000 pounds (about $180,000), but we only got 30,000 pounds. We were lucky to get that! No one wants to buy. The Europeans would be foolish to buy, the Government hasn't any money left to buy with, and the Africans think they'll get it all free. They've already staked out what part of the farm they're going to take. They'll let it go to pieces. They think when something breaks, Old Man Johnasen will be there to repair it, or when they need money, they'll go to a bank and take some out. My father came to Kenya when he was a young man, and bought this farm, and worked on it. While he was building dams and drilling wells for irrigation, and clearing land and sowing pastures, the Africans were off hunting or drinking beer and leaving their women to work in their shambas. Now they say the land is theirs!"

$280 Fine

Even doctors, so sorely needed by East Africa, are leaving. An Asian doctor's wife states bitterly, "You saw what happened in Tanganyika. The same thing will happen here." (Tanganyika gave doctors the choice of working in government clinics or being fined 100 lb. ($280) per month for private practice.)

Many merchants would like to leave, but find no takers for their shops and inventories. Sales of automobiles and machinery have slumped. Hardware, appliance and furniture stores are hard hit. Only sales of food, clothing and liquor have remained steady, and night club attendance has increased.

Where are they going? "I'd go to South Africa, except that they're having trouble too," a farmer answered. "I don't know. Australia, New Zealand, Canada. Maybe the States. Somewhere a man can be free — and safe," he ended wistfully.

I'm A Fool

Is anyone staying? "We are," an Asian family reports. "We contribute to both parties so they will not persecute us later."

"I'm staying, but I'm a fool," a farmer says angrily. "The Africans have stolen me blind. In the last eight months I've had 112 sheep stolen from me, and almost any morning I'll find my wire has been cut and African cattle are grazing on my land. But I'm staying. I've no place else to go. I was born here. I'm an African even if my face is white, and I love this country. Besides, I'm getting old. I can't make a start somewhere else." He ended sadly, "I don't much mind how they treat me, but I'd like something secure for the children."

An Italian engineer also plans to stay. "Why not? I make a good salary here, and I send half of it home every month. I have no family here to worry about, and I don't own anything here but my car. If things get bad, I will pack my suitcase and get on a plane."

But at the rate people are leaving, all the planes may be full.

Intolerable Barrier?

To the Editor:

In regard to your article concerning textile barriers, I do not see how you can call them "intolerable." They are vital for the preservation of the textile industry, not only here in the South, but all across the country. Already there have been many textile plants in the North that have been forced to move South or to sell out because they were not able to keep pace with the imports.

This is easy to visualize when one considers the difference in pay scales and labor wage laws of the foreign countries and the United States. Foreign goods can be sold much cheaper than American goods and yet more profit can be made from them.

I worked for J. P. Stevens & Co. this past summer, and I can assure you that they are doing their best to compete through improved production methods. Efficiency, quality, and progress are bywords for them. Each day new ideas are tried in the hope of bringing better products at lower cost to the American consumers and the world market. The other manufacturers are doing likewise, for they realize the necessity of such a program.

Yes, the American consumer is placed at a disadvantage, but at least he is purchasing the finest material when he buys American textiles. No other country can equal the quality of the goods made in the United States. It is not the textile industry alone that is being protected by these barriers, but the American people themselves. Is this not worth "intolerable" laws?

Creative Prof

To the Editor:

Never underestimate your circulation, nor your impact on readers many miles away. While in St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, with the U. S. Navy I received from home a section from the Raleigh NEWS & OBSERVER containing a reprint of your article recalling Associate Professor John Ehle's comments on the decline of the creative atmosphere in Chapel Hill.

I wish more professors recognized the value of creativity and the need to encourage, develop, and perhaps even teach it. Yet all too often we found academic success meant parrotting the words of textbooks and professors — a task which in itself demands no deep thinking nor does it demonstrate a workable knowledge nor even an understanding of the subject. The only value is that we have for a short term memorized the words of these learned men and thus have proof of exposure to the thoughts of others which must once have been the product of the creative process.

It would seem that one purpose for teaching music should be to bring forth composer, for teaching poetry to bring forth poets, for art to bring forth artists, and for literature to bring forth writers. To appreciate the contributions of others is only half an education. We must also be taught to make contributions of our own.

To the Editor:

The Junior Class has initiated and undertaken many projects this year, proving beyond any doubt, the value of class officers and class activities at Carolina.

The Junior Basketball Classic featuring Lennie Rosenbluth's All-Stars, served as the initial money making project. With these funds the Junior Class was able to sponsor a combo party in February and one in March with Doug Clark's "Hot Nuts". There will be another combo party at the American Legion Hut in April at the same minimum charge. The officers also undertook the responsibility of getting permission granted for 2 p.m. curfew Saturday of Germans.

Another program introduced this year was the Faculty Award of the Month which recognizes outstanding campus professors.

In order to achieve more effective operation of class activities, all Cabinet meetings were and are open to every member of the Junior class. Also, to increase efficiency, Walt Ratchford was appointed to serve as class Secretary to the Administration and Bill Brake, Secretary to the Student Government.

Now in the planning stage is a benefit concert sponsored by the Junior Class for the Campus Chest Charities.

—JUNIOR CLASS CABINET

To the Editor:

Tonight when four ways had parted and the campus political situation had been thoroughly discussed —wildly, flippantly, occasionally seriously — I was left wondering how people, and what sort of people, set out to make this a better campus.

Undoubtedly there some who, lost in their thoughts and plans behind wrinkled brows of utter seriousness, plan and execute campaigns. This is a grave matter to be sure — for the prestige, achievement, and very self-reprect of these leaders often seem to depend on it.

Each year the same parties come up with synthetic ideals (planks) for their platforms, and their candidates are affirmed by the campus; for whether their minds are gifted or their words sincere need not concern an election.

When once the offices are filled, I'm sure the officers do their duties with competence and concern — for most any student elected to public responsibility will do the same.

Some will, of course, accomplish more than others.

But so little authority now belongs to the student government, and so little social influence to the student body (under the present arrangement), that some may well display a cynic's grin at those who take themselves and the components of their temporary environment so seriously. We have all been interrupted and amused by the ultra-committed candidates who storm our rooms, enraptured by themselves and their campaigns, insulting our intelligence with a sales pitch basically meaning this: "Vote for me because I am!"

Should we individuals waste the happiness, freedom and laughter which we can now so well enjoy, for the sake of any organized abstraction? Minds become tense and tangled when we forget how to laugh at ourselves. I would turn my eyes away, at least occasionally, from this little world of sophisticates, to the wonders of springtime, the ideals I would aspire to, and the mystery of man. As concerns this campus, society will protect its college students, and we won't fare badly here.

On the other hand, who will protect society?

Inherent in college traditions, and especially those of this university, is an exuberant, mass, unrestrained new voice on social issues. Building an impressive political background, amassing extracurriculars, further the chaotic complexity of student functions, do not seem to characterize our tradition, nor a desirable state of mind for us at present. Yet such has become the University of North Carolina.

None of us need get perturbed over carrier current or the Bell Tower. But when revolution flames throughout civilization and the problems of humanity are such that both human dignity and our very human existence are in question — will this student body be silent?

Poetical Potshots

At a bistro, a chap name O'Reilly
Said, "I've heard these martinis praised heilly,
But they're better by far
At the neighboring bar
Where they're mixed much more smoothly and dreilly.

A rascal far gone in lechery
Lured maids to their doom by his treachery
He invited them in
For the purpose of sin
Though he said 'twas to look at his etchery.

There was an monk in Siberia
Whose existence grew steadily drearier,
Till he broke from his cell
With a hell of a yell
And eloped with the Mother Superior.

Said a potentate gross and despotic,
"My tastes are more rich than exotic.
I've always adored
Making love in a Ford
Because I am auto-erotic."

There was a young lady named Maud,
A sort of a society fraud.
In the parlor, 'tis told,
She was distant and cold,
But on the veranda, my Gawd!

Russia Announces Satellite Launch

MOSCOW (UPI)—Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev Friday announced the successful launching of a new Russian satellite and boasted of a new global rocket which could attack the United States from any direction and render its radar defense screens obsolete.

He said the Soviets' new intercontinental missiles were "invulnerable" to American anti-missile missiles and could circle the earth and attack from any direction before a warning could be sounded.

The erection of the Distant Early Warning DEW and other radar warning system was just a waste of money, he said. He accompanied this statement with a new appeal to the West to accept the Soviet disarmament proposals at Geneva.

The official Tass news agency said the satellite launched Friday was not manned and carried only scientific instruments to carry out tests for further space exploration. It said Russia would carry out a whole new series of space launchings during 1962.

Khrushchev made his announcements in an hour and 35-minute election speech in the Kalinin district where he is running unopposed as a candidate in Sunday's Supreme Soviet Parliament elections.

Pressures Talks

Western observers said he obviously was trying to put pressure on the disarmament negotiators at Geneva by telling of new Soviet rocket achievements. At one point he warned that it is impossible to evolve any warning system against missiles so only a disarmament treaty remains for protection.

Khrushchev ranged from sarcastic to paternal as he told of Soviet rocket and missile gains. He explained in these words how the global rockets would make obsolete the distant early warning and other radar warning systems:

"The American military wanted to fence themselves off with some kind of barrier from a retaliatory blow of the USSR.

Prof. Koziebrodski Is Author Of Book On Right Of Asylum

New aspects of territorial and extraterritorial (diplomatic) asylum are fully covered in a recently published book by UNC Acting Associate Professor Leopold Koziebrodzki of the departments of economics and history.

Entitled "Le Droit d'Asile" ("The Right of Asylum), Professor Koziebrodzki's book was published by the Dutch firm of A. W. Sythoff of Leyden.

Professor Koziebrodzki treats both types of asylum in great detail, tracing the historical evolution of each. Traditionally, each type of asylum is usually treated apart without connection. Dr. Koziebrodzki, however, emphasizes the fact that both kinds of asylum have the same purpose — that of insuring the protection of individual liberties.

Asylum To Refugees

Territorial asylum is the granting of asylum by a country to refugees of other countries. Extraterritorial or diplomatic asylum is the more controversial of the two, since it involves the interference of a foreign country in another's relations to its own subjects.

Prof. Leopold Koziebrodzki

One of the points Dr. Koziebrodzki treats in his book is the lack of modern day interest in diplomatic asylum. He maintains that the right of asylum should be linked with the United Nations charter's statement of the principle of the protection of human rights.

UN Dilemma

Dr. Koziebrodzki points out that the UN is involved in a dilemma on the matter of asylum. On the one hand, the UN has proclaimed respect of human rights and freedoms for all to be one of its purposes. On the other hand, the charter says that the treatment of a country's own citizens is a domestic affair where the UN should not interfere. Since the UN has provided, in its charter, machinery for adjusting certain situations which endanger friendly relations between nations, Dr. Koziebrodzki makes suggestions how this machinery could be utilized for the settlement of possible conflicts over the practice of asylum.

Playmakers Have Sold Out, Reviewer Claims

By NEILL CLARK

REVIEW: ONLY IN AMERICA, by Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee, from the novel by Harry Golden. Directed by Harry Davis, with setting by Tommy Rezuto, Costumes by Irene Smart Rains, and lighting by Russel Graves. Playmaker Theatre thru Monday, curtain, 8:30 p.m.

RECIPE: Take a southern town, a social problem, a yankee writer and throw them into a barrel. Make a brine of borsht-circuit gags, legendary southern yokelry and syrup-of-shmaltz, and add to that a few herbs of Yiddish wisdom and sprinkle freely with crumbs of cracker-barrel philosophy. Let it pickle for a while and you come out with something that's not quite kosher, but is sure to warm the cockles of the box-office. With this show, the Playmakers have sold out in more ways than one.

Biography

The play is a folksy biography of Harry Golden, editor of "The Carolina Israelite," covering the period from his arrival in Charlotte, North Carolina, through the difficult early days of publishing his controversial paper until he achieved a nationwide recognition, and climaxing with the public disclosure that he had served five years in a federal penitentiary. In synopsis it sounds imminently dramatic, but on the stage it is like a long, slow yawn intermittently broken with smiles, chuckles, and a few genuine guffaws.

You'll laugh as Harry Golden twits your prejudices; you'll be touched when his pretty Negro secretary tells how her parents' white employers never knew that Negroes had last names, but you'll cringe when Kai Jurgensen as Harry Golden puts on a baseball cap (his thinking cap) takes a sawed-off broom handle (his bat), walks to the center of the stage and begins to swing at the air, informing us (in what seems to be complete seriousness) that he is "batting out ideas." Obviously he struck out.

It is disappointing that the inventor of the Vertical Negro Plan could also be portrayed as capable of this monumental piece of corn.

Disappointing

It is also disappointing that the collaborators who made such an exciting, tightly-constructed play out of the Scopes Trial, Inherit the Wind, were unable to do anything more with Mr. Golden's book than give us a rather animated oral interpretation. It is still more book than play, in which the I-Narrator, Harry Golden, stands around like a burlesque comedian and bounces quips off a series of straight-men.

Kai Jurgensen, as Harry Golden, bears the burden like a trouper, but the script keeps him so busy being clever that he hardly has a chance to be a human being. He is much like a court jester giving a command performance before a mad tyrant who has threatened to have him killed should he let up for one moment. As a result, in the scene where he is faced with a real-life crisis, he seems awkward and unconvincing. But as Golden the Compulsive Comic, he handles the incessant stream of gags with the skill of a true showman, and keeps the show from falling flat on its "tukkas."

Genuine Warmth

Esther Alexander is charming as Helen Cheney, a Cornell graduate whom Golden finds working as "a domestic" (i.e. scrubbing floors) and hires as his secretary. She radiates a genuine warmth and naturalness that has long been absent from the Playmaker Stage. The rapport between Miss Alexander and Mr. Jurgensen is a redeeming grace. Hopefully, this is not an example of "token integration," for the Playmakers can use natural talent like hers.

Golden, like a Charlotte Sholem Aleichem, reviews a parade of supporting characters with whom he exchanges jokes and anecdotes. First is Mrs. Archer-Loomis, a dizzy dame from the D.A.R. accurately played by Bonney Wilson. Then her young son Herbert, who by some quirk of fate or the costume department, doesn't change clothes in five years, and with his posing and sucked-in cheeks looks like a Vogue model masquerading in Jackie Coogan's old clothes. Then come the Bobsey Twins from the moving company, wearing what looks like aqua-colored pajamas and reminding one of what a funny pair Marlon Brando and Jack Oakie would make.

New England

Kit Ewing as Fred, Golden's first subscriber, shows more New England Neighborliness than Southern Hospitality. I. Birnbaum, the Jewish clothesmerchant, is played effectively by Alan Solter, with just the right trace of dialect and mannerism to be convincing, however his make-up looked like a telescopic photograph of Mars from where I sat.

As Velma, a shady lady of Charlotte, Betty Selzer was a little too adequate, and by contrast, Edith Hinricks as Golden's wife, Kate, was not quite enough. Graham Pollick as the dignified, reasonable southern lawyer was both dignified and reasonable but also seemed rather tired of the whole business.

The Committee of the North Carolina Senate was pointedly and tellingly depicted by Randolph Vanberger, Dwight Hunsucker, Peter Maupin and David Samuel Sheps—full of sound and fury, signifying nothing. Also worth mentioning in that scene, but rather distracting too, were the stenotypist's shapely legs, and when Rhoda Blanton came on as Dr. Leota Patterson, Ph.D., one couldn't help thinking of a movie called "Sexpot Goes to College."

Direction Irritating

The direction was often irritating, with speakers being blocked from view or delivering lines upstage or into the corner, or up into the flies. And when are directors ever going to stop sending actors to gaze out the window or wander aimlessly downstage, or turn away from the person they are speaking to and stare at the floor whenever there is something serious or important or moving to be said?

As for the setting, it would have saved much discomfort to both audience and actors alike had there been at least a physical suggestion of a door. All night long actors opened it different ways, stuck their hands through it, one put his nose through it and on one memorable occasion as if exasperated by it all, Mr. Jurgensen took a running start and with arm outstretched like a halfback, ran through both of them.

Theatre Conference

This play coincides with the annual meeting of the Southeastern Theatre Conference, which is being held at Durham this week. Representatives from drama departments all over the Southeast have gathered to discuss their programs, find out what other groups are doing, and probably measure their own progress by that of the others. It is probably fairly accurate to say that they all look toward the Carolina Playmakers for leadership, and are greatly influenced by what is happening on the stage of this campus. And what do they see? Shakespeare? Checkov? Ibsen? Moliere? No. O'Neil, Wilder, Williams, Miller. Uhh. Uhh. Harry Golden and Lawrence and Lee.

This was to be a "special show" —something they could take back with them in the way of encouragement and inspiration which they would impart to their students, the people who will be the actors, directors, playwrights, designers, dramatic teachers and community theatre organizers of tomorrow. As far as I can see, they would be likely to learn more about business administration than dramatic art.

Drama Critic

Last year, an imminent drama critic asked "Does the American Theatre have a future?" He didn't seem to think so. And if this production by the Playmakers is any indication of the future of the theatre, I'd be inclined to agree with him, or stay home and watch television.

P.S. But don't let a "bitter ol' cynic" discourage you. It got four curtain calls Wednesday nite.

Houston Leads, UNC 3rd In Golf Tourney

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

UNC's Jay Harris, a junior from Mebane, shot a three-under par 69 Thursday to tie for second place at the end of the first round of the Florida Intercollegiate Invitational Golf Tournament in Ocala, Fla.

The University of Houston, led by their fantastic Homer Blancas, who fired a blistering 66, led in team scoring after the first day of action with a 10-under 278.

Besides Harris, Houston's Kermit Zarlye and Mark Hopkins were also at 69 in the deadlock for second behind the leader, Blancas. Rollie Lamontange of Rollins College was third with an even par 72.

The University of Georgia was second among the 11 teams entered with a four-man total of 292. UNC was third going into yesterday's play with 297.

The teams played 36 holes yesterday and wind up the tournay this afternoon with an 18-hole round.

Three Tar Heels Go West For National Mat Finals

UNC WRESTLING COACH Sam Barnes will accompany three of his wrestlers, Pete Gilchrist, Dick Blackman, and Willis Johnson to the NCAA national championships on March 22, 23, 24, at Stillwater, Okla. Barnes coached his team to another second place finish in the ACC this season behind scholarship-laden Maryland. The Terps will be at the Oklahoma A & M mats for the championships and are the pride of the ACC, but the powers will be Lehigh, Army, Oklahoma, Oklahoma A & M, and some of the Big Ten schools.

Making the trip are Pete Gilchrist, senior from Charlotte; Dick Blackman, junior from Whiteville; and Willis Johnson, junior from Asheboro.

Sam Barnes, Carolina coach, will accompany the group. Stillwater is where Barnes attended Oklahoma A & M, a perennial wrestling power, on a wrestling scholarship.

Both Gilchrist and Blackman bettered the school individual scoring record for a season—which was 30 points. Gilchrist finished high with 36. Blackman had 32. Both were runners-up in the ACC meet in their respective weight divisions—the 130 and 157.

In the nationals, Johnson will wrestle in the 130-lbs. division, Blackman at 137 lbs., and Gilchrist at 147 lbs.

Grade A dairy farm income in North Carolina rose from $18,750,000 in 1948 to $56,500,000 in 1960.

Durham Holds Gymkhana For Sports Car Drivers

A gymkhanna, featuring low-speed events of driving skill for sports cars only, will be held Sunday at Northgate Shopping Center in Durham.

The event, sponsored jointly by the Sports Car Club of America and Northgate, will begin at 1 p.m. and last until about 5. There is no admission charge and the public is invited.

Jim Moss of the Sports Car Club, chairman of the event, announces that silver awards will be made to 12 top competitors, who will come from Piedmont and eastern North Carolina and a portion of Virginia.

An estimated 40 drivers are expected to enter the gymkhanna, which will feature intricate maneuvers through a pre-arranged course. Three different courses, laid out with rubber nylon markers, will be used in the skill-driving contest.

During the harvest months of October-December, 70 to 75 per cent of the corn shipped out of Coastal Plain North Carolina goes to the Piedmont. The remaining 25 to 30 per cent goes out-of-state, mainly to Delmarva.

OSHKOSH, Wis. (UPI)—Oshkosh State College students Friday claimed a "room-jamming" record. They said they squeezed 153 persons into a 9 by 12 foot room.

UNC, NCS Swimmers Compete In Easterns

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The Carolina entries include sophomore backstroke star Thompson Mann and ACC 220 freestyle champion Willie Bloom.

Bloom, Williams, Bilbo, and Schiffman will make up Earey's freestyle relay team, while Mann, in addition to swimming in the backstroke events, will team with Swift, Bilbo, and Schiffman to form the medley relay group. Carolina won both these events while capturing the conference meet.

ED SPENCER, N. C. State's All-American butterfly swimmer is one of the Wolfpack watermen competing in the Eastern Championships. Spencer took three first places in the conference meet in February, but the Raleigh swimmers finished third in the ACC meet.

North Carolina State College has four representatives at the Easterns, being held in the Yale University Pool. They are Ed Spencer, Pete Fogarasy, Bill McGinty, and Smokey Ellis.

Spencer, who took three first places in the conference meet, will swim in the 100-yard butterfly and the 220-yard freestyle races while Fogarasy, who also came aawy with three titles in the Raleigh races, will enter both breaststroke events.

Last year in this same meet, Fogarasy won the 200-yard breaststroke and took third in the 100 breast. Spencer also is a defending champion, having won both the 100 and 200 yard butterfiy races.

McGinty and Ellis will swim the 50 and 100 freestyle races and will team with the other two in the medley relay.

Princeton University began its 215th academic year last fall with its first woman student. She is Mrs. Sabra F. Meservy, mother of three.

Coffin Cites Purposes

Geren Outlines Corpsman's Work

By WAYNE KING

Using a delivery more reminiscent of a night-club than a parishouse, Freedom-rider, parapatetic Peace-Corps super-salesman and Yale Chaplain William Sloan Coffin told a crowd of Peace Corps enthusiasts yesterday that the Corps will help give direction to the U. S., both internally and in foreign relations.

Coffin spoke to abouf 140 persons at a luncheon held at the Carolina Inn as part of the two-day Peace Corps conference held here Friday and Yesterday. About 60 of the persons attending were delgates from a score of N. C. colleges.

The dramatic young chaplain, whose religious zeal is translated more often into action than platitude, punctuated his talk with quips, quotations and a repetoire of experiences drawn from personal experiences at home on the civil rights scene, and abroad with the Peace Corps and Crossroads Africa.

Coffin told his audience that while depressed countries participating in the Peace Corps progame need the U. S. economically, the U. S. needs them spiritually.

American Concern

Citing American concern with materialism, lack of acceptance of the Negro, and a decline of morality in the face of a numerical religious boom, the tall, husky Chaplain voiced his feeling that the Peace Corps will provide "the experience that Americans lack—an experience that will be heartwarming, soul-shaking and revitalizing."

"Returning Peace Corps participants," he said, "will give conviction to the American temper. Living, working, moving in countries which are striving not for luxuries, but for necessities, will provide a new attitude which this country badly needs."

He indicated that American "samaritanism and idealism," needs more expansive goals. "Opinion," he said, "is no substitute for conviction."

WILLIAM COFFIN

PAUL GEREN

Around the World

Coffin's own conviction has led him around the world, into depressed countries, through the heartland of segregation and into almost every area where he feels Christian conscience can be blended with action to produce results.

He has served as director of Operation Crossroads Africa, an organization which has been sending American students into Africa for several years. He is currently a member of the National Paece Corps Advisory Board, and led a Corps training program in Puerto Rico.

He helped in organizing and leading Freedom Rides through the Southern segregation belt—a project which netted him nation-wide attention and some time residing in Southern jails.

Roads Making People

He characterized the Peace Corps program not as "people making a road, but roads making people."

"Returning Peace Corpsmen", he said, "will have a redemptive force. They will have been given humanity—which, in turn, they will give to the rest of the country."

He said he felt that American emphasis on materialism for its own sake had deprived this country of part of its essential spirit. "There was a time," he said "when an auto mechanic crawled under an automobile with the same feeling that Michelangelo had when he lay flat on his back under the dome of the Sistine Chapel." Today's mechanic, however, crawls under a car with a feeling of immorality. Planned obsolescencee has made his job a degrading one."

Feeling

This feeling of immorality, Coffin said was indicative of a broader general feeling which he said he felt was beginning to permeate the American temper. The Peace Corps, he said, would help to offset that feeling by returning spirit.

Chaplain Coffin was introduced by Asst. Professor Herbert L. Bodman, of the History Depart-

By GARRY BLANCHARD

In his address officially opening a two-day Peace Corps conference here Friday, Deputy Peace Corps Director Dr. Paul Geren said the work Peace Corpsmen are doing represents a marriage of pragmatism and idealism.

He likened Peace Corps volunteers to builders who don't try to span great canyons at their widest points but work where the gaps are narrower and more readily bridged.

Middle Areas

He told his audience of delegates from twenty colleges in and around North Carolina that this work of practical idealism is being done "in the 'middle' area of the scale —not simply at the ditch-digging level nor at the expert level, but in the 'middle' area."

And in all this middle range of scales, he said, "assistance is given not in counseling but in doing."

The work of the individual Peace Corpsman "has as its focus the hinterland, the out - of - the - way place," he said. "He's speaking the language of the people with whom he works. He lives like his co-worker. He shares the life of the people."

Vigorous

In a vigorous, gesturing manner, Dr. Geren declared the Peace Corps has resolved not to become simply another agency, although it must be an agency because it has to deal with governments.

He noted that these governments, or host countries, are the "prime movers" of the Peace Corps. In requesting that volunteers be sent to their country, he said, they give the corps an opportunity to serve.

Introduction

Dr. Geren was introduced by Chancellor William B. Aycock, who expressed the University's pleasure at hosting the conference and said he hopes UNC will play an important part in the future development of the organization.

Jim Wagner, chairman of the UNC Peace Corps Committee welcomed the delegates and Peace Corps officials.

Dr. Geren's address was followed by a film on the Peace Corps in Tanganyika, and refreshments and entertainment at Graham Memorial.

Cooperation Is Asked in Space

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy has invited Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev to cooperate in five immediate space projects and eventual joint exploration of the moon and the planets.

The offer was made in a March 7 letter to Khrushchev made public today by the White House.

"The tasks are so challenging, the costs so great, and the risks to the brave men who engage in space exploration so grave, that we must in all good conscience try every possibility of sharing these tasks and costs and of minimizing these risks," the President wrote.

The White House said Khrushchev had not yet replied.

Ride Attractions Fail To Show For Carnival

By WAYNE KING
And JOE MASI

Campus Chest Carnival patrons and sponsors got taken for a ride Friday—but not exactly in the way they planned.

Ross Manning Shows, with whom Chest Carnival officials had contracted to supply rides, canceled at the last minute, leaving Chest Co-Chairmen Charlie Shelton and Jeannie MacDougall high and dry with too little time left to contact other agents, according to Shelton.

Trucks Said Loaded

Shelton said he contacted Ross Manning officials Thursday night in Loris, and again Friday morning. The trucks were loaded and ready to roll at 7 a.m. Friday, he said, but apparently were unable to travel because the trucks still bore 1961 license plates. Shelton said he was told the new 1962 plates were in the possession of owner Ross Manning, who could not be reached.

Shelton said he was not aware of the cancellation until Friday morning, and estimated that it would cost the Chest about $200 in Carnival profit.

Administration

The administration was notified of the cancellation when Shelton arrived back here Friday. No legal action has been taken as yet, according to Shelton.

It was estimated that even without the rides, the Carnival attracted over 5,000 people, who milled about among some 50 booths featuring varied fare ranging from co-ed dunking to pie-throwing and stilt-walking.

Although the absence of a large portion of its planned entertainment dampened some of the atmosphere at the annual Campus Chest Carnival, the 5,000 or so people who attended the one-day affair did not seem to lack the enthusiasm that Carnival day usually creates.

With more than fifty booths operating continuously throughout the long, warm afternoon, the attending crowd was given a wide variety of entertainment to choose from. The athletes in the crowd could challenge the basketball team to foul shooting, play miniature golf at the SAE booth, or climb the greased pole at the DU stand.

The less hard and less zealous were clustered about money games presented by Cobb and Lewis dormitories.

Jail

The Kappa Kappa Gamma jail was the only display in which participation was required. For a dime someone could swear out a warrant of arrest for anyone on the grounds, and a Deputy (most likely Connie Burroughs who probably set an arrest record!) was dispatched to haul in the "offender."

Peace Corps

Yesterday's full slate of activities climaxed the two-day Peace Corps Conference in Chapel Hill.

Significantly, the final major address, delivered by Yale Chaplain William Sloan Coffin, stressed not what the Peace Corps projects are doing for distressed nations, but what participation in the projects is doing for the U. S.—not in terms of improved relations with foreign countries, nor even containing communism. Instead, Rev. Coffin pointed to what the Corps has done in capturing the imagination of a nation jaded by its own economic success and slogging through a marsh of introspection.

Chauvinism, to Rev. Coffin, is possibly the rankest word in the English language. He says it with a family sneer, mocking it occasionally with a pointed comment. The Peace Corps, he believes, is combatting the special American brand of it by cutting artificial barriers imposed by national boundaries and internally-oriented thinking.

In this, he differs not at all from a statement issued by Gov. Terry Sanford early this week, designating yesterday Peace Corps Day in North Carolina. In the statement, Gov. Sanford states that "the enemies (the Peace Corpsmen) are fighting are disease and ignorance and poverty."

Gov. Sanford Coffin is correct in his view. The inroads that the Corpsmen make against backwardness in distressed countries will doubtless be great.

But Rev. Coffin is correct also in his belief that the Peace Corps will help the American people overcome their own national narcissism.

Medical Care

At his news conference on Wednesday, President Kennedy flung down a gantlet. He indicated plainly that his Administration would make an all-out effort to bring medical care for the elderly to a vote in both houses of Congress during the current session. This is immensely heartening news for all who believe, as this newspaper does, that the country greatly needs a program which will give assured medical care as a matter of earned right to all senior citizens and that such a program can best be organized and financed through the Social Security system.

Evidently the President means to take his case, as he must, to the American people. He is going to speak next Tuesday at a major rally in Madison Square Garden designed to mobilize enthusiasm for the health care program. He will have an opportunity then to tell the public why the program is needed, why the logical way to finance it is through Social Security taxation and why this way is as thoroughly consistent with American political and economic principles as any other aspect of Social Security—or as any other public welfare program.

There is the most pressing need for the President to explain this to the people. For a lot of sand has already been thrown into their eyes. They are being told, through a highly organized publicity campaign, that while it may be all right to provide aid to dependent children and aid to the blind and aid to the unemployed through Social Security, it would be "socialistic" to provide medical care for the elderly through the same mechanism. They are being told that while the "doctor-patient" relationship will be unaffected by participation in a privately-financed insurance scheme to pay for medical care, the right of a patient to choose his own doctor will somehow be taken away and medicine will be "socialized" if the financing is done through a public agency. They are being told that it is somehow more virtuous and more "American" to rely on the charity of physicians for medical care in old age than to save up during one's working years in order to pay one's own way.

The President is going to have a first-class fight on his hands to get his medical care program enacted into law. The American Medical Association has already launched a kind of religious crusade against it. The National Association of Manufacturers has announced its undying opposition. We believe the President can win this fight—and that if he does so he will at once enhance his own political stature and invaluably promote the general welfare. But to do it he will have to make the White House what Teddy Roosevelt once called it—"a bully pulpit"—and he will have to treat the Presidency as a position of moral leadership.

Three-Ring Politicians

The Campus Chest Carnival yesterday provided an appropriate backdrop for some political shenanigans by Inman Allen and Dwight Wheless. Both aspirants for the position behind the big mahogany desk in GM 218 made themselves look more like clowns than politicians by running some sort of unofficial race to see which could have himself paged most often over the loudspeaker system.

"Will GMAB Chairman Inman Allen please report to Graham Memorial," the speakers blared, ad nauseam. Alternating with this gem of subtlety was the rebuttal: "Will Presidential Assistant Dwight Wheless please report to Student Government offices."

We expected both to suddenly appear in a puff of smoke and start doing an Emmett Kelly routine. Maybe both should give up and run away to join the circus.

If they teamed up, they'd make Barnum and Bailey look like a meeting of the DAR.

Storm Around The RS-70

It's a sickening piece of irony that the U. S. Air Force, in its obligation to safeguard our national independence, now finds its toughest opponent in the Executive Branch of the U. S. government. Kennedy's determination to block the RS-70, despite the recommendations of almost every military expert in the country, is providing a "tragedy of errors," to use one of Garry Blanchard's phrases.

The tragicomedy is not new, of course, though its present scene is perhaps the most revolting to date. This began with a vengeance in Eisenhower's second term, when the Air Force pleaded in vain for enough funds to turn out the B-52 Stratofortress in quantity. Production slipped to four bombers per month when it could have been eleven times that number. In vain did the nation's top-flight strategists point out that a fleet of 1,200 B-52's would guarantee our security for many years to come. Eisenhower, of course, wouldn't listen, and finally batted down all criticism by publicly shrieking that he knew "more about defense than almost anyone in the country."

In spite of him, the B-52 program was belatedly strengthened and did fairly well—though not half as well as it easily might have. We have a substantial number of these planes; the latest figure given out by the Defense Department is 630, and the most advanced variety, the B-52H, carries Skybolt missiles. But the Stratofortress now stands about where its predecessor, the B-36, was standing in 1953. Russian progress in the "anti-Century" missile series has marked the B-52 for retirement. It should sign off in another three years.

Scream Of Anguish

General Curtis LeMay, currently Air Force Chief of Staff, foresaw this in 1954, when he asked for a successor to the B-52. This was the seed of the project known first as the WS-110 (for Weapons System), then as the B-70 Valkyrie, and now as the RS-70 (for Reconnaissance Strike); the repeated changes in designation become confusing. Let's call it the RS-70, past and present. Early in 1958 the Air Force accepted the RS-70 blueprints, triumphantly submitted by North American Aviation after fervent competition with Boeing. Plans were laid for a fleet of 250 RS-70 bombers. Eisenhower's budget director took one look at the expense and cancelled the entire project with a scream of anguish.

Gradually, Congress came to the rescue. Senator Goldwater personally argued with the knowledgeable President, stressing that the proposed aircraft would fly over 2,000 mph at an altitude so high that interceptors couldn't reach it. At that speed it would be on the target run for a few seconds only, making it almost impossible for the Red missile defense to draw a bead on it. At long last the powers that be gave in, and enough money was allotted to keep the project alive.

When Kennedy became President, hopes developed that he just might see the importance of this airplane—which stands as an aeronautical landmark no less than the first jet. (Ed Rees gives graphic details in his book, The Manned Missile.) But Kennedy and his venerable Defense Secretary are almost as hostile as their unlamented predecessors. The White House seems determined to thwart the advocates of this bomber; Rep. Vinson and others are apparently arguing to no purpose. At present, the USAF has funds for only three prototypes—one of which will fly this December.

A massive fleet of these delta wing systems would virtually end our strategic-assault worries. It would cost over six billion dollars, but it would throw a far greater strain than this on the Soviet defense budget. This unbelievable weapon could cruise at 120,000 feet, fly three times the speed of sound, sight targets by super-advanced radar at 400 miles distance, and go about 7,000 miles on a run— taking off from the U.S. and landing, mission accomplished, in western Europe. There's a rough road ahead, but the RS-70 cause is coming from behind.

Alternate Plans Offered

Ruffin Dorm Petitions Student Affairs Office

We the residents of Ruffin Dormitory submit this statement of opposition to the proposed plan of the Office of Student Affairs as announced in the Daily Tar Heel of March 8, 1962.

When we abruptly learned of the proposal to reorganize our dormitory as an all freshman residence hall, we organized a committee which met with Assistant Dean Long. Then we called a dormitory meeting for that evening and invited Assistant Dean Strong to discuss your reasoning with us.

As we understand it, next year you wish to experiment with all-freshmen dormitories of both the hall and suite arrangements in an attempt to ascertain the possible causes of the high freshman attrition rate.

While we do recognize the merits of such an experiment, first we do not understand your choice of Ruffin: 1) It offers no unique advantage in your experiment; 2) The use of some other suitable dormitory would result in fewer hardships to fewer people. Secondly, we do not understand the urgency of your proposal.

Now we will elaborate on these points. First, you chose Ruffin for its location; you want to prevent possible crossroad disturbances between the proposed all-freshman dormitory and the other predominately freshman dormitory, Manly. We question what serious disturbance could occur across a space of one hundred twenty-five feet filled with trees. Furthermore, any such disturbance should be at a minimum since under the proposal the new residents will be honor students.

Second, you say Ruffin is easily accessible to the campus. We point out that all upper quad dormitories meet this requirement.

Third, you say that you want a dormitory with the hall arrangement, and that Ruffin meets this requirement. Yet again we point out that all upper quad dormitories meet this requirement.

Fourth, you have not considered the number of people that will be uprooted in making your choice. We can show that eighty-one percent of Ruffin residents plan to remain next year, whereas only forty percent of the residents of Grimes, for example, plan to remain.

Again we say that we cannot understand your particular choice of Ruffin.

We offer two alternate proposals:

1) That a three year plan be used; this plan would eliminate the removal of present residents from any dormitory. This plan entails the filling of all vacated rooms each year with freshmen, who would be relocated at the end of the year. Thus, in a maximum of three years, an all-freshman dormitory would result. You have objected to this plan, claiming that the experiment must be instituted next year, as that will be the only time in the near future that housing conditions will be "normal" (i.e. two-man suite rooms can be compared with two - man hall rooms). We ask, how can conditions be called "normal" that exist for only one year?

2) That if you must institute this plan next year, you consider the number of present residents you would necessarily disturb, and select a dormitory accordingly.

May we conclude with some admittedly personal feelings. We have reasons to be proud of our dormitory. Recently we won the Intramural Sports Participation Award, gained co-ed visiting hours for our social room, started a dorm newspaper, voluntarily enforced quiet hours in our dormitory, and attained the highest scholastic averages for a men's dormitory (1960). All these achievements mean a great deal to us. Even more could be said about our lasting friendships, but at this point, you can well understand the widespread reaction to your proposal in our dormitory, and our enclosed list of 105 signatures (out of 109) attests to this. And although we have been dispassionate in pleading our case, our feeling is intense.

So we ask you to reconsider the hardships that arise when you evict students from their home, and we ask you to choose that system which makes these hardships most bearable.

Sex

Why Do Boys Date?

This is directed to those unaware that the motive for dating girls is sex.

I first note several abnormal reasons for dating which hopefully would disgust any intelligent girl. For example, some boys, missing the womb, use girls as "mother images." Other spineless young men may use a submissive female as the brunt of the aggression which they cannot exert elsewhere.

A more subtle practice is the masking of true feelings by a false desire to raise a family. When a boy cannot satisfy his sex drive during premarital relations, he may turn to marriage as a means to his goal and then rationlize the defeat with an artificial interest in family life.

I next turn to several reasons why boys do NOT have to date. These are given because many persons list them as important elements in a young man's life which supposedly a girl can best provide. First of all, boys do not need girls for companionship. Except for sexually oriented activities, other boys are, on the average, more interesting, daring, and challenging associates. For example, they are much better at sports. From a purely practical standpoint, male companionship is cheaper. In particular, girls are not the only available source of stimulating conversation. Indeed, the typical boy has seen more of the world than the average girl, and he has correspondingly more to say.

While it may be true that for every young man there is a woman his mental equal, the restriction of our society on female experience means that there are not enough girls to go around. It is more practical to find an equally sophisticated male for interesting conversation. Moreover, the University's regulations make it much more difficult to hold a private conversation with a member of the opposite sex. Finally, girls are not essential for non-physical affection. This can be provided by any average dog.

THE ONLY FEELING in a normal boy which compels him to date is the sexual instinct. Sex is the one unique contribution which a young woman can make to a boy's life, a function which cannot be duplicated by man or beast. She is the sole means available for stimulating and satisfying the male sex drive, whereas other masculine needs can be obtained elsewhere.

In fact, normal dates are always sex-oriented. For example, when a boy takes a girl dancing, it is never the aesthetic elements of rhythm and movement which the boy truly appreciates; it is the sexual stimulation of a nearby female. This is demonstrated most clearly by the fact that one never sees two boys as partners. If the boy felt any enjoyment from the dance itself, one would expect to see males dancing together occasionally. Likewise, a boy doesn't need a girl along to enjoy a movie or concert. A female companion with any sex appeal whatsoever cannot help but be a distraction, admittedly a sexually pleasurable one.

I can only conclude that the procurement of sexual satisfaction is the only natural justification for dating.

Additions To Buildings To Increase Instruction Facilities

Fifteen-Year Need Finally Fulfilled

By LEE FERRELL

The School of Public Health will finally get the building so urgently needed for over 15 years.

The building, costing $1,726,000, is under construction across the street from Memorial Hospital. Completely air-conditioned, its 120,000 square feet will enable the school to house all classes and research in the same building for the first time. With five floors, including basement, the building will take care of almost 2,000 students per year.

A late-summer completion is hoped for.

Spread Over Campus

According to Dean E. G. McGavran, the school has been forced to operate with offices and classrooms spread out over the entire campus. He said that space was so badly needed that much of the "frills and fancy" ordinarily going into a new building had to be sacrificed. However, there will be no sacrifice in quality of education said the dean.

Dean McGavran explained the great necessity for air-condition. ing. Presently, about one-half of the students are on calendar-year basis, and more will become this way. Also, a great number of professional people take part in summertime programs.

Languages Building Named For Dey

By LEE FERRELL

"I'll feel like I'm living in a king's house."

That's what Dr. John G. Kunstmann, head of the Department of Germanic Languages said about the new ultra-modern language building, in which classes will begin at the first summer session.

Named For Dey

The new building, named after Dr. William Morton Dey, had its preliminary inspection last week. It will house Romance and Germanic Languages, plus classes in various other courses.

Dr. Dey, here from 1908 until 1950, was the first head of the newer Department of Romance Languages, said that new courses will role in University life and is considered worthy of permaneit recognition.

Dr. Sterling A. Stoudemire, Department head of Romance Languages, said that ne wcourses will be offered in the Dey Building. These include Portuguese and Italian to freshmen and sophomores, also, Hebrew and Arabic to juniors and seniors.

Stoudemire said that facilities will include recording equipment for both tapes and discs, and these may be piped to any or all rooms in the building. There will be a micro-film reading room in which the staff can do research, and several large classrooms have "blackout shades" so that movies and slides may be shown.

Better Facilities

"Every detail has been taken care of, including seats in every room for left-handed people," stated Stoudemire. "Students will be able to do a better job because better facilities will afford them better working conditions."

Druggists Executed

ALGIERS (UPI) — Rightwing terrorists began "executing" Arab druggists here today, apparently offering a macabre warning to the former pharmacists who head the Algerian refugee "government."

Police said seven Arabs were killed and four wounded by terrorists who attacked seven drugstores in various parts of Algiers.

Eight other persons were killed and two were wounded in scattered incidents of violence elsewhere in Algeria.

New Dorm Completion Is Nearing

Craige Dormitory, one of two new dorms being built on the campus, should be completed this month. The other dorm, Ehringhaus, is scheduled to be finished in August of this year. Both dorms will be ready for occupancy by next fall. Whether Craige will be availible for the coming summer sessions has not been decided.

To House 422

J. A. Branch, business manager for the University, said yesterday that the two dorms, whose total cost is $3,633, 334 will house 1,442 students. The dorms, said Branch, will have a total of 730 rooms; and of this number, there will be 30 single rooms, 20 triple rooms and 2 two-room apartments. The apartments will serve as living quarters for married couples who will act as counselors and hostesses.

A cafeteria is being built in Ehringhaus which will be able to serve from 400 to 440 persons an hour, Branch said. Branch explained that rough plans for the cafeteria had been made at first, and when the recent bond issue failed, it was decided to include the cafeteria. He said that the University still hopes to add more eating facilities and a student supply store.

Location

The dorms are located off manning Drive near the new married student housing in Victory Village. They are 1,800 feet from the library, Branch said. Spencer Dorm, in comparison, he said, is 1200 feet from the library.

The X-shaped, seven-story dorms are named for Burton Craige, an alumnus of UNC and an outstanding lawyer, and J. C. B. Ehringhaus, former governor of North Carolina and former trustee of the University.

RTVMP Gets New Facilities

By WAYNE UPCHURCH

Construction is now under way on the new addition to Swain Hall which houses WUNC-TV, WUNC-FM and the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures.

The new addition will benefit greatly the department and the television and radio stations in providing more space and newer and finer facilities. Mac Preslar, director of operations for the department in the construction, emphasized, "For the first time in the history of the department, we will have building space designed for all the media."

Cost

The estimated cost of construction is $425,000. Completion date has not been set as yet. The architect for the project is M. A. Ham, and work on the project is being carried on by the King-Hunter Construction Company of Greensboro.

Several outstanding features will be included in the new addition. The basement will include a large classroom-auditorium seating 150 people and equipped for film projection and live radio and television originations. A special feature of the classroom will be experiments in galvanized skin responses. This experiment, through the aid of special wiring circuits to several of the seats in the auditorium, will measure emotional reactions of the students to certain films and television and radio programs.

Upstairs

Upstairs will be a modern television studio, a radio-recording studio, a recording laboratory and separate control rooms for each.

The sound stage, a small departmental television studio in the rear of Swain Hall, will be renovated for motion picture production.

WUNC-TV will retain their present facilities, in addition to aquiring "Studio A" which is presently used by the epartment.

Occupancy Of Hill Hall Annex May Come In About One Year

The annex to Hill Hall should be ready for occupancy in about one year. The addition to the music department's building will cost almost $500,000 and will include practice rooms and a rehearsal hall to relieve crowded conditions.

Purpose

Dr. Earl Slocum said Monday that the main purpose of the annex is to provide additional practice rooms and a large rehearsal hall. The annex, which is joined to Hill Hall on the south side, will also enlarge the music library, increase the number of classrooms and faculty studios and provide locker space for the students, Dr. Slocum said. The addition will be two stories high and will have a basement.

Concerts will continue to be given in the regular auditorium, Dr. Slocum added. The new smaller auditorium will seat 500 people but will be used mainly for rehearsal purposes.

Replacement

Dr. Slocum said the annex is to replace the three temporary annex buildings which have been used for about 15 years. Two of these temporary structures have been torn down since construction started, and as a result, the orchestra, band and glee club are having to use the regular auditorium for practice sessions.

"The auditorium is being worked to capacity," Dr. Slocum stated.

Botany Building Named After Arboretum's William C. Coker

By JOE BURNS

Construction of UNC's new botany building started last September and is scheduled to be finished by the end of Dec. 1962.

Cost of the new 4-story building is $1,062,500, and when it is completed, it will contain classrooms of one large lecture room, seating 149 students, and two smaller ones, seating 42 and 30 students respectively.

Classrooms

Included in construction plans is sufficient classroom space for general undergraduate Botany courses on one floor, four large undergraduate lab sections, and space for a botany library and plant collections.

Named for Dr. Coker, a world famous mycologist who started the Botany Department and Coker Arboretum at UNC, it will be called the William C. Coker Building.

Taking vital interest in the construction and details of he new Building Committee: Chairman Dr. Building ommittee: Chairman Dr. Bell, Dr. V. A. Greulach, and Dr. W. J. Koch.

Doesn't Have To Share

To be located between the Bell Tower and Wilson Hall, the zoology building, it will be used solely by the Botany Department. Dr. Bell said that UNC's department is fortunate in that it is "one of the few departmetns in the country" which doesn't have to share is facilities with others.

Indefinite and unofficial plans call for remodelling the front portion and renovating the rear of UNC's present Botany building, Davy Hall. Only the rear is fireproof. Unofficially the Psychology Department will move into Davy after the Botany Department vacates it.

One of the major advantages of the Coker Building will be adequate space, Dr. Bell said.

Grail Jamboree Tomorrow Night

Frat, Dorm Teams To Join And Vie

Daily Tar Heel
Page Four Sunday, March 18, 1962

By John Montague

Tomorrow is a big date on the intramural calendar as months of preparation come to a climax in the Fifth Annual Grail-Mural Sports Jamboree. This unique event holds as its primary aim, a closer and more productive relationship between the dormitory and fraternity organizations at Carolina.

Each social fraternity on campus has been paired by lot with a dormitory to form a joint jamboree team, which will participate in the eight events on the jamboree program.

Activities will get under way tomorrow night at 6:45 with the relays. Preliminaries in the seven sports events will begin at 7:45. These events are: handball, badminton, table tennis, half-court basketball, archery, swimming and foul shooting. Finals in all of these events are scheduled immediately after the prelims.

With a few execptions, regular intramurals eligibility rules will be followed in the non-point-system activity. An entry fee of $2.50 has been charged to each organization entered in order to finance a steak supper for all individual winners and members of the winning relay team. This supper will be held at Brady's Restaurant on the evening of Tuesday, March 27.

A large championship plaque will be kept in the Woollen Gym trophy case and the name of the winning teams will be engraved on this as a permanent record. A smaller replica of the plaque will be given to the dorm and fraternity composing the winning team, while individual trophies will be presented to the champions in each event. Last years's winning team was Phi Kappa Sig-Old East.

DKE-Everett, Phi Delta Chi-Winston, Lambia Chi-Parker, Beta Theta Pi-Cobb, Chi Psi-BVP, ZBT-Ruffin, Phi Gamma Delta-Mangum, DU-Manly, Theta Chi-AFROTC, Pi Lambia Phi-Old East.

Chapell poured in 38 points Friday as Wake bounced St. Joseph's 96-85 in overtime. It was Packer's two jumpers that brought the Deacs from four points down, and forced the extra period.

Wake Forest Does It Again

By CURRIE KIRKPATRICK

The fantastic Demon Deacons of Wake Forest escaped the grave for the second time in a row Friday night and went on to bomb St. Joseph's of Philadelphia in overtime, 96-85. The win sent the Winston Salem cagers into the finals of the NCAA Eastern Regionals against Villanova last night at College Park, Md.

St. Joseph's, a team which had beaten Wake Forest three times in a row and seemed to have the Indian sign on the Baptists, led all the way except for two brief instances, and carried a seemingly safe 72-68 lead into the final one minute and two seconds.

But fate and Billy Packer came to the rescue as the 5-9 guard drilled a one-hander and then after a misse dfoul shot, sunk a 30-footer with three seconds left to send it into overtime.

In overtime, as Yale and then St. Joseph's were to find out, Wake Forest is tough. The Deacons went on a five-minute 22-point tear and it was all over for the Hawks from the "City of Brotherly Love."

Villanova, led by their incomparable leaper, Hubie White, shook off the pesky Violets of New York University to win 79-76 and gain the right to face Wake in last night's encounter.

NYU led by as much as 12 in the first half but when the final period began, the Wildcats from Philadelphia started to roll.

White, who was held to eight points in the first period, was phenomenal as he scored 20 of his team's last 28 points. The 6-4 center, who has springs for legs, finished with 31, while NYU's fine sophomore, Barry Kramer, had 26.

In the Mideast Regionals, magnificent Ohio State and surprising Kentucky won Friday games and met last night for the championship of their division.

The Buckeyes scored in spurts at Iowa City, Iowa but had too much of everything and easily beat Western Kentucky, 93-73. Jerry Lucas was held to nine points, but Doug McDonald came through with 21.

Adolph Rupp's Wildcats led by only a point at the half but with Cotton Nash showing the way, took charge in the final 20 minutes to beat Butler handily, 81-60. Nash had 23 points while teammate Larry Pursiful paced all scorers with 26.

Out at Manhattan, Kansas, Cincinnati's national champions rode a 24-point performance by Paul Hogue to a 66-46 victory over Creighton to reach the Midwest Regional final last night against Big Eight champion Colorado.

The Buffs hit 53 per cent of their shots in downing Southwest Conference co-champion Texas Tech, 67-60, as Ken Charlton led the way with 18.

In the Far West Regionals, Oregon State and UCLA won semi-final Friday night battles to advance to their championship match last night at Provo, Utah.

Oregon State pulled out a 69-67 win over a scrappy and smaller Pepperdine squad on last-minute scoring by football star Terry Baker and Steve Pauly. Seven-foot soph Mel Counts led the Beavers with 15 points.

L.A. Wraps Up Flag On Paper

VERO BEACH, FLA. UPI— It's too bad for the Los Angeles Dodgers that the National League pennant race isn't settled on paper for in that case they'd have it all wrapped up.

This was the same case last year at this time. On paper and in the books of the oddsmakers the Dodgers looked like the clas of the league.

On the field, however, it was the Cincinnati Reds who came on to win and beat the second-place Dodgers by four games.

General Manager Buzzy Bavasi and field manager Walter Alston are determined not to let it happen again. They don't think it will because they have what they consider to be the best group of starting pitchers in the league and a bunch of kids who look like they have the potential to make up the slack left by the loss of five players in the N. L. draft and the sale of second baseman Charlie Neal to the New York Mets.

Lost Three Pitchers

The Dodgers lost three pitchers —Roger Craig, Dick Farrell and Jim Golden-and two first basemen—Gil Hodges and Norm Larker in the draft. For Neal they got Lee Walls, who can play the outfield or third base, and $100,000.

"That $100,000 isn't going to help us on the playing field, but we think Walls will and that we have kids who will do better for us than Craig, Farrell and Golden did," explained Alston. "We also have to come up with a first baseman. But we wouldn't have put Hodges and Larker on our draft list if we didn't think we had someone to take over the job."

That someone could be Frank Howard or Ron Fairly. Both are outfielders who were used part of the time at first last season.

Houston Tops Golf Tourney

By CURRIE KIRKPATRICK

Lanky Kermit Zarley, working with a putter borrowed from teammate Homero Blancas, took the individual lead with a 54-hole total of 210 Friday afternoon as the University of Houston had the championship of the Florida Intercollegiate Golf Tournament all but wrapped up.

Zarley, a 20-year-old junior, trailed Blancas by three strokes going into Friday's action but came on strong with rounds of 70-71 to take the lead. Blancas was at 211 at the three-quarter mark with Mark Hopkins, still another Houston linksman, third at 213.

Carolina's Jay Harris, who had shot an opening round 69 for second position, could only manage 76-81 in the two subsequent rounds and slipped to sixteenth in the individual standings.

Pete Green, UNC's All-American from Franklin, Mich., fired 70-71 Friday afternoon to go with his initial 77 score and after three rounds was in sixth position with a 218. Abe Andes also was high in the standings for the Tar Heel golfers. Andes was in eighth place with a 220 going into yesterday's final 18 holes.

Houston, the perennial college power where golf reigns supreme, title and seemed a sure bet to win is defending its 1961 invitational it easily.

The Texas school had a combined total of 850—42 strokes better than its closest competitor, UNC Carolina with 892 was followed by the University of Georgia with 893

Florida, in fourth place, was leading in the race for the mythical state championship, simultaneously being played on the Ocala municipal course. The boys from the sunshine state were a 902 while Rollins was fifth with 906.

Lacrosse Club Meets Indians

By Marty Kruming

In its determined drive to gain varsity recognition, the North Carolina Lacrosse Club opens its fourth season Tuesday afternoon as it plays host to a strong Dartmouth College squad from Hanover, New Hampshire.

Sal Esposito, beginning his second year as lacrosse coach, foresees a rough campaign in which his squad must respect every opponent. "We have a lot of potential and if the boys make up their minds to do it, they can have a good season," commented the experienced mentor.

Coach Esposito, not a man to bestow a great deal of praise on any one individual, did mention certain key players. Tom Thayer, an attackman from Asheville, N. C., and Don Marks, a midfielder from Summit, New Jersey, both have demonstrated a great deal of ability. Esposito also singled out co-captains Bill Bevis, a goalie, and Will Brown, a defenseman, as playing key roles in the success of this year's unit.

"We do not have enough attackmen, we are hurting in the defense, and our midfield is fairly stable," explained Esposito.

In respect to the question of whether lacrosse will ever be raised to the varsity level, Esposito maintained that he could see no reason why it should be kept as a club sport if the squad makes a good showing, the fine calibre of players continues, and the attendance at the games is encouraging in '62. "The fans must come and back the team if lacrosse is to enjoy any success at Carolina," added Esposito.

Without a doubt the Tar Heels are in for a rough campaign. In addition to the opening encounter with the Dartmouth Indians, Carolina will face the always-powerful Virginia Cavaliers twice, Washington and Lee, and the Blue Devils from Durham in the season's final.

For Title Tilt

Patterson, Liston Grimly Sign Pact

Champion Floyd Patterson and challenger Sonny Liston, grim and with no traces of friendliness, signed a contract Friday for a heavyweight title fight this summer which the promoter predicted would gross more than $6,000,000.

The date and site will be picked later—by the champion. Patterson will make the decision after he returns from a 10-day exhibition tour of the Arab Republic and Israel.

Tom Bolan, president of the promoting Championships Sports, Inc., said six cities are under consideration. He listed them as New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Washington, D. C., and Seattle.

"Seattle has offered us a $1,000,000 guarantee to hold the fight in connection with its World's Fair," he said. "We will explore all the possibilites and take the one giving the best deal."

New York's Yankee Stadium is reported to have the inside track, with Los Angeles the next best possibility.

Bolan said Patterson had agreed to designate the date and place on or before April 16. The fight will be held no earlier than June 18 and no later than Sept. 30, Bolan added.

Under the terms of the contract, which Liston earlier had complained as "Stealing me blind," Patterson gets 45 per cent of the live gate and 55 per cent of the ancillary rights, which include closed TV-television, radio, movies and foreign sales.

Liston gets 12½ per cent of the live gate and ancillary proceeds. The promoters receive 42½ per cent of the live gate and 32½ per cent of the ancillary rights.

"Our conservative estimate is that the fght wiill gross $6,000,000," Bolan said. "I expect it honestly to go in excess of that."

The record prize fight gate was that of the second Jack Dempsey-Gene Tunney fight at Chicago's Soldiers Field on Sept. 22, 1927. It brought in $2,658,660 and the victorious Tunney's personal share was just short of $1,000,000.

Patterson's second fight with Sweden's Ingemar Johansson at the Polo Grounds June 20, 1960 had a gross of $2,468,278, with $824,814 of this the live gate.

Both Patterson and Liston were immaculately dressed when they were escorted into the ballroom of a midtown hotel for the formal signing ceremonies.

Liston, his muscles bulging under an Ivy League mohair jacket, chewed gum placidly and refused to look at the champion. He sported a pencil mustache, close-cropped hair and manicured finger nails.

Liston's expression never changed. Under duress, he looked at Patterson but his expression was that of a tiger ready to spring. Patterson tried to force a smile—but it was thin and quick.

THE MANY LOVES OF THORWALD DOCKSTADER

When Thorwald Dockstader—sophomore, epicure, and sportsman—first took up smoking, he did not simply choose the first brand of cigarettes that came to hand. He did what any sophomore, epicure, and sportsman would do: he sampled several brands until he found the very best—a mild, rich, flavorful smoke—an endless source of comfort and satisfaction—a smoke that never palled, never failed to please—a smoke that age could not wither nor custom stale—a filter cigarette with an unfiltered taste—Marlboro, of course!

Similarly, when Thorwald took up girls, he did not simply select the first one who came along. He sampled. First he dated an English literature major named Elizabeth Barrett Schwartz, a wisp of a girl with large, luminous eyes and a soul that shimmered with a pale, unearthly beauty. Trippingly, trippingly, she walked with Thorwald upon the beach and sat with him behind a windward dune and listened to a conch shell and sighed sweetly and took out a little gold pencil and a little morocco notebook and wrote a little poem:

I will lie upon the shore,
I will be a dreamer,
I will feel the sea once more,
Pounding on my femur.

Thorwald's second date was with a physical education major named Peaches Glendower, a broth of a girl with a ready smile and a size 18 neck. She took Thorwald down to the cinder track where they did 100 laps to open the pores. Then they played four games of squash, six sets of tennis, 36 holes of golf, nine innings of one o'cat, six chukkers of lacrosse, and a mile and a quarter of leapfrog. Then they went ten rounds with eight ounce gloves and had heaping bowls of whey and exchanged a firm handshake and went home to their respective whirlpool baths.

Thorwald's final date was with a golden-haired, creamy-browed, green-eyed, red-lipped, full-calved girl named Totsi Sigafoos. Totsi was not majoring in anything. As she often said, "Gee whillikers, what's college for anyhow—to fill your head full of icky old facts, or to discover the shining essence that is YOU?"

Totsi started the evening with Thorwald at a luxurious restaurant where she consumed her own weight in Cornish rock hen. From there they went to a deluxe movie palace where Totsi had popcorn with butter. Then she had a bag of chocolate covered raisins—also with butter. Then they went to a costly ballroom and did the Twist till dawn, tipping the band every eight bars. Then they went to a Chinese restaurant where Totsi, unable to translate the menu, solved her problem by ordering one of everything. Then Thorwald took her to the women's dorm, boosted her in the window, and went downtown to wait for the employment office to open.

While waiting, Thorwald thought over all of his girls and came to a sensible decision. "I think," he said to himself, "that I will stick with Marlboros. I am not rich enough for girls."

Marlboro, however, is rich enough for anybody. It takes mighty good makin's to give you unfiltered taste in a filter cigarette. That's the flavor you get in the famous Marlboro recipe from Richmond, Virginia. You get a lot to like.

Fauchot Elected As Commissioner To Free Algeria

6-Month Government To Begin Work Soon

PARIS (UPI) — The guns were silent Monday in Algeria and President Charles De Gaulle and his government took the first decisions that would launch the war-ravaged territory on the path to independent nationhood.

Soon after the cease-fire went into effect at noon ending 7½ years of war, the cabinet met at the Elysee Palace and named Christian Fouchet, 49, a top-ranking French diplomat, long a follower of De Gaulle to be France's high commissioner in Algeria.

Six Months Term

Fouchet, now the French Ambasador to Denmark, will take over shortly from French delegate General Jean Mori. The high commissioner will represent the authority of the French Republic in Algeria during the six months before full independence.

The government did not make public immediately the names of the 12-man Moslem-European provisional executive which will act as an interium government in Algeria during the same period. However, they were decided on and will be announced later.

Cabinet spokesman Louis Terrenoire announced that De Gaulle will make another radio-television broadcast to the nation next Monday night.

But before that, in a message to extraordinary sessions of the two houses of parliament Tuesday, De Gaulle will announce the date of a referendum in which Frenchmen will be called on to approve the Algerian peace settlement. The date generally mentioned is April 8.

Approve Decrees

A cabinet Communist said the government also approved a series of decrees that will set the wheels of Algerian independence in motion later this year. They included:

—An amnesty decree for political prisoners.

—Two decrees laying down conditions on which a self-determination vote will be held in Algeria in a few months.

—A decree setting up a "court of public order" in Algeria. As soon as this is established, the special courts martial set up at Algiers and Oran Monday to try dissident army groups will be dissolved.

Terrenoire said Fouchet will take up his job as high commissioner "in the very near future."

The end of the fighting brought little joy to France or to the more than 1 million Europeans in Algeria. Algiers, Oran and the other big cities were locked in a general strike while tens of thousands of French troops cordoned off the European and Moslem quarters.

Oil Slick Discovered

Chance Of Finding Survivors Is Dim

CLARK AIR FORCE BASE, The Philippines (UPI) — A ship found an oil slick in the Paficic Monday, increasing speculation that all 107 persons aboard a chartered airliner plunged to a fiery death when the plane exploded in flight.

The oil slick, discovered by the U. S. Navy supply ship Banner, was about 18 miles from the spot where a freighter reported seeing a bright flash on the night the Flying Tiger Airlines chartered plane vanished.

"The chances of finding any survivors now are about one in infinity," said Maj. Gen. Theodore R. Milton.

Milton, commander of the 13th U. S. Air Force which has led the far flung aerial hunt for the plane said he expects the search to be called off Tuesday.

Another search ship, the minesweeper Gallant, found an air mattress not far from the oil slick. But Flying Tiger officials said they learned that the mattress did not come from the Constellation which was carrying U. S. troops to embattled Viet Nam.

Aboard the plane were 93 U. S. troops headed for Viet Nam, three Vietnamese soldiers and 11 crewmembers, including four stewardesses.

Finding the oil slick and debris near where the Liberian tanker T. L. Linzen reported seeing a flash and then falling lights last Thursday caused officials to give more thought to the possibility the plane might have exploded in flight.

A team of Civil Aeronautics Board CAB investigators, meantime, arrived at Burbank, Calif., headquarters of Flying Tiger which was operating the plane under charter to the Military Air Transport Service. The team immediately began an investigation of plane and crew records for some clue to its disappearance. Later the team will go to Travis Air Force Base near San Francisco where the plane took off and then to Guam to continue its inquiry.

'Phony Maneuver' Charged By Ayres

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A Republican congressman charged on Monday that the administration has frozed $300 million worth of veterans housing loans in a "phony maneuver" to balance President Kennedy's budget.

Rep. William H. Ayres, R-Ohio, contended the administration was playing politics with the home mortgage loan funds and asked for a congressional investigation.

"The administration has choked off the direct loan program in a phony maneuver to make this year's budget look balanced," Ayres told United Press International.

He denounced what he called "the use of the Veterans Administration for political purposes" and added: "The veterans of the nation are the unfortunate victims of the administration's fiscal manipulations. With housing starts down, this hanky panky at the loan office is also costing the construction industry thousands of jobs."

Ayres said that Congress authorized a $500 million loan program at the request of the administration last July 1.

According to the Ohioan "after $200 million had been utilized the program was reviewed . . . and in January of 1962, they stopped baking loans and put veterans on a waiting list."

Ayres produced a letter from P. N. Brownstein, chief benefit director of the VA, which he said bore out his charge.

The letter said that after preliminary review, the VA had decided to postpone additional mortgage loans until a complete review was completed in late March or April. A decision would be made then "as to the extent and timing of additional borrowings from the treasury" to finance the program, Brownstein wrote Ayres.

Rowan Named President Of Cobb

Ford Rowan has been appointed acting president of Cobb Dormitory by Inter-Dormitory Council President Jim Gaulden. Rowan's term will last until elections on March 27.

Mike Putzel will keep his vice-presidency for the rest of the year and the offices of president, secretary, and treasurer will be decided in the coming election.

Rowan will run for the presidency against Jack Hilliard while Randy Gilliam and Marve Mason vie for secretary and Walter Long and Gary Grosboll run for Treasurer.

Former president Richard Burrows resigned earlier this month and the treasurer's position had been vacated when the elected treasurer moved out of the dorm.

Peron Followers Sweep Elections; Cabinet Resigns

Argentine Market Panics As Reds Win

Banks and stock exchanges were closed to head off a financial panic.

The armed forces demanded that the government order federal intervention to nullify the election victories of the Peronists in 10 provinces.

Interior Minister Alfrede Vitole quit in protest against the armed forces move to prevent the elected Peronists from taking the office. At midday he said Frondizi still had not issued an order for the federal government to intervene but might take some action within a few hours.

Peron Hails Win

From his exile in Madrid Peron hailed the election triumphs of his followers and said his own future will depend upon his supporters.

"I shall wait for their decision," he said.

Of 18 provinces where elections were held for governors and congressmen, the Peronist - Communist front won clear victories in 10, apparently including the major Buenos Aires and Cordoba areas.

The election results indicated Frondizi's Radical Intransigent party had lost control of the federal House of Deputies. However, it continued in control of the federal senate. No senate seats were up in Sunday's elections.

Shocks Conservatives

The extent of the Peronist-Communist triumph shocked Argentina's political conservatives. The Peronist campaign was personally directed from his exile headquarters in Madrid, Spain by Peron, who was ousted by the army in a revolutionary coup in 1955.

The mass resignation of the cabinet came after Vitole quit. Vitole not only had defended the Peronist participation in Sunday's elections but also had advocated letting them take their newly - won seats and holding them until such time as it became clear they were establishing totalitarian-type regimes.

Vitole's resignation indicated that Frondizi would yield to the army's demand the federal government intervene the 10 provinces which the Peronists captured. However, such a step must await the formal end of the ballot count.

A formal certification of election results was a foregone conclusion within the next 12 to 24 hours. It was expected Frondizi then would decree government seizure of provincial control in the pro-Peronist areas and formally summon the Congress to ratify his executive decision.

General Bans Demonstrating

FORT POLK, La. (UPI) — The commanding general of the 49th Armored Texas Division Monday banned "we want out" demonstrations among 15,000 reservists and National Guardsmen called to active duty at the fort in the Berlin crisis.

Maj. Gen. Harley B. West of Dallas said there was a possibility more demonstrations would touch off a riot. He said demonstrators, estimated at only a few hundred, had started speaking with contempt of President Kennedy and Congress. A "we want out" rally had been scheduled for Monday night.

Elections Board Hears Appeal Today On McDevitt's Pre-Campaign Expense

Two appeals from a March 8 Elections Board hearing, which ruled that the cost of literature distributed by Larry McDevitt before he became an official candidate for student body vice-president was not a campaign expense, will be presented to the Constitutional Council today.

The material, distributed before the University Party convention, consisted of small white cards which stated "Larry McDevitt, candidate for vice-president" and said he would like to hear student views on campus government.

One appeal, submitted by vice-president Hank Patterson, who has responsibility for overseeing the conduct of elections, contends that since "the cards tend to promote your (McDevitt's) campaign," they are a campaign expense and must be included in the $25 maximum allowed vice-presidential candidates.

McDevitt, who contended that the literature was intended to measure his chances for election, has also appealed the Election Board ruling so as to get a final decision before the deadline for submitting campaign expenses.

Five members of the Constitutional Council met Friday and upheld the Board's decision, but this ruling was invalidated after it was learned that the student constitution stated that all seven members of the Council must be present at meetings.

The Council is made up of seven members, with three members each elected from the Men's and Women's councils.

Construction Forces Move By TV Dept.

The Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures vacated its offices and classrooms in Swain Hall yesterday because of construction work now underway on the new addition and moved to Phillips Hall.

Work is progressing steadily on the addition to Swain, and reconversion work will be done on the department's side of the building.

Earl Wynn, Chairman of the Dept. of RTVMP, stated that "we were told by the contractor that if we wanted the biulding on time then we would have to make it available so that the reconversion work to the present building could be carried on at the same time the construction work is underway on the new section."

The department's new location in Rooms 122 and 124 of Phillips Hall will be their new home through the fall semester of 1962. When the departmental offices are moved out of the basement of Phillips they will be moved back into the completed addition which is costing between $315,000 and $325,000. Wynn said, "I hope we will be able to move into the new building between Christmas of this year and February 1, 1963."

Wynn and the departmental secretary, Bonney Wilson, will occupy offices in Room 124 of Phillips Hall. Dr. John Clayton, Wes Wallace and John Ehle will have their offices in Room 122. Dr. Robert Hilliard, Ross Scroggs and Mac Preslar will have offices in the basement of Swain Hall away from the construction work which is going on upstairs.

WUNC-FM will maintain studios in its present location. WUNC-TV which will obtain the reconverted side of the building upon its completion for additional studio and office space will continue its operation on the opposite side of the building and will be for the most part undisturbed by all the work.

Two of the winning numbers in the campus chest drawing have not been claimed. They are 2141 and 557. Holders of these numbers are invited to claim their prizes.

Presidential Candidates Debate Tomorrow Night

"I challenge the UP presidential candidates to a debate on campus issues," said Dwight Wheless, SP presidential candidate, in a formal statement yesterday.

"The debate is to cover every area of concern and every issue involved in the coming elections," he said.

"I urge every student to atttend and become well-informed on the issues."

The debate wil be held in Gerrard Hall at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, March 21. Each candidate will be allowed a ten-minute presentation on each issue, followed by a two-minute cross-examination of each other. A four-minute rebuttal-summation period will end the discussion of that issue.

Conference Reels Over Inspections

GENEVA (UPI) — The 17-nation disarmament conference almost broke up Monday over Soviet refusal even to consider international inspection of its territory. Only a hastily arranged meeting between the U. S. and Soviet foreign ministers got it going again.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko held a surprise 30-minute conference at Gromyke's villa at the Russian's request. They agreed as permanent co-chairman of the conference to call an informal off the record session Tuesday.

The conference appeared to have got off to a good start when the United States, Britain and the Soviet Union agreed to make a new effort to end the nuclear test ban stalemate. But conference sources said the meeting was disrupted when Gromyko said it was an "insult to the Soviet people" to suggest that Russia would violate an uninspected nuclear test ban or disarmament treaty.

Debate Becomes Heated

After heated debate the conference ended its afternoon session without a decision to have another informal meeting. The conference has been meeting in informal session in belief it was the most hopeful way to achieve any success.

Swedish Foreign Minister Osten Unden brought on the outburst by asking Gromyko: "What would you do if explosions were registered on Soviet territory? How could the world be assured that they were not nuclear explosions."

Gromyko replied that if a treaty were signed there would be no difficulty. It would be an insult to the Soviet people to think their government would violate a treaty it had signed, he said.

There was no progress after that and the meeting ended.

Accepts Western Suggestion

Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian Zorin earlier accepted a long-standing Western suggestion for a three-nation subcommittee within the general disarmament conference to try to resolve the test ban deadlock. He also suggested that France be invited since it also is a nuclear power.

The British and American spokesmen immediately welcomed the Soviet move which was put forth by Zorin at a news conference. Then came the surprise disclosure of the Rusk-Gromyko talks.

The two foreign ministers had conferred several times on Berlin, Germany, disarmament and other cold war problems but there had been no meetings since Tuesday and it was believed Gromyko had been forced to ask Moscow for further instructions. So far he has been unyielding on everything.

Later, Rusk told the UPI that "we talked about tomorrow's meeting and very briefly about Berlin and nuclear testing."

McNamara Asks Hike In Housing Allowance

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara called on Congress Monday to boost servicemen's housing allowances by $300 million a year. He said it was "disgraceful" that there had been no increase for 10 years.

McNamara told a news conference his plan would mean an average increase of 18½ per cent in allowances for servicemen.

The proposal would cost $150 million in the last six months of fiscal 1963—from Jan. 1, 1963, to June 30, 1963. Thereafter it would cost $300 million a year.

Mrs. Kennedy Takes A Ride On Elephant

JAIPUR, India (UPI) — Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy took a ride on a lurching red, white and yellow painted elephant Monday and got off after 10 minutes, patting the pachydrm and saying, "goodbye, thank you."

Relaxing during a two-day "holiday" in the middle of her India-Pakistan tour, Jackie also met the 26-member U.S. Peace Corps group in India and admired the beard and turban of a Brooklyn youth in Punjabi attire.

The First Lady was hailed by a crowd estimated at half a million on arrival in the "pink city" of Jaipur for a stay at the palace of the maharaja and his Maharani, at 42 still one of the most beautiful women in India.

They were hosts last year to Queen Elizabeth II. It was announced Monday Mrs. Kennedy would lunch with the Queen March 28 in London on her way back to America.

Ride Prompts Smile

The 35-year-old female elephant chosen for Jackie was the same one Elizabeth rode. Seated in a gold and silver howdah, strapped to the elephant's back and resembling a small roller coaster car, Mrs. Kennedy smiled bravely as she swayed along beside her sister, the Princess Lee Radziwill.

White wooden tusks were fitted so that the elephant looked like a male. Her ears streamed silk banners and on either side hung large silver bells which the mahout driver, perched on the animal's neck, rung on the trip around the courtyard.

In the rear seat of the howdah sat the home minister of Rajasthan state, Mathra das Mathur, giving advice and encouragement.

In the afternoon, Mrs. Kennedy watched the maharaja and his two sons go down to an upset defeat in a pole match.

A former glamor girl who 20 years ago was ranked one of the world's 12 most beautiful wimen, the maharani is the maharaja's third wife. She recently was elected to parliament, running in opposition to the Congress party of Premier Jawaharlal Nehru.

All 26 members of the Peace Cops contingent were here for a picnic and elephant ride themselves. They were introduced to Mrs. Kennedy by U. S. Ambassador John Kenneth Galbraith.

College Or University?

In a statement delivered to the Board of Trustees of the University last month, it was pointed out that the state-supported institutions in North Carolina must assume an increasing share of projected enrollment growth.

This means that the University at Chapel Hill will accept a proportionate share of the burden. But along with this proportionate share of numerical numbers comes a disproportionate share of problems pertaining to quality.

One of the problems that the report does not deal with—and one that it perhaps should—is what kind of education the University should aim toward providing in the face of the growing desire on the part of high school students to attend college.

Christopher Jencks, in a recent article in a national magazine, drew the line quite well between the "college education" and the "university education."

Jencks writes that a college education is "a four-year affair, leading from high school into a year or two of near-remedial general education, through a couple of years of semi-professional training, and culminating in a B.A. and a respectable middle-class job. A university education, by contrast, begins with four years of largely general education, leads through two to five years of graduate professional training, and may culminate in an M.D., LL.B., Ph.D. etc, and an influential upper-middle class or upper-class career."

Applying Jenck's definitions to the University here, and taking into consideration the projected enrollment figures, the question comes up of just which kind of education —"college" or "university"—the undergraduate school here will aim at providing.

The statement to the Trustees indicates that the University will continue to place necessary emphasis on the graduate schools, even strengthening them. But what of the undergraduate school? Will it be regarded as a step in university education, or will it come to be regarded more and more as a terminal, four-year college? Will an undergraduate degree, seen from the student's viewpoint, be a meal ticket or an alternate to military service, marriage, or a job after high school? Or will students come to Carolina to spend four years as a step in liberal university education?

It's a fairly sure bet that the majority of students who will come to Carolina will be looking for the college brand of education set in a University atmosphere. The day could conceivably come when a student who wants four years of university education will go somewhere else to get it, perhaps returning to Carolina to work on an advanced degree.

The statement to the Trustees includes the comment that "the young people now in the public schools have the right to expect that a place will be made for them." This is unquestionaby true.

But we wonder just how many of them should be placed at Carolina, and how many should be guided to other schools more suited to the kind of education they really want —college education, not university education.

This is not to suggest that Carolina's undergraduate school should become a graduate preparatory school. But it shoud not become a "'college' 'either.

Jonas Votes 'No'

"The House is big enough already," said Rep. Charles R. Jonas of the soon-defunct 10th District of North Carolina. So saying, he stood with the majority last week to rebury Speaker McCormack's harum-scarum pet bill to enlarge the House of Representatives by three seats.

In the end, the bill suffocated from amendments; and even Speaker McCormack committed legislative infanticide against his own creation, now grown into a monster that would have admitted 32 new new members.

But Mr. Jonas' blunt opposition to any increase in the House membership set him apart from the other members o fthe North Carolina delegation. They went along with the House expansion up to the "magic number" of 453, which would have restored the seat North Carolina lost by the 1960 census.

Mr. Jonas, it should be noted, put his conviction ahead of direct personal interest. Enlargement of the House, ill-advised as it was and would be, and patently unfair to the vast majority of states whose legislature have already provided for the loss of a seat, would have freed Mr. Jonas from a fight in the new Eighth District which the 1961 General Assembly wrought for his downfall.

Oil And Water

The Ways and Means Committee of Student Legislature is currently hanging on to a bill requiring that for presidents and vice-presidents of the student body run on a straight ticket basis.

The bill, which was introduced by Ron Gabriel of DM I, would eliminate split voting for the top two candidates, and require any candidate for either office to have a running mate.

If passed, the bill would insure a stronger, more unified executive branch. As the top two policy-makers, the president and vice-president must necessarily work as a team. They should be elected as one.

This arrangement would also place more emphasis on party platforms. Candidates would have to run on ideas rather than teeth, making spring elections more a contest of issues than personalities.

Legislature should adopt the bill.

A Southern Town On Trial

Albany, Georgia

This sprightly, but mannerly and basically well-meaning south Georgia city has lately attained an undesired and at least partially undeserved national reputation as the prototype of all the relics of the Middle Ages that are stubbornly refusing to surrender to the 20th Century.

This is the result of the arrests of 700 Negroes, including the Rev. Martin Luther King, on the technical charge of parading without a license in a demonstration against segregated seating on the city bus lines. But the reputation is fantastically wrong. Albany is simply a community that has a wolf by the ears and cannot discover any safe way of letting go. A political cabalist who could come up with a formula that would save face on both sides might be publicly repudiated but would be privately welcomed by both sides.

The misadventure of white Albany was its encounter with Negro leadership with a sense of humor. The arrests prove it. They have been characterized by a politeness that reduced the whole operation to farce.

The train of incidents started last autumn when large numbers of Negroes, many of them students at Albany State College, a Negro unit of the University of Georgia, came into the local bus station, the students being those who were leaving for a holiday weekend. They overflowed into the white section whereupon the police officer on duty directed them to leave and they refused to leave. There is no evidence that the officer was tough about it, and none that the refusal was anything but polite, although firm.

197 Arrested

In the circumstances the plain duty of the officer was to arrest the ringleader and make a test case. Accordingly, he said to one, "You are under arrest," and immediately found himself with 197 prisoners; they came quietly, but they overflowed the police station and gummed up the works when it came to booking them and posting cash bonds. Police headquarters was overworked for hours, handling the flood. So it happened, again and again. Whenever a policeman undertook to arrest one Negro — the charge was always trespass — 50 to 150 surrendered. Eventually the total reached 700.

The Rev. Martin Luther King did not enter the situation until toward the end of the year. Up to that point direction of affairs had been in the hands of a more or less informal organization calling itself the Albany Movement. But in November Mr. King, after addressing a rally at a local church, invited the audience to accompany him to the City Hall where the Commissioners were in session. On the way the Chief of Police arrested him for violating a city ordinance that forbids a traffic-blocking parade without a special permit.

King's defense is that he was not parading, he was merely exercising the constitutional right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition for redress of grievances. The police charge is that, be that as it may, his crowd overflowed the sidewalk and spilled into the street to the interruption of traffic, and that constitutes a parade. So joined, the issues went to court.

After bond was posted, defense counsel informed the court that the date fixed for the hearing conflicted with Mr. King's speaking engagements in various parts of the country, and was assured by the court that that was all right, the hearing would be postponed to suit the defendant's convenience.

It was postponed more than once, but on February 27 it came to trial. Lawyers on both sides stipulated that the evidence as regards King would be accepted as applying to the other cases, eliminating the necessity of 700 separate trials. One witness, the Chief of Police, was heard; he testified that he had made the arrest at the hour and date specified, after which the court declared a recess of 30 days to permit the lawyers to submit briefs, and claimed another 30 days in which to consider them, after which it would render judgement. And there the cases stand at present.

Obviously, Albany is resolved not to make a martyr of the Rev. Mr. King, nor is there evident any disposition to wreak vengeance on his followers. Alarmists had predicted all sorts of disturbances at the time of the trial, but nothing happened. The 699 were represented by counsel, only King appearing in court; and inquiring reporters discovered only the usual dozen or so loafers hanging around the courtroom. For the rest, Albany, white and black, attended strictly to business on that day. So much for the heart of darkness, the fortress of feudalism.

Stores Thrown Into Red

Nevertheless, to discount the seriousness of the situation would be a grave error. The calm that prevails in Albany is due entirely to the rigid control that leadership on both sides has thus far been able to impose upon the rank and file. The one point of agreement has been that violence will not be tolerated; but Negro leadership has not been content to rely on demonstrations, however peaceful, or on legal proceedings. It has resorted to the extra-legal procedure of an economic boycott that has already wrecked the bus company and is seriously affecting half the mercantile interests of the town.

Negro domestics are still at work, but they are transported to their jobs by car pools. Negro retail trade is going in part to Negro stores and in part, through car pools, to stores in surrounding towns. Negroes constitute about half the population, but they account for no more than a quarter of retail business; but a reduction of that amount is enough to throw many establishments into the red.

Yet the economic loss to the Negroes too is considerable and the psychological strain is worse. That they have produced an effect is undeniable; but how much longer can they hold out? Until they have obtained their objectives? Nobody knows.

The announced objectives are really inconsiderable. Most of them the whites are willing to grant, and as to the others it is hard to believe that the Negroes care much. The original demands were three—no segregation in city buses; employment of Negroes as drivers and certain other jobs; no segregation in the intercity bus station. To all these the bus company and the City Commission agreed; but then the Negroes demanded dismissal of the charges against the demonstrators and return of the cash bonds posted, matters within the purview of the courts, not of the City Commission. On that demand negotiations stalled and the boycott continues.

In Check?

The argument of the whites is that they made concessions, whereupon the Negroes promptly increased their demands. Would not further concessions produce further demands beyond all bearable limits? The argument of the Negroes is that they gained their present advantage with enormous difficulty and at heavy cost; if they fail to exploit it, will such an opportunity ever come again? Possibly both are right; an outsider cannot tell.

But an outsider can perceive the deadly danger in the situation, for in the background is a third force that neither side cares to discuss. It is the irresponsible element in both races, held in check thus far, but for how much longer? Albany is for the Negroes a college town, for the whites a military town, with the great Air Force Base of Turner Field, and the still greater Marine Supply Base. Both factors make for discipline and order; but there is a vast hinterland not affected by either, backwaters prolific of tough Negroes and tougher whites. Let those once get out of control, and all that the damyankees have said falsely of Albany will come suddenly and horribly true.

Oh, yes, it is a civilized town; but it has a wolf by the ears.

Sterilization Curbs Population Explosion

By CLAIRE COX

NEW YORK (UPI) — A gardener aged 47, with three years of education and an income of $60 a week, and his 43-year-old dull-witted wife have 14 children, most of them retarded. The 15th child is on the way.

Miss X, a 23-year-old grammar school graduate who was born out of wedlock, has five children, each with a different father whose identities are unknown.

A well-to-do couple with two children have been told not to have any more because of a dangerous blood incompatability.

What should be done about these personal population explosions? Planned Parenthood efforts to introduce contraceptives in these families have failed, so the question is raised: "What about sterilization?"

Little public notice is given to sterilization, but considerable attention is accorded it through organizations such as the Human Betterment Association of America and hospitals such as New York's Mt. Sinai, where hundreds of sterilization operations are performed each year.

Mrs. Ruth Proskauer Smith, executive director of the Human Betterment Association, fine arts graduate of Radcliffe College, wife of a Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor and mother of two children, is one of the leaders of a campaign for voluntary sterilization for persons who either should have no children at all for eugenic or health reasons or should not have any more for medical or sociological reasons.

The association was born in New Jersey 20 years ago. A small group of members of the League of Women voters visited mental institutions, where they observed that two or more generations of several families were confined. This led to a eugenic interest in sterilization — primarily to halt the production of mentally deficient offspring.

"Gradually, the interest and belief in eugenics has changed," Mrs. Smith said in an interview. "The focus of interest has changed from th eugenic to the social approach."

The New Jersey group grew into a national organization in 1941, and it took the name of Birthright, Inc. It became the Human Betterment Foundation later and established New York headquarters, which serve as a clearing house for information to physicians, social agencies and hospitals.

When a family or individual parent seeks information, leaflets describing sterilization operations for men and women are sent along with an application form. The completed form is sent to a medical sub-committee on referrals composed of three specialists who either send the individual to a local doctor for a final decision, make an appointment for further evaluation or cite the applicant to a social agency that can help.

If a qualified family cannot afford the medical cost of sterilization, Human Bettermen gives financial help. Nearly 300 operations were performed at the recommendation of the association last year — "a drop in the bucket," according to Mrs. Smith. Mt. Sinai performs several hundred additional each year.

More than 900 physicians and quite a few hospitals accept referrals from Human Betterment, which turns down scores of applications every year. There are no set rules for accepting or rejecting, however. Each case is considered on its own.

Human Betterment operates with limited funds — the 1962 budget is $85,000 — so it cannot finance many surgical sterilizations. Right now it is concentrating its efforts on seeking the participation of more hospitals in the program.

Mrs. Smith said that many hospitals have no established policy on sterilization. Human Betterment is trying to persuade them to set up provisions allowing for sterilizations, where it is needed.

Teaching Is Exciting

To the Editor:

Gratifying as has been the response to my suggestions that students interested in taking part in the "Teachers for East Africa" program come by my office and talk with me about it, in actuality only a small number have secured the application forms which are now available in 313 Phillips Hall.

Here is a splendid opportunity to have a small but vital share in helping an emerging nation train its future leaders. Miss Emillee Hines, whose articles on Kenya are now running in the DAILY TAR HEEL, was one of those chosen for the program from our campus last year: and if her experiences are at all typical of what to expect, students accepted for the "Teachers for East Africa" program can look forward to an exciting and rewarding experience.

The coordinator of the program in Columbia University wrote me recently: "I hope that we may be able to select several students from the University of North Carolina this year who will be of the caliber of those we selected in 1961." So do I.

Prof's Race Study

'Let George Do It'

Gov. John Patterson of Alabama and Dr. W. C. George of Chapel Hill are teaming up in what looks like a futile effort to beat life into a dead horse.

Alabama has asked George to submit a detailed anthropological study on the relative mental capabilities of the Negro and the white man. The state hopes to use the retired University of North Carolina professor's findings in its efforts to maintain public school segregation.

We suspect they will establish the Negro's mental inferiority to their own satisfaction. Not that George will submit a dishonest thesis. He is professionally capable and can, no doubt, summon a host of facts and figures to "prove" the point Gov Patterson wants to make.

But George's report would not be complete without informing the people of Alabama that the scholastic leader in the University of North Carolina's Law School last year was a Negro.

This will serve one worthwhile purpose. It will show that the race is capable of producing superior individuals who, by being denied the best educational facilities a state has to offer, are treated as second class citizens. Not only is such an individual robbed of the right to burgeon out everything that is within him, but society is poorer because his talents are not allowed to develop fully.

Maybee this will get through to the Alabama governor in time. For the moment, we'll be satisfied if he notes that the atmosphere of academic freedom at the University of North Carolina tolerates the views of a professor willing to set out to prove Patterson's hypothesis on segregation.

If Patterson coveted that type of freedom and fair play, he would make another $3,000 available from his emergency fund to some other UNC professor willing to take an opposite view from that of George.

Clotfelter Promises No Reprints

The candidates said they would encourage edit page debate on major issues, "with one or more articles written from the various outstanding viewpoints."

Former asst. sports editor Wrye and former news editor Clotfelter are approved by the Publications Board and endorsed by the Student Party.

"Presently, there are no substantial restrictions or inhibitions on student letters-to-the-editor," they said in a statement.

Editor's Notes

"The editor's notes which are often attached to the end of letters, criticizing points made in the letter, discourage free and open controversy. We would stop this unfair practice.

"We also would impose no restrictions on subject matter or socio-political views expressed, and no unnecessary restrictions on length," said Wrye and Clotfelter.

The candidates said they would add several regular columnists to the edit page. At least one "light" column and a book-movie-theater review colum would be added, they said.

No Reprints

"There will be no reprints from other newspapers in the left-hand editor's column," said Wrye and Clotfelter.

"We will work to perpetuate the Daily Tar Heel tradition of editorial freedom," they said. ". . . Freedom from interference by either the University or student government."

"We will work for the increase of student government autonomy, and at the same time, keep the Tar Heel free of any degree of control by student government."

Strike Paralyzes Algeria

By PETER D. ROBINSON
United Press International

Silence descended on this city as if it were the middle of the night, but OAS posters commanding the citizens to arms portended new bloodshed to come.

The war between France and the Algerian Moslem nationalists ended at noon 6 a.m. EST and an eerie quiet descended on the Algerian cities accustomed to the sound of gunfire, the explosions of plastic bombs and the wailing of Arab women mouring their dead.

But France's war with the OAS was just beginning. The expected outburst of violence and an all-out terrorist campaign to wreck the cease-fire did not come at once. But the cities waited while tension mounted.

Almost the only sounds were those of the hobnailed boots of French security forces clicking on the pavements and their low voices as they concentrated their forces at the barbed wire barricades which separate the European and the Moslem quarters of the city.

Huddle In Homes

A few bombs sounded through the night and there was the occasional rattle of machinegun fire in the outlying districts of Algiers but Europeans and Moslems alike huddled in their homes, fearful of new OAS terror aimed at provoking violence that would delay Algeria's freedom.

The war of Algerian independence ended 7 years, 4 months, 18 days, and 11 hours after it began in 1954 with a "night of long knives" wielded by terrorists of the Algerian National Liberation movement FLN in a series of massacres across the huge territory.

By dawn Monday the OAS commandos had splattered the city with posters, "To arms, Citizens." They hung next to large posters placed by French authorities showing Moslem and European children with the inscription, "For our children, peace in Algeria."

Shutters Closed

Under a grey sky the shutters of the shops and apartment houses remained shut at midday. The usually bustling streets were empty except for a few Moslem ragpickers poking through overflowing garbage pails left uncollected by Monday's general strike.

In most cities there was no gas or electricity. Only automatic telephone exchanges were working. Gas and water supplies were normal in Algiers. But shops, business offices, gas stations and cafes closed their doors as Europeans and Moslems alike obeyed the strike call.

In Oran, a loud speaker car toured the streets calling for hospital workers to go to their jobs. Police said 1,500 hospital patients — some of them the victims of past terrorism — had to look after themselves this morning.

Grace Lured From Monaco To Make Hitchcock Movie

MONTE CARLO (UPI) — Grace Kelly, who gave up a million-dollar film career to become Princess Grace of Monace, will return to Hollywood this summer to make at least one more movie, it was announced Monday.

The aristocratic blonde will make the picture with director Alfred Hitchcock with whom she achieved stardom in his typically suspenseful stories.

It was while she was making one of the Hitchcock movies, "To Catch a Thief," on location on the Riviera that she met Prince Rainier.

In 1956, when she married the prince, she said she was giving up her film career.

A spokesman for Prince Rainier, Emile Cornet, announced that Miss Kelly would take advantage of a vacation in the United States this summer to make the movie in California.

Based On Novel

She will play the principal role in a story based on a novel by the English writer Winston Graham, "Marnie."

In Hollywood, a spokesman for the princess said Hitchcock, now making a new movie in northern California, was a good friend of Miss Kelly and often visited her in Monaco.

"He has always urged her to resume acting in films," the spokesman said. "It is an open secret that producers have been submitting scripts to her continuously.

"The princess never said she had given up her film career for certain. The prince has never objected to her doing another movie at the appropriate time. He will definitely come over to watch her work."

Money No Matter

The spokesman, who refused to go into figures, denied that Miss Kelly was making the movie for an unusually high salary.

"Money," he said, "has nothing to do with it. The prince and princess are far from being hard up very far from it."

Mike Hall, Dan Brock Sing In Folk Show Here March 24

On Saturday night, March 24, at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall, Graham Memorial introduces a new program—Folksounds '62 which will bring together on the stage the nationally famous "New Lost City Ramblers" and the best local folk artists, featuring Mike Hall, Dan Brock and others to be announced later.

Mike Seeger, John Cohen and Tom Paley are the New Lost City Ramblers. Organized since 1958, this trio—all young artists, has played to enthusiastic audiences from coast to coast. Rave notices have resulted from their performances at The Blue Angel in New York and from folk festivals. They have been particularly popular on college campuses.

Mike Hall and Dan Brock are both well known on campus and their skills are becoming more widely recognized. Each has a new recording—just out in the past few days. Mike appears on the ABC-Paramount label, doing the numbers that won him first place at the Goya Intercollegiate Folk Singing Contest held at Grossinger's in New York last summer. Dan's new record is published by Colonial and is already getting a lot of play (and favorable comment too) on all the local radio outlets.

"An interest in student activities can pay you dividends later on!"

Gibson F. Dailey, Asst. to the President

"Extracurricular activities never really interested me... architecture and construction always did. It's a paradox, though, because as it turned out student activities gave me a big jump on my career in construction.

"Studies educated me. But college activities provided the confidence I needed to approach the business world. Looking back, it was these activities that really gave me my first knowledge of people, administration, leadership.

"Working for the college newspaper, fun magazine, and engineering bulletin taught me writing—a gift I use today in the promotion and getting of new business. Student Council brought the chance to work with other men—a daily occurrence now. Penn's theatrical group and engineering shows helped me relax in front of an audience then—and help me find my voice when I'm talking to large groups now.

"True, today's heavy college curriculum doesn't allow much time for activities. There wasn't much time for them in my day either. I burned a lot of midnight oil on architectural studies, but difficult as they were I still found time for student activities.—I'm mighty happy that I did.

"If you have time during the rest of your years in school to take an interest in activities—do it! It's certain to pay big dividends in an inspiring future in the business of your choice."

Netters Seek Revenge For 1961 Losses

By LOUIS LEGUM

The Dartmouth tennis team will meet Carolina's heralded, but untried netters this afternoon at 2:00 p.m. on the varsity courts. The intersectional match will be the first for both teams.

Coach Donald Skakle will be seeking to avenge a pair of losses suffered at the opening of last season when the Dartmouth squad trounced Carolina 7-2 and 8-1. The debacle against Dartmouth marked the only loss for Tar Heel captain Keith Stoneman.

The starting line-up for UNC is expected to include, besides Stoneman, a quartet of four sophomores: George Sokol, Ted Hoehn, Bitsy Harrison, and Charlie Shaffer. In addition, Skakle will draw upon veterans Dave Morgan, Garland Carlton, Stan Cocke, Kirby Jones, and George Zimmerman.

Coach Skakle believes his team is ready, despite bad weather having cut down valuable practice time. After last year's "traumatic experience" against Dartmouth, he is expecting "a very interesting afternoon" in the encounter with the Indians from Hanover, N .H. Skakle reports that the morale and spirit is good on his squad, and that "if we can play as a team throughout the season, our fine talent should carry us a long way."

Coach "Red" Hoehn of Dartmouth is in the unusual situation of having to play against his son Ted. However, this year he has one of his typically strong and experienced teams. Led by captain and number one man Jimmy Biggs, the Indian netters will start five returning lettermen from an 11-4 season. Phil Meyers, Gordon Aydelott, Dave Smoyer, Doug Floren, and soph Doug Judah will be at the other respective starting postions.

The Dartmouth coach feels that his squad is about the same as last year's, although he anticipates a much tougher match against "a greatly improved" Carolina team.

KEITH STONEMAN, a junior from Greenville, S. C. leads North Carolina's tennis team as it opens its season this afternoon against Dartmouth. Stoneman teamed up with Bruce Sylvia last year to take the ACC doubles title and should be one of the top men in the 1962 singles competition.

Lacrosse Club Starts Season

By MARTY KRUMING

The North Carolina Lacrosse Club initiates its fourth season this afternoon as it plays host to a strong Dartmouth College contingent.

Head coach Sal Esposito predicts a rough battle in which his players must be in top shape in order to stay with the Indians. Dartmouth is a member o fthe Ivy League, a conerence in which lacrosse is almost as important and exciting as basketball and football.

Esposito's opening day lineup will show Tommy Thayer, a colorful stickhandler from Asheville, and Dave Garrett in the attack. The Tar Heels' strength lies in the midfield where freshman Don Marks will spearhead the backfield. In the defense Esposito will feature co-captain Will Brown while the other co-captain, Bill Bevis, will be positioned in the nets.

After this initial encounter, Carolina will face the Virginia Cavaliers, Washington and Lee, and Duke.

N. C. State Elects Baseball Captains

The three are Bob Conner, righthanded moundsman who will be the pack's No. 1 hurler this year; infielder Wayne Edwards of Red Springs and third baseman Vernon Strickland of Oxford.

Edwards hit .302 last year and Strickland was an all-ACC choice as a utility infielder last year with a .371 batting average, second best in the conference. Conner posted a 1.90 earned run average and had a 3-1 record.

Cindermen Open Season Vs. State

By MARTY KRUMING

Carolina's track squad moves out of the confines of the Tin Can and onto the open spaces of Fetzer Field this afternoon as it encounters State's Wolfpack in the first ACC dual meet of the outdoor campaign.

"We are expecting a real good battle although the boys will use this only as a warmup to the gruelling meet coming up with Clemson on Saturday," commented sprint and field coach Joe Hilton..

The Tar Heel lineup will consist basically of the members of the track squad which placed second to Maryland at the ACC Indoor Championships two weeks ago. Jim Brown, an impressive hurdler from St. Louis, and Bob Hart, 1962 indoor 600 champion from the nation's capitol will carry the lead in today's encounter. Brown will be competing in the high hurdles, low hurdles, and mile relay while Hart is slated for the 200 relay, half mile, and 100.

Without a doubt the Tar Heels have been handicapped by the temporary loss of javelin specialists Cutter Davis, Loren Wells, and Bob Lacey to spring football practice. Davis is the ace in this event as he copped third place in the conference last year. The discus section will also be below par as senior Jim Shumate and Chapel Hill sophomore Tommy Henley have also been put to use by Jim Hickey.

Track fans can expect plenty of thrills from Carolina's formidable pole vault combination of co-captain Barrie Tiedemann and junior sensation Heath Whittle from Davidson, both of whom cleared the 14' mark in indoor competition.

Bradley-Duquesne Match Tops NIT

By JOHN GRIFFIN

NEW YORK (UPI) — Revenge-bent Bradley tangles with swift Duquesne and St. John's tries to stop Jack (The Shot) Foley of Holy Cross in quarter-final games of the National Invitation Basketball Tournament at Madison Square Garden Tuesday night.

The Tuesday winners will meet in a semi-final game on Thursday, when Dayton and Loyola of Chicago will clash in the other semi-final.

St. John's, rated the top team in the east, is the only school to win the NIT title three times. Bradley can equal that record by winning the crown this year, but first the Braves from Peoria, Ill., have to settle a score with Duquesne, which upset Bradley, 73-72, during the regular season.

Bradley is led by 6-6 All-America Chet (The Jet) Walker and has additional height in 6-8 Dick Peterson and 6-5 Ed Wodka. Duquesne's biggest are Clyde Arnold and Paul Benec at 6-6, but the Dukes stress playmaking and defense with 5-9 sophomore Willie Somerset the key man.

Bradley and St. John's, as seeded teams, will be making their first appearance in the tournament. Duquesne gained this round with a 70-58 victory over Navy in the first round while Holy Cross scored a 72-71 squeaker over Colorado State.

"That game showed me we have two Foleys to worry about not one," said St. John's coach Joe Lapchick about the Holy Cross triumph.

Jack Foley, runner-up to Utah's Billy McGill for the national scoring championship with a 33 points per game average, scored 34 against Colorado State. But Bob Foley, no relation, was the big surprise when he ignored his 7-point average and scored 21.

"He didn't look like any 7-point man to me," said Lapchick.

Against Foley and Co. Lapchick will send a brilliant first team headed by 6-10 Leroy Ellis, one of the top prospects in the country. Not only is Ellis five inches taller than any Crusader, but he is amazingly fast and containing him will be a major problem for Holy Cross.

Lapchick is expected to assign 6-4 Willie Hall to guard the 6-5 Foley and 6-3 Kevin Loughery is likely to wind up against 6-3 Bob Foley.

Yanks Rack Up 9th Straight

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (UPI) — The unbeaten New York Yankees combined a sturdy offense with a tight defense Monday to achieve a 10-4 victory over the Milwaukee Braves, and run their winning streak to nine games.

The Yankees had two big innings. They clubbed starter Bob Shaw to the showers in a six-run outburst in the fifth inning, then added four in the seventh.

Roger Maris' double and triple and Bobby Richardson's three singles paced the 14-hit attack for the Yankees.

ST PETERSBURG, Fla. (UPI) — Veteran righthander Skinny Brown and rookie lefthander Tom Baker held the New York Mets to six scattered hits Monday in pitching the Baltimore Orioles to a 1-0 victory. It was the fifth straight defeat for the fledging Mets and their second shutout in nine games.

Baltimore scored its only run at the expense of Bob Miller in the fifth when Brooks Robinson tripled to deep left center and scored on Andy Etchebarren's fielder's choice.

UNC Baseball Team Leaves For Florida

By ED DUPREE

North Carolina's varsity baseball team left Chapel Hill yesterday aternoon or its annual trip to sunny Florida where they open their season Wednesday against the Gators of the University of Florida in a game at Gainesville.

Following Wednesday's game with Florida, the Tar Heels of Coach Walt Rabb have a second game scheduled Thursday with the same club and then meet Vanderbilt and Georgia Southern on Friday and Saturday, respectively.

Bernie Isgett will probably be behind the plate with Len Dellolio at first, P. W. Swing at second, Jim Speight at short, and Larry Neal at third.

Four line star state linksmen were ahead of Green as Houston completely dominated the 12-school field.

Kermit Zarley, who took over the lead from teammate Homero Blancas after the third round, finished with a final-day 73 to win the individual championship. Following Zarley's five-under-par 283 total, was Mark Hopkins. Hopkins carded a 285 for the three-day Invitational.

Blancas, after shooting a sizzling 66 in the opening round, finished with a 286 total fo rthird place. while Fred Marti was fourth with an even-par 288.

For Carolina, Jay Harris and Abe Andes both shot 301 while George Murphy came in with 305.

Stepp Officially In Editor's Race; Clotfelter, Wrye Propose Changes

Improvements Badly Needed, Aspirant Says

Ernest Stepp declared himself a candidate for editor of the DTH Tuesday by challenging Chuck Wrye and Jim Clotfelter in a personal letter to an open debate on policies and plans for the TAR HEEL.

Stepp, approved by the Publications Board and running as an Independent, said that his opponents would turn out the same biased, uninteresting paper now being issued.

"All the majority of the student body now does with the DTH is read 'Peanuts' and work the crosswork puzzle," the editorial candidate declared.

Staff Reorganization

He said that the DTH needs a major staff reorganization. Stepp cited plans to expand the present DTH staff to 50 members. Included in this expansion is an editorial staff of 15 members, containing various political and local views. Included on this staff would be a member representing each political party, the IDC, YDC, YRC, IFC and other important campus groups.

Stepp said that each writer should receive a byline for any story written by a student regardless of its length. The news staff of the DTH needs careful supervision and more students need to work on the DTH, he stated.

"When people try to work for the Tar Heel, they get the run-around and finally quit trying" Stepp declared. To solve this problem, Stepp plans to put an apprentcie program in the Tar Heel staff organization. All new staff personnel would serve time as apprentices to learn basic Tar Heel operations.

"Using this program, the paper can depend less on the UPI and more on campus news." Stepp labeled the present Tar Heel as "a miserable failure as a campus newspaper."

Stepp discounted his opponents' ideas about an "outspoken" editorial page. He pointed out that his 15 man editorial staff would present a variety of different viewpoints within itself. He termed the present page as "uninteresting, unfair and radical."

Candidate Stepp is a first semester senior in Journalism from Canton, but plans to remain in school for two more semesters. He is a member of the Press Club, AFROTC, and Pi Kappa Phi social fraternity.

Stepp started his journalism career editing the sports page of a small weekly newspaper at the age of 17. Last summer, he worked as a newsman, photographer, and feature writer for the Waynesville Mountaineer, averaging working a fifty-hour week. He has also worked as a newsman for WWIT radio, the Canton Enterprise, the Technique (Ga. Tech newspaper) and Bluets (Asheville-Biltmore Junior College literary magazine.)

Stepps has done some news and sports work for the DTH. He has

Stepp Challenges Rival To Debate DTH Policies

Jim,

Let's get this TAR HEEL editorship out in the open. I feel that we both agree that a good fight for the editorship will create more interest in the TAR HEEL, regardless of who wins.

Because the Carolina student body needs to know how we both feel on certain issues, I would like to challenge you to debate these issues in front of the general student body at your convenience. I feel that this debate should be open to anyone wishing to attend. Possibly, the Di-Phi would sponsor such a move.

I leave the decision to you.

I would also like to assure you and Chuck that regardless of how heavy the campaign gets, I have nothing personal against either of you. Newspapermen have thick skin.

All three of us are sincere in wanting a better DTH, but may disagree on how to achieve these goals.

Ernest

Clotfelter 'Always Willing'

"We have always been willing to debate any opponent at any mutually-convenient time and place," said Wrye and Clotfelter yesterday. "We would be happy to debate Stepp."

Lost City Group To Perform Here

The New Lost City Ramblers will be featured in the "Folk Sound 62" in Memorial Hall Saturday night and will be backed up in concert by folksingers from the UNC campus. The 8 p.m. program is being sponsored by Graham Memorial and will be free to both students and townspeople.

The New lost City Ramblers are a trio of singers and instrumentalists specializing in mountain string band and country music. Their performance will be a Carolina debut for the group although Mike Seeger, one of its members, visited the campus last year.

Appearing with the Ramblers will be a UNC folk music group that call themselves "The Chicken Farmers". The Chicken Farmers performed publically for the first time last Saturday night for the Peace Corps convention held on campus. This group's speciality is country hoe-down music and features the fiddling of Woody Wolfe and Cherrill Heaton's banjo.

Ballads and blues will be performed by U.N.C. students Mike Hall and Dan Brock. Brock, a junior from Kentucky has worked closely with one of the oldest and most respected figures in the field, Mr. John Jacob Niles.

Hall, troubador at the Ranch House, sings in three languages and is best known for his spirited American songs and blues.

Runningmates To Establish Beat System

Measures to increase the size of the Daily Tar Heel news staff and to "make its work more complete and efficient" were proposed yesterday by co-editor candidates Chuck Wrye and Jim Clotfelter.

Former asst. sports editor Wrye and former news editor Clotfelter have ben endorsed by the Publications Board and the Student Party.

They said they would add a full-time copy editor to the news staff. "The copy editor would read, write and rewrite copy, freeing the news editor to work with news sources and reporters," they said.

More Accurate

By the addition of a copy editor, the candidates said, "Tar Heel readers will get a more complete and more accurate newspaper."

The candidates said they would try to get a "stringer" in every dormitory, fraternity and sorority, and University school and department. The "stringer" would be a person responsible for reporting to the DTH the activities of his area," they said.

Under their proposed "beat system", said Wrye and Clotfelter, reporters would be regularly assigned to the most important areas of the campus, such as Student Legislature and the Office of Student Affairs.

Larger Staff

The candidates said they would work to recruit additional staff workers. "Because two people will hold the editor's position, we will have more time to devote to the staff," they said.

Wrye and Clotfelter said they would establish "an associative system with other North Carolina, Southern and major national college newspapers, for the rapid exchange of student-interest stories by phone or telegram.

Other daily college newspapers have such a setup already, they said.

Entertainment

The candidates also said they would add a regular entertainment column to the DTH, to include TV, movie, concert, lecture and theater events in the Chapel Hill-Raleigh-Durham area.

Wyre and Clotfelter stated they would also add a weekly feature by cartoonist Jules Feiffer, who is carried in Playboy magazine, the Village Voice, and many college newspapers.

"If these measures to bolster the staff and expand the scope of news coverage are successful," they said, "we would be in a better position to publish more six-page papers per week."

They said they hoped to be able to print two six-pagers each week, instead of the present one.

IDC

Will be a meeting of the IDC on 3rd floor New East Wed. at 7 p.m. The purpose of the meeting is the election of officers.

McDevitt Outlay Ruled As A Part Of Campaign Cost

Council Decision Supports Patterson

By CLYDE WILSON

The Constitutional Council yesterday ruled that expenses incurred by UP vice-presidential candidate Larry McDevitt before he was an official candidate were part of his $25 campaign expense limit. The Council's decision reversed a March 8 decision of the Elections Board.

Prior to the decision McDevitt announced that he planned to include the expenses in his limit whether the Council ruled in his favor or not because he felt his integrity had come into question. He did not wish to be elected, he stated, under any suspicion of lack of fairness, even "on the part of a minority of the student body."

Two Appeals

The Council ruling resulted from two appeals from an Elections Board decision that cards passed out by McDevitt before he was nominated by the UP convention were not expenses under the election laws.

An appeal was made by McDevitt, wishing to clarify his position, and another by student government vice-president Hank Patterson, an SP member.

The Council decided that the intent of the law required that such expenses should be part of campaign expense.

The Elections Board based its decision on the election laws definition of a "candidate" as qualified by "Party nomination, endorsement, Board selection or petition."

30 Day Limit

McDevitt said he was initially informed by members of the Elections Board that the cards distributed saying he was a "candidate for vice-president" and seeking student ideas would not be a part of campaign expenses if they were distributed more than 30 days before the election.

Elections Board chairman David Buxton said this was a common misconception, which he shared, of the election laws. The 30 day limit applies to parties and not to candidates.

Further investigation led McDevitt and Patterson to appeal to the Elections Board for a decision. Both said that they regretted that what should have been an administrative matter had been magnified into a campaign issue.

First Decision Invalid

A Friday decision by the Council upholding the Election Board ruling was invalidated when it was found that the constitution required all seven members of the Council to be present.

The Constitutional Council consists of three members from the Men's Council, three members from the Women's Council and the chairman of the Men's Council as chairman.

Independent Phelps Asks Wheless, Allen To Debate With Him

Party Choices Dodge Issues, He Charges

Independent presidential candidate Larry Phelps yesterday challenged the UP and SP candidates to include him in a debate planned between the two party candidates, and further challenged them to raise the campaign out of the trivialities of the campus and debate on what he considers are the vital national issues of today.

Phelps said that he talked with SP candidate Dwight Wheless Sunday night and that Wheless made no mention then of the debate. Wheless issued a challenge yesterday to UP candidate Inman Allen to a debate on the two party's platforms.

Non-Campus Issues

"Is it that the SP and UP don't consider us important enough to debate," he asked, "or are they afraid to debate with us on issues other than trivial campus affairs.

Phelps and vice-presidential candidate John Salter are running together as independents on a platform which advocates the election of the executive officers on three levels of issues: national, student-faculty and campus.

"The whole purpose of student government," the pair stated, "should be to create on campus a climate of student awareness of national issues. Student government should lead, but the present student government has forgotten its concept of leadership.

Disarmament And Integration

Phelps and Salter have stated in their platform that they believe integration and disarmament to be the most vital national issues of

Students Charged In Train Incident

By Richard Burns

Two UNC student debaters were among four men arrested in a Raleigh train station Sunday and charged with participating in an affray.

The students, Reuben Moore, a junior, and Charles Heatherly, a sophomore, were returning from a debating match in New York City. The other two men were Carey Newton Castleberry Jr., 31, and Russell Lawrence Bowling, 23, both of Sanford.

According to Heatherly, the trouble began en route from New York to Raleigh when another UNC student, a Negro, and Moore encountered abusive language in the club car of the train.

The remarks were made, Heatherly said, because of resentment towards the Negro's presence in the club car.

He said that the fighting started when they arrived in the Raleigh station but the Negro was not involved except to "pull us apart."

The students suffered cuts and bruises when Moore was knocked down and Heatherly went to get some of the men off him, Heatherly added.

He said that when he got up, there were several men scuffling around him and that he ran to draw some of the men away from Moore.

By this time, Dr. Donald Springen, also of UNC, brought Detective G. W. Maynard of the Seaboard lines to the scene.

Maynard took the four to Raleigh police headquarters where they were charged with participating in and affray and released on $50 bond.

The hearing will be at 11 a.m. April 2 in Raleigh court.

Heatherly said that he felt they were "fighting for a principle." "You can just let segregation go so far and then you have to back up," he added.

Discussions With Russians Are Planned

Carolina students will have an opportunity to participate in what likely will be a lively and informal discussion with Russian visitors presently on campus when the Carolina Forum sponsors an open meeting and reception tomorrow evening. An interpreter traveling with the visitors will be present.

The discussion will be held in Howell Hall auditorium at eight o'clock. Allen Ashby and Jim Roberts will preside and introduce the visitors. Several of the Russians will make brief talks and then answer any questions asked by those attending.

Infirmary

Students in the infirmary yesterday included Edgar Obrien, Donald Stapleton, John Thomas, William McAllister, Thomas Danill, and Thomas McKee.

New Winners Drawn

A new pair of winning numbers in the Campus Chest drawing was pulled yesterday. The winning numbers are 0780, which is good for a sport coat or a girl's rain coat, and 3108, which is good for five 20-minute back rubs from Whitehead.

Chest Chairman Charles Shelton urged all solicitors to have their collections in to the office by noon today.

Education Courses

With the possible exception of introductory hygiene, the most maligned courses at Carolina are in the Schoo of Education. Almost daily, one student or another comments on the "ridiculous" nature of the courses he or she is required to take in order to acquire a teaching certificate.

The gist of most complaints is that most education courses manage to separate the methods of teaching from the material to be taught.

This does not mean, always, that too much emphasis is being put on method at the expense of course study in the field to be taught. Things have not quite gotten to the stage that education courses are taught with the theory in mind that a teacher doesn't need to know his subject, as long as he knows how to teach it. At least, not yet.

But there does seem to be a general agreement that there is a tacit belief on the part of education instructors that the teacher has already picked up all he needs to know about the subjects he is to teach. Even where this is not true, there seems to be a lack of effective integration between subject to be taught and methods of teaching. Academic professors teach academic courses, and education professors teach education courses, and ne'er the twain shall meet.

One school of thought advocates almost complete emphasis on methods, another spurns method and sings the praises of "knowing what you're teaching."

Both approaches are extreme, it seems to us. An ideal approach would be a blending of the two in courses which delve into the deeper aspects of the seemingly simple material to be taught, which point to the difficulties which might be encountered in teaching it to different types of children, and which suggest methods to overcome these difficulties. Grammar school teachers could well benefit from a knowledge of theoretical math and how it relates to the teaching of arithmetic and math. Phonetics in relation to language teaching, organization of specific events and their interrelation in relation to history teaching, analytical approach in relation to science teaching — all these have been suggested before by educators, but few, if any of them have been adopted.

Their use would enable the teacher to function as she should — as someone who is able to provoke rather than pound, encourage rather than browbeat; who, in short, can teach instead of merely preach and methodize.

It seems to us that the problem with education courses is not that they don't give enough background in academics, or that they don't teach enough methods, but that they don't do either very well.

'Last Chance'

We don't know where they got our name, but an outfit in New York keeps sending us "last chance" opportunities to subscribe to a new magazine—"closely resembling the most expensive of limited edition volumes" — called "Eros."

Not that there's anything particulary unusual about new magazines; they crop up and die out with the frequency of fruit flies; it's just that this one will apparently carry some interesting — definitely interesting — articles.

This magazine has something for everyone — no pun intended.

For the adventurer: "The Love Lives of Pirates."

For the traveler: "Vice in Old New York."

These, of course, are not all the significant articles the pages of this "lavish editorial package" — it says in the folder. There are a few that defy classification — with more universal appeal, you might say. How about "The Memoirs of a Stripper"? Or "Love in the Subway"?

The price for this "sophisticated quarterly" — and we'll admit that it does sound sophisticated all right — is "only" $19.95 for four issues. If anyone is interested, we have two or three extra folders.

Clarification Needed

The Constitutional Council yesterday reversed the Elections Board ruling not to include the cost of printed cards distributed by vice-presidential candidate Larry McDevitt prior to his nomination by the University Party.

In doing so, the Council established what we hope will be a precedent in such cases. The decision also cleared the air of the fog surrounding the question of what will or will not be considered campaign expenses.

This will help to forestall future mistakes by candidates who could be misled by the ambiguous nature of the definition of a candidate. This, we believe, was the case with candidate McDevitt. On the basis of an opinion by a member of the Elections Board — an opinion which the Constitutional Council declared incorrect yesterday — McDevitt went ahead with the printing and distribution of the cards.

Had the definition been clear, neither the Board member nor McDevitt would have been misled. This should be a clear indication that the definition shoud be clarified in the existing elections laws to further strengthen the precedent set yesterday.

Candidates Answer

What Is The Role Of NSA?

Editor's Note: The following answers by the eight candidates for the National Student Association are in reply to the editor's query: What is the role of NSA?

This is the first time NSA delegates will be elected, rather than appointed by the president of the student body. The candidates will answer three additional questions in future issues of the DTH.

* * *

What is the role of the U. S. National Student Association? Since the most appropriate response to this question is in excess of the space allotted to each candidate for the National Student Congress, we have chosen to answer it together. The "role" of the U.S.N.S.A. is most clearly expressed by the goals set in the Preamble of the Association's Constitution. We quote:

to maintain academic freedom, academic responsibility and student rights;

to stimulate and improve democratic student government;

to develop better educational standards, facilities and teaching methods;

to improve student cultural, social and physical welfare;

to promote international understanding and fellowship;

to guarantee to all people, because of their inherent dignity as individuals, equal rights and possibilities for primary, secondary and higher education regardless of sex, race, religion, political belief or economic circumstance;

to foster the recognition of the rights and responsibilities of students to the school, the community, humanity and God;

and to preserve the interests and integrity of the government and Constitution of the United States of America.

—BILL HARRISS
—HANK PATTERSON
(S.P.)

The role of the USNSA is that which is desired by the constituent student governments, as expressed at the National Student Congress (NSC).

NSA should be active in many fields. One of the prime functions of NSA is and should be the aid and development of democratic student governments. I feel that NSA has been sliding in this field, and I will work to strengthening of this aspect and for the creation of more benefits directly to the student.

NSA must continue to serve as the voice and leader of American students in national and international issues affecting students. By keeping students informed through conferences and pamphlets and by maintaining international student cooperation, the issues can be intelligently considered and resolutions passed at the Congress.

—BILL STRAUGHN

I do not believe that NSA should be an organization of the quasi-radicals of this college generation for the purpose of presenting a unified and, thereby, more efficacious stand upon important issues.

Rather, I believe that when an NSA resolution begins "We the students of the United States", it should mean just that; for if used wisely ,NSA presents the best opportunity available to demonstrate to the nation and the world that the American college student is progressive, yet not radical; concerned, yet not a Quixotic crusader; perhaps a trifle dreamy and idealistic, yet sufficiently responsible to provide the leadership required for the next generation.

—DICK AKERS

Although it operates on many different levels, the National Students Association acts most significantly when it addresses itself to the task of promoting the cultural, social, and physical welfare of all peoples, expressing its faith in universal human dignity, and providing a forum where the students of America may meet and discuss all issues of national and international importance.

—JOE MASI
(U.P.)

If NSA is to perform its role, which is to represent college students, delegates to its National Congress should be elected by the entire student body, and, unlike recent years, Carolina will have such an election next Tuesday.

Securing a good education for students during their college years should be the primary concern of NSA. In this connection, the program awarding a scholarship to outstanding foreign students for a year's study in an American university is commendable.

—MACK ARMSTRONG
(U.P.)

The role of the National Student Association is two-fold: on the domestic scene to concern itself with the questions of quality education, the proper functioning and role of student governments, and academic freedom; on the international scene to concern itself with the problems of students everywhere and how these can be solved within a democratic framework in response to the challenge of Communism. Its international aspect is its most important because it represents a free-world confrontation of Communism.

—BILL IMES
(U.P.)

Editor's Note: Due to unforeseen circumstances, Charles Heatherly (U.P.) was not able to turn in an answer.

Tomorrow the candidates will answer the question: In what manner, if any, should NSA take stands on national and international issues?

Hey, you guys have to get in line, too!

Student Government Blasted

To the Editor:

It has been heartening to many campus liberals to hear that Larry Phelps, a candidate for the student presidency, is attacking the present nature of student government and advocating the participation of students in affairs of national importance.

We came to Chapell Hill, that vaunted bastion of southern liberalism, expecting to find it a hive of busy intellectual activity, and found instead its only debating society, the Di Phi, was passing motions with a vote of three in favor and one against (actually a rather good turn-out for the Di Phi), that its only official journal of opinion, PARLANCE, died after its first issue thru lack of subscribers, and that the Student Legislature was sometimes unable to pass bills because it lacked a quorum.

We found that the most active groups on campus, apart from the Y (an honorable exception to most of the charges made in this letter, though even it manages to tinge some of its most worthwhile projects with the air of a Sunday school picnic) were the fraternities and the honorary societies — groups devoted almost entirely to social snobbery and personal vanity. And we decided that the only redeeming feature of those sickening public eulogies that Big Men On Campus spend so much of their time making about one another was the universal cynicism with which they always seemed to be received.

As for student government, it seemed a mere sop thrown to democracy by the Administration. For in reality it is powerless, and as a natural human consequence its members are constantly trying to convince themselves of the importance of the endeavor in which they are engaged. Student governmnt survives, not because it is of any use to the student body as a whole, but because it too is a source of individual prestige for those who seek glory, and, more importantly, because it performs several useful functions for the administration. It has the purely economic function of saving the employment of various petty officials — in particular, the Honor System makes the proctoring of examinations unnecessary. Furthermore, it informs the Administration as to the state of campus opinion. In this way, by making minor, grudging reforms from time to time the Administration is able to make sure that no really radical protest movement will ever sweep the campus. And in providing an official forum for the presentation of student opinion, it serves the related function of supplying a safety-valve for the eruptions which so often have caused European and Latin American students to take a leading role in movements for social change.

Student government's main vice, then is the passive one of draining student intellectual energy into useless channels. But occasionally it can be actively obnoxious in its own impotent manner. A typical instance was the vote by Legislature two years ago to name a day John Motley Morehead Day, after the donor of that invaluable sun-dial. While really a very small decision, this gesture, showing equal degrees of servility and cupidity, was still enough to provide a surge of private anger and public embarrassment in some people on campus, who feel that to be the largest shareholder in Union Carbide should be reward enough for Mr. Morehead.

We hope that all those liberals on campus who share our belief that student government is in need of a radical overhaul and who believe, as we do, that the student body should be more concerned with national issues will cast their votes for Larry Phelps and John Salter.

SP Vs. UP

Randall Compares Legislative Records

To the Editor:

The University Party has recently passed a platform which promises a great deal to the campus. It is a fact, however, that very little can be done in Student Government until a bill is passed by the Student Legislature. In this connection, it is interesting to see a comparison of the number of bills introduced by the members of the two party caucuses which were passed during the period from 1958-1962:

Session Number	SP	UP
26th*	35	10
27th	48	15
28th	24	5
29th*	16	10
30th*	13	9
31st	33	3
32nd	34	6
	203	58

* Sessions in which the UP had a majority. Data for the 32nd assembly includes all bills introduced and not withdrawn or defeated by March 13, 1962.

This data clearly shows that the Student Party has introduced 77.7% of all legislation introduced during the past four years. This means that during the past year the Student Party has introduced more legislation than the University Party has introduced during the last four years!

It is easy to see from that data that the past year has not been an exception to the general rule. The Student Party legislators were responsible for 67 bills and the University Party only 9. The usual justification for this lack of legislative activity is that the University Party has been out of power. However, it should be noted that the University Party controlled the legislature in 3 out of the 7 sessions and the executive branch in 4 out of the 7 sessions (27th, 28th, 29th, 30th).

This information is taken from official records of the Student Legislature, which are available in the Student Government office for anyone who wishes to check.

Independents Will Ask For Student Coop

To the Editor:

Although we firmly believe the main issue of this presidential and vice-presidential election is the creation of an effective student voice which will be a guide for the student body, we are not unaware of local problems.

Probably the most pressing local issue concerns the prices we pay here in Chapel Hill. Realizing this, we asked a graduate student in economics to investigate the feasibility of a merchandising co-op being started in this community. Following are excerps from his report:

"Chapel Hill and U.N.C. needs a consumer's cooperative. It is time that the local monopolies were faced with some organized competition. Certainly, no one would claim that the Merchants' Association intends to foster competition. Nor can the University's retail establishments compete with private business according to state law. Consequently, goods sold at the Book Exchange are priced after the pattern of the private businesses, and excess profits are used to provide scholarships to athletes while other students who find it diffcult to make ends meet must pay these high prices. Food, clothing, books, and drugs can be provided at prices equal to those of the lowest priced businesses in the area.

Meanwhile dividends on the basis of each member's volume of purchases can be paid every six months. Since faculty, students, and staff number together about 15,000 to 20,000 customers, this presents a good basic core for membership. Additional buying power provided by the townspeople and people of surrounding communities should rid all of doubts concerning the size of sales volume. In terms of income the buying power of the community is one of the highest for a community of its size.

"The cooperative should be organized on an incorporated basis. A Nominal price for membership shares would allow everyone to join. The advantages of limited liability, permanence, bond financing, legal entity, large-scale economics, and others would be available on a basis that the normal retail establishment in Chapel Hill finds unattainable.

18 AF Planes Still Seeking Crash Clues

CLARK AFB, The Philippines (UPI)—The U. S. Air Force Tuesday began reducing the size of its search for clues to an American airliner that disappeared over the Pacific five days ago. .

Officials here sent out 18 search planes and said fewer will fly Wednesday unless some trace of the plane is found. Approximately 200,000 square miles of ocean have been covered.

The four-engine Flying Tiger Constellation carrying 107 persons was on a 1,500-mile flight from Guam to the Philippines when it disappeared Thursday night in good flying weather and without sending out a single distress call that was heard.

Aboard were 93 U. S. Army Rangers en route to Communist-threatened South Viet Nam, 11 American civilian crew members and 3 Vietnamese military specialists.

The joint search coordinating center on Guam said the USS Cayuga County recovered a possible clue to the disappearance when its picked up a piece of aluminum tubing.

The tubing had been floating 65 miles southwest of the area where a freighter sighted a flash in the sky the night the Constellation vanished. A Lockheed aircraft representative said it had not yet been determined if the tubing was part of the plane.

Search planes from here continued to spot driftwood and other debris and one of them reported what could have been a piece of luggage floating in the water. However, the report failed to lift the feeling of futility here.

White House Denies Nixon Statement That JFK Was Briefed On Invasion

By MERRIMAN SMITH

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The White House Tuesday denied former Vice President Richard M. Nixon's statement that President Kennedy was told during the 1960 election campaign of U. S. plans to support an invasion of Cuba.

Nixon charged in his new book, "Six Crises," that Kennedy endangered U. S. security when he came out publicly on Oct. 20 for U. S. intervention in Cuba and aid to anti-Castro forces. Nixon said Kennedy previously had been briefed by the Central Intelligence Agency on plans for the Cuban invasion.

In challengeing Nixon's version—obviously with the President's approval — the White House suggested that his account was "apparently based on a misunderstanding." It said Kennedy was not informed about the proposed invasion until a month after he had spoken out — and after he had been elected.

Issues Statement

"The President does not believe that intelligence briefings are a proper subject of public debate," Press Secretary Pierre Salinger said, "but in the light of the account in Mr. Nixon's book it is necessary to say that the then Sen. Kennedy was not told before the election of 1960 of the training of troops outside of Cuba or of any plans for 'supporting an invasion of Cuba.'

"Sen. Kennedy received two briefings from Mr. Allen Dulles of the CIA, the first on July 23, 1960, and the second on Sept. 19, 1960. The two briefings covered an overall review of the world situation, during which Cuba was mentioned.

"But Sen. Kennedy was first informed of the operation to which Mr. Nixon refers in a briefing by Allen Dulles and Richard Bissell of the CIA deputy director for operations given in Palm Beach, Fla., on Nov. 18, 1960."

Expects Questions

Salinger had prepared his statement in anticipation of news inquiries submitted to him at his mid-day briefing. The press secretary said the President had read certain sections of Nixon's book but not the entire volume. As far as he knew, Salinger added, no advance copy was sent to the White House although he obtained one from a friend.

Nixon wrote in his book that Kennedy's Oct. 20 call for U. S. intervention in Cuba enraged him because he thought his opponent was using information obtained in a CIA briefing for political advantage. He said it was the only time he got angry at Kennedy during the campaign.

Nixon wrote that he had been advocating inside the Eisenhower administration that anti-Castro forces be armed, but could not say so publicly.

Airlines Lost $34 Million Last Year

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The nation's major airlines wound up last year with net losses of more than $34 million final industry figures for 1961 revealed Tuesday.

The red ink total was $4 million higher than the Air Transport Association ATA estimated last December. At the time, ATA set the airlines' net loss for the year at about $30 million based on complete financial returns for the first nine months.

Four carriers — Trans World, Eastern, National and Northeast — were responsible for the entire deficit. The seven other trunk airlines reported modest profits, but not a single one achieved the 10.5 per cent return on investment which the Civil Aeronautics Board CAB has deemed reasonable.

ATA also reported that the airlines dropped another $5.7 million in January of this year, about $1.7 million more than the net losses suffered in January, 1961.

Chemist Discovers New Clotting Agent

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A biochemist Tuesday announced discovery of a new blood clotting agent which he said "promises to revolutionize" research on thrombosis and hemorrhagic disease.

Thrombosis is clotting inside the body. It may cause paralysis or coronary thrombosis, an increasingly common heart malady. Hemorrhagic diseases, such as hemophilia, are caused by failure of the blood to clot.

The new agent is autoprothrombin-C, the most powerful clotting factor known except for thrombin. Thrombin, as has long been understood, is the material directly responsible for clotting.

Dr. Walter H. Seegers of the Wayne State University College of Medicine announced discovery of the new agent at the 141st national meeting of the American Chemical Society. He said it is so closely associated with thrombin that it went unnoticed until recently.

Both substances, a society report said, are enzymes, "Body chemicals that control the speed of life processes." Both come from prethrombin, an inactive material present in normal blood.

Seegers, who has been doing research in blood chemistry for 25 years, said that "so far as we know, this is the first time in the study of enzymes that two of them have been obtained simultaneously from a single parent compound." Seegers was head of research teams that isolated prethrombin in 1953 and thrombin in 1958.

He said the newly discovered agent functions in the chemical process that changes prethrombin into thrombin. Thrombin, he said, cannot be quickly produced without the presence of autoprothrombin-C.

Even dilute solutions of the new enzyme, when mixed with a little fat and added to blood, produce thrombin so rapidly that the blood clots in a few seconds, Seegers said.

Seegers said scientists are extremely interested in this aspect of blood chemistry because "thrombosis is one of the most consequential health complications of our time," and thrombosis is caused by blood clotting.

Similarly, he said, "the hemorrhagic diseases can be understood fully only when we know why this clot fails to form."

Israeli Boats Fight Syrians Second Time

TEL AVIV (UPI) — Syrian shore batteries and two Israeli patrol boats on the Sea of Galilee fought a 10-minute battle Tuesday in the second clash in three days between the two countries.

A military spokesman said two Israeli policemen aboard the boats were wounded when Syrian units on the eastern shore opened fire with mortars, machine guns, anti-tank guns and rifles.

The United Nations began investigating the incident immediately.

The Israeli spokesman said the first boat returned the fire with machine guns and that the second sped to the scene from farther north.

In Baghdad, the radio broadcast a report from Damascus saying Syrian artillery shelled Israeli patrol boats "which repeated their attempt to penetrate into the waters of the demilitarized zones."

Last Friday night Israeli soldiers launched a seven-hour attack on a Syrian fortification north of Nuqeib on the eastern shore of the biblical Sea of Galilee.

Both sides suffered about 30 dead and 30 wounded in the battle. Israel said later it attacked because of Syrian "acts of aggression" which included firing on Israeli patrol boats.

Observers were quoted by Israeli sources as reporting the spotting of Syrian Russian - built MIG fighters flying over the demilitarized zone.

Israel fishermen said Syrians stole nets cast off the eastern shore near Syrian territory Monday. The Syrians also were reported fishing in waters near the northeastern shore of the sea in Israel territory.

The historic sea area has become a focal point of Arab-Israeli friction since the Israel government announced the intention to divert Jordan River waters. Israel has said it will irrigate the Negev esert.

Jackie Says Farewell To Indian People

NEW DELHI (UPI)—Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy, radiant in a gown of deep red and snowy white, presided over a farewell-to-India dinner Tuesday night in the jewel-like new American embassy.

The First Lady sat alone for a time on a stairsteps leading up from a pool with Premier Jawaharlal Nehru in animated conversation. The two have got along famously during Mrs. Kennedy's 10-day visit.

Wednesday, Jackie flies to Pakistan. She goes first to Lahore where Kipling's "Kim" once played in the streets and where the gardens of Shalimar delight the eye.

Mrs. Kennedy was winding up her 10-day stay in India with a flourish.

On her departure from the pink city of Jaipur Tuesday morning, she gave a rose to a gallant Maharaja when the 53-year-old prince surprised her with a quick kiss on the cheek. The Maharana looked on in smiling approval.

Touch Of Vegas

The formal banquet Tuesday night was in a setting of almost make-believe beauty, albeit with a touch of Las Vegas more than ancient India. The embassy is a two-story structure of glass, marble and white stones. In the court yard, fountains shot up toward a full moon.

As Jackie arrived at the embassy, four Indian Kumaris—girls in their teens — stepped forward and performed for her the Hindu "arti," a fire ceremony in which they prayed to God to bestow on her a long, prosperous and happy married life.

They carried silver plates filled with flowers, colored powders and cotton soaked in butter oil which they set afire.

Stepp said he made no effort to receive backing of either political party. He charged that "a man elected on a party ticket can not be fair to the other party. Above all, the TAR HEEL has got to become fair and honest,' he added.

Stepp said that the idea of co-editors "would only confuse the paper and its staff. Every day an executive decision must be made at the office and only one man can make those decisions. If student government wanted a co-editor system, they would not establish the office of editor. One job needs only one man," he added.

Stepp charges Clotfelter and Wrye with trying to inherit the job of being editor. He asserted that they will put out almost the same paper as the Tar Heel now is.

"If the student body wants the same paper they are now reading, if they think the DTH is a good student newspaper, then I urge them to vote for Jim and Chuck. If the student body wants something better, then I want their vote," Stepp concluded.

Netters Smash Dartmouth, Meet Indians Again Today

The UNC tennis team methodically crushed Dartmouth yesterday, 9-0, before one of the largest crowds in several years. The surprising Tar Heels swept all but two sets as they gained revenge for two defeats handed them by Dartmouth last season.

In the singles competition, number one man Keith Stoneman set the pace for his team with a brilliant victory over Dartmouth ace Jim Biggs. Mixing a strong net game with a sweeping cross-court backhand shot, the 6-3 UNC captain easily grabbed the initial set, 6-1. Despite a game rally by Biggs, Stoneman hung on to win 9-7 in the second set and close out the match.

Coach Don Skakle's four talented sophomores successfully followed the triumph of Stoneman as they failed to drop a set in the singles. George Sokol, playing at the second position, wore down Phil Meyer with his consistent groundstrokes. Ted Hoehn, son of the Dartmouth coach, won handily over Gordon Aydelott, 6-1, 6-2. Charlie Shaffer, who hasn't played regularly in almost two years, was all over the court with a relentless net game, defeating Dave Smoyer, 6-0, 6-3.

Hampered by a sore arm, Bitsy Harrison fought off a determined Doug Floren to win, 6-4, 9-7. In contrast, veteran Dave Morgan breezed to a 6-1, 6-1 victory against Doug Judah.

The doubles featured a sparkling exhibition by Stoneman and Shaffer. The two completely dominated the court with a collection of shots that brought frequent applause from the enthusiastic crowd. Biggs and Floren were the 6-2, 6-2 victims of the Tar Heel duo. In the number two doubles Hoehn and another sophomore, Sam Applegate, struggled to a three-set marathon win over Meyer and Aydelott, 6-4, 8-10, 6-2. The final match went three sets also, as lettermen Stan Cocke and Garland Carlton combined to pull out an uphill 3-6, 8-6, 6-1 triumph.

Coach Skakle commented after the match that he thought his team played well considering it was their first outing. However, "I look for some improvement as the season wears on." It will be fairly difficult, though, to improve upon the perfect 9-0 score against a Dartmouth team that is annually one of the best in the East.

The Indian netter coach was full of praise for the youthful Tar Heels, stating that "Carolina has certainly lived up to its preseason expectations. But that doesn't mean we won't be fighting hard tomorrow afternoon." The personable Dartmouth mentor added that his team came to Chapel Hill without virtually any practice, the result of a snow-filled March in Hanover, N. H.

Today the two teams will meet again to test whether Carolina is as powerful as it so convincingly demonstrated in its season's opener. The match will begin at 2:00 p.m. Both coaches hinted that there may be now pairings for the contest.

Powerful Dartmouth Defeats UNC Lacrosse Club By 22-1

By MARTY KRUMING

Dartmouth's powerful lacrosse squad lived up to coach Sal Esposito's expectations as it rolled to a 22-1 victory over an inexperienced Tar Heel unit yesterday afternoon on Navy Field.

From the opening gun the Green Wave from New Hampshire amazed the considerably large crowd with its deft ball control and aggressive style of play. Capitalizing on a swift moving attack and midfield, Darthmouth rallied for five goals in the first period, five in the second, six in the third, and eight in the final.

Carolina's only tally of the afternoon came in the initial quarter when wing attackman Allie Tyler singed the nets unassisted. From that point on it was the Indian's ball game as they played a "cat and mouse" game around the Tar Heels' goal for four periods.

For the first two periods UNC's attack was overly cautious as it peppered the opposing cage with only ten shots. After the halftime intermission Carolina appeared ready to cut down Dartmouth's 10-1 lead. Inspired by the aggressive play of attackman Tommy Thayer and midfielder Bob Kempner, the Heels began to pinpoint their passes and concentrate on a close guarding defensive strategy. But the Indians soon returned to their first half style and the host team settled back to a long, frustrating afternoon.

Although this was the initial game for both squads, Carolina had only had the benefit of five days practive prior to yesterday. Esposito realizes that the Tar Heels have a great deal to iron out, but many aspects of the encounter were most encouraging.

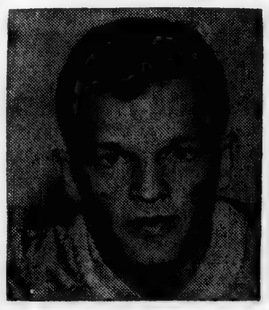
UNC Wrestlers Leave For Finals



DICK BLACKMAN

Three members of the North Carolina wrestling team which finished second in the Atlantic Coast Conference to Maryland left this morning for the NCAA wrestling championships at Stillwater, Okla.

Sam Barnes, wrestling coach and former Oklahoma A & M wrestler, will accompany the trio of Tar Heels on the trip.

The national championships are scheduled for Thursday, Friday, and Saturday on the Oklahoma A & M campus and such wrestling powers as Lehigh, Army, Oklahoma, and the host school will be represented.

Pete Gilchrist, a senior from Charlotte, will compete in the 137-pound division at Stillwater. Gilchrist scored 36 points during the 1961-62 regular season to become the top point-maker in UNC wrestling history.

Dick Blackman also broke the previous school record of 30 points and finished the season with a total of 32. A junior from Whiteville, Blackman was second in the ACC finals in the 157-division.

Tar Heel Swimmers Place 6th In East

By ED DUPREE

North Carolina's swimmers captured sixth place at New Haven, Conn., last weekend in the Eastern Championships as Thompson Mann took second places in the 100- and 200-backstroke events.

Mann also anchored the 400-freestyle relay team to a third place finish behind Harvard and Williams. Willie Bloom, Harry Schiffman, and Bob Bilbro teamed up with Mann to set a new ACC record of 3-21.1, bettering the old conference mark of 3:23 set against UNC by N. C. State earlier this year. In a tight finish, Harvard's freestylers finished in a time of 3:20.

N. C. State's swimmers finished fourth. Princeton, Yale, and Harvard — all of the Ivy League — racked up the top three berths, and Villanova finished fifth. Maryland, the ACC champions, were well down the list of approximately 35 teams.

Mann bettered the meet records in both the 100- and 200-backstroke events, but Graef of Princeton finished ahead of him both times. The UNC sophomore star swam a 48.8 leg in the freestyle relay.

Frank Lea bettered the UNC record when he took ninth place in the 1500 freestyle race with a time of 19:31. Lea also swam in the 220 and 440 races. Art Merrill placed in the top 20 in each of the three races.

Linksmen Defeat Dartmouth Easily

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina's golfers opened their 1962 dual meet season in fine style yesterday afternoon as they routed visiting Dartmouth, 4½-2½.

The contest played on the University-owned Finley Golf Course, was never in doubt as Carolina took every individual match as well as copping all best-ball competition.

Also competing in the first foursome were UNC's Jay Harris and the Indians' Dave McCollum, Harris and McCollum deadlocked in their individual match, 1½-1½. Carolina won in best-ball, 3-0.

Points are decided on both a match and medal play basis. A golfer scores one point for a match play win on the front nine, one point for a like win on the back nine and one point for an overall medal play victory. Thus, many half points may occur when players "halve" a nine.

In the second foursome, the Tar Heels' Abe Andes and George Murphy beat Steve Bloom and George Linck by identical 3-0 scores. Carolina again took the best-ball competition, 3-0.

Hill, from Plymouth, N. C. playing in the third foursome, took medalist honors for the day with a two-under-par 70.

Cincy, OSU Coaches Decline Assumptions, Point Only To Friday's Semifinal Games

By John G. Dietrich

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — Ed Jucker and Fred Taylor, the two men most vitally concerned, declined to go along Tuesday with a widespread assumption that their Cincinnati and Ohio State teams will meet Saturday night in college basketball's greatest rematch.

Taylor, whose Buckeyes must be absolutely aching for another shot at the NCAA title against the same Cincinnati team that beat them out of it in overtime a year ago ,blandly skipped over the matter Tuesday in a conference telephone chat among coaches of the four NCAA finalists.

"We are looking no further than Wake Forest Friday night," insisted Taylor, "you can't do much at all if you don't win the first one."

Ohio State and Wake Forest clash at 7:30 p.m., EST, in the eastern half of the NCAA university division finals, while Cincinnati's defending champions meet the surprising UCLA Bruins in the western half at 9:30 p.m.

Even a reminder from sports writers sitting in on the call that the Buckeyes blistered Wake Forest by 22 points on the Demons' own floor last December didn't divert Taylor from the game at hand.

"We feel Wake Forest may have been too high for that game, too excited," Taylor said, "while we had just come off a tough game with Wichita and took it more or less in stride. Besides, assistant coach Frank Truitt reports that Wake Forest is improved a great deal since then. In a way this is an entirely different season."

Jucker maintained much the same line in regard to UCLA, although the Bruins failed to convince many of their own West Coast fans even while they were winning 11 of their last 12 games and the Big Five title.

"We respect John Wooden's team," Jucker insisted. "They are well coached and we will have our hands full."

UNC Baseball Team Starts Season Today At Florida

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

UNC's baseball team opens its 1962 season this afternoon as the Tar Heels take on the University of Florida at Gainesville in the first game of their annual southern tour.

Coach Walter Rabb's nine will follow up the opener with a second contest against Florida's Gators on Thursday and games with Vanderbilt and Georgia Southern on Friday and Saturday.

Rabb, in his sixth season as head coach, plans to start untested sophomore pitchers in most of the games, while holding out the veterans for relief chores.

Soph. Andy Billesdon, a 6-3 soph from Lothrup Village, Mich. is slated to start this afternoon for Carolina with co-captain Dave Murr in the bullpen. Junior Larry Jenkins may hurl Thursday with Spencer Willard, another sophomore, ready to go Friday.

Rabb has three lettermen returning to his infield and one to the outfield from last year's team, which compiled a 10-4 record in the ACC while finishing second to Duke.

Second baseman Paul Swing and third sacker Larry Neal—both of whom batted .300-plus last spring will hit one-two in Rabb's batting order. Sophomore shortstop Jim Speight will bat third with Durham senior Russ Hollers, the centerfielder, hitting in the cleanup position.

Carolina Caravan

By Jake Wade

By JAKE WADE

It's no longer any secret that the University of North Carolina plans to employ the three-platoon system in football next fall. Coach Jim Hickey and his staff are excited over the possibilities of the plan, similar to that used so successfully by L.S.U.

Carolina's two-way or starting team will be known as the Blues. The Offensive team will be called the Rams. This is the "Go" group and rams are known to do that when infuriated or inspired or both. The Defensive platoon has been tagged the Tar Heels, suggesting the stickiness of tar.

More boys get to play in a system of this kind, and there are evidences here already that this program has been a big booster to morale. The Tar Heels had a hard time getting started with off-season football on account of the weather but they are in high gear now and competition for places on the team is spirited.

* * *

WELL PLEASED—It's the talent that counts most, so a system is no better than how the lads perform. In the first full-scale scrimmage of winter practice, the Tar Heels generally performed well.

Unless our tired old eyes deceive us, Co-Captains Joe Craver and Ward Marslender are heading up a squad with much more speed than recent Carolina teams possessed. The linemen seem to move well and there are backs who can get away. Maybe some of track coach Dale Ranson's "Fleetness Running" has rubbed off on them.

Craver and Marslender are two of the best and the long range feeling is that both will rank high when all-star honors are passed out next fall. They are not the only ones, of course, and there is a strong sophomore accent on this squad. It looks like a lot of new faces will be seen in Carolina's triple-lineups.

Ronny Jackson, for example, has put on some weight to take him out of the midget class and he's a lad who has the equipment to break up some ball games and the color to excite the fans. Ronny is the rising sophomore from Rocky Mount who at times was sensational for the freshmen in 1961.

ALUMNI GAME — Plans have gone out for the Alumni Varsity game on April 7 which will wind up off-season practice. Joe Davies and his Carolina Monogram Club are doing a fine job in promoting the game, proceeds from which go to the Monogram Club's Scholarship fund, used to assist deserving athletes without grants-in-aid.

More than 70 "Old Grads" have indicated they will be here. Some of course have passed the point where they can play and others will be used sparingly. But it will be good to see the old heroes back on campus and they are looking forward to the various festivities to be held in conjunction with the game.

Most of the serious play for the Alumni will be by the more recent graduates. George Barclay will coach the Alumni. At other schools where the Alumni-Varsity games are held, the Alumni have been the winners.

* * *

SPRING SPORTS—In launching UNC's spring sports program, Ed Kenney's golfers did very well in Florida, finishing second in team scoring to the great Houston team in the Florida Intercollegiate Invitational . . . Walter Rabb's baseballers are in Florida now and by week's end should give some indication of how strong the team will be this season . . . Incidentally, there is wide interest in the "speed up" baseball experiment which will be used in the first round of play nis have already started and the lacrosse club is practicing daily . . . Spring is going to be nice in in the ACC . . . Track and ten-this area if it ever gets here for sure.

Twelve Visitors Staying On Campus

Twelve Russian students began their stay on the Carolina campus yesterday by sharing vodka and caviar with the New Left Club at an informal party given in the visitors' honor.

New Left member Nick Bateson said that about 30 Carolina students attended the two hour party that was deliberately kept informal so as to make the visitors feel at home.

"Only three of the Russians spoke English," Bateson said, "so most of our conversation was through interpreters."

The Club invited the students to its meeting last night so that a more extended discussion could be held, but the Russians declined after explaining that the tight schedule which they are on would not permit them to attend.

The students are visiting in North Carolina through Saturday and will be in Durham today and at N. C. State on Friday. They will return to Chapel Hill Friday night for an open discussion and reception sponsored by the Carolina Forum. The discussion will be at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall. There will be a reception afterwards in Graham Memorial.

Miss Robinson was named at the annual conclave of the Society held at State College on Mar. 16 and 17. UNC was named Angel Flight headquarters for the B-2 area at the conclave.

There were representatives from six of the seven colleges in the area, and these included N. C. State, UNC, East Carolina, North Carolina A. & T. College, Duke University, and the University of Virginia.

A banquet was held on Friday night with Chaplain Howell G. Guin as guest speaker. His subject was "What is freedom and what is the basis for it?"

Eyewitness Says Jets Lost Power

NEW YORK (UPI) — An eyewitness said Wednesday an American Airlines plane which crashed, killing 95 persons, March 1 appeared to lose power on all four jets while making a sharp noise-reducing turn that one pilot questioned on safety grounds.

The testimony came in the second day of a Civil Aeronautics Board CAB public hearing. The hearing is investigating the crash of the Boeing 707 into Jamaica Bay shortly after takeoff.

The eyewitness was Thomas G. Erdman, a flight engineer for United Airlines. He said the doomed plane seemed to stall. But so far the hearing has turned up no concrete evidence as to what caused the crash.

Convict Loses Road Gang

By GARRY BLANCHARD

Chapel Hill police got a phone call from a prisoner Tuesday afternoon. He told officers that he had lost his road gang and wanted to know if the police would help him find it.

Patrolman Albert Brinkley said "Sure," took down the prisoner's location, and dispatched a car.

A short time later the car pulled up, the prisoner hopped in, and the patrolman was in search for the missing road gang.

Soon the patrolman spotted the gang at a new location, and the prisoner and the rest of his crew were tearlessly reunited. It was not too soon, for the guard said that he was almost ready to report that the prisoner had escaped.

The prisoner explained that he had just stepped into the woods for a moment, and when he came back, the road gang was gone.

And the place wher the gang had moved? — the Rockpile Grocery on the Durham Boulevard.

JFK Says Summit Must Continue On

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy said Wednesday that the cold war conference at Geneva should go on even though "basic differences" between the United States and Russia persist.

"I am not prepared to abandon it," Kennedy said of the 17-nation meeting on disarmament. "It would be a mistake for us to feel that . . the prospects are finished."

The President expressed his view at his news conference where a questioner commented that for practical purposes the discussions at Geneva are deadlocked on disarmament and other issues such as Berlin.

Kennedy acknowledged a basic difference between the United States and Russia on the question of whether on-the-scene inspections should be allowed in any nuclear test ban agreement.

Kennedy said there is solid conflict on this.

He was asked if this country had offered to withdraw its demand for on-the-spot inspection rights inside the Soviet Union as essential to a treaty. Kennedy responded with a flat no.

On another cold war development, the President welcomed Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchec's offer to try to work out cooperation between the United States and Russia on space projects.

Kennedy said that Francis Plimpton, U. S. representative on the U. N. Outer Space Committee has been told to arrange early discussions with the Russians on the prospects. He announced that Hugh L. Dryden, deputy administrator for the National Aeronautics & Space Administration, has been directed to "take the lead . . . in subsequent technical talks."

Broadcast On TV

The news conference was carried live on television and radio.

Other highlights included:

—The President said he saw no disagreement between himself and Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., over U. S. policies concerning the United Nations. Jackson said in a speech Tuesday that the United States might be relying too much on the United Nations to the detriment of NATO and the Atlantic community. There is no conflict between the U. N. and free world

Wheless-Allen Debate Is Set In Cobb At 10

SP Candidate Says Phelps Is Invited

SP presidential candidate Dwight Wheless said yesterday that he would not invite independent candidate Larry Phelps to participate in a debate between him (Wheless) and UP candidate Inman Allen scheduled for 10 tonight in Cobb basement.

"Independent Phelps is late in his challenge," Wheless said. "We will not have time to debate Phelps at Cobb at the time scheduled. Our schedule was drawn up nearly a week ago and it would be nearly impossible to work anything in at this late date."

"I will, however, talk with Phelps," Wheless stated, "and see if a time can be arranged."

Phelps challenged Wheless and Allen Wednesday to include him in the debate that was then scheduled for Wednesday night. He then stated that he and running mate John Salter wished to debate on national issues as well as campus issues.

Wheless concluded his statement yesterday by saying that he felt that any candidate who thought a debate was important would have made a challenge before five days before the election.

Allen Welcomes Phelps To Join Action Tonight

UP presidential candidate Inman Allen said yesterday that he would be glad to include independent Larry Phelps in the debate scheduled between Allen and SP candidate Dwight Wheless tonight in Cobb basement.

He then stated, however, that since the original challenge had come from Wheless, it was Wheless's decision as to whether or not Phelps should be included in the debate.

"Like Larry Phelps," he said, "the first that we knew of the debate was on Tuesday morning when I read in the DTH that I had been challenged by Wheless to a debate Wednesday night in Gerrard Hall.

"Later that day," he stated, "I was informed that the debate would be held in Cobb Thursday rather than in Gerrard. We are looking forward to this opportunity for a discussion of the issues."

Concerning Phelps' challenge, Allen stated that he thought that each presidential candidate should be allowed to express his views.

"I would have no objections to having Phelps join the debate with Dwight and myself Thursday night," he said.

"The decision, however, is Wheless's.

Editorial Debate On Tap For 8:30

DTH editorial candidates will debate tonight at 8:30 p.m. in Cobb dorm basement. Co-editorial aspirants Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye accepted Ernest Stepp's challenge to talk on the editorial responsibilities.

French Troops Hit OAS Fort With Fire

ALGIERS (UPI) — French security troops Wednesday pounded a Secret Army Organization (OAS) stronghold with heavy cannenfire and fired machineguns from armored cars to halt rampaging European mobs bent on wrecking the cease-fire in Algiers and Oran.

In the western port of Oran, French mobile gendarmes routed OAS commandoes in a two hour battle to capture an OAS pirate radio transmitter. Other gendarmes poured machine-gun fire into grenade-throwing youths in the port city.

At least 18 persons were killed and 21 wounded in violence throughout Algeria Wednesday. This raised the total casualties since Monday's cease-fire to 146 dead and 137 injured. A total of 1,905 have been killed and 3,604 wounded since Jan. 1.

At least six persons were killed in the bitter Oran street fighting. These included five gendarmes and one Europeans demonstrator. Six Europeans were wounded.

Order Of The Grail Inducts 13 In Early Morning Rites

Thirteen students were initiated into the Order of the Grail, highest undegraduate men's honorary, ceremonies early this morning.

The new Knights are: Hugh Inman Allen, Atlanta, Ga.; Edward Norman Graham, Elkin; Anthony Stephen Harrington, Taylorsville; William Carl Imes, Birchdale, Minn.; James Nelson Irvine, Lookout Mt.; Richard Harvey King, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Larry Stephen McDevitt, Asheville.

Also: William Ross Sullivan, Allen Vinroot, Charlotte; John Knoxville, Tenn.; Scott Earnest Summers II, Morganton; Richard Bruce Welch, Asheville; Grant Walton Wheeler, Needham, Mass.; Dwight Hernard Wheless, High Point.

The thirteen new Knights were selected by the Order on the basis of leadership, truth, courage and service.

Established in 1920, the Order of the Grial was formed both as an honorary and as a force to work for unity on the campus.

The founders of the Order felt that growing antagonism between dormitory and fraternity men was impairing the effectiveness of united campus efforts.

The membership is still divided between dormitory and fraternity men in an attempt to bring both factions together to find solutions to campus problems.

This year the Order has sponsored a number of activities in an attempt to bring the groups closer together, including a pre-Christmas holiday basketball tournament, campus-wide dances and the annual Grail-Mural sports jamboree.

Dorm Change: Ruffin Won't House Frosh

Grimes dormitory, instead of Ruffin, will be used next year as an experimental, all-freshman dorm, Assistant Dean of Student Affairs, William G. Long announced yesterday.

After a lengthy investigation which resulted from a petition from Ruffin residents, Grimes was picked because less people will be affected by the change. The investigation revealted that almost twice as many Ruffin residents would have had to move as compared with those that will be displaced from Grimes.

Because of their location, Ruffin and Grimes are the only dorms on campus that could be considered for the change since "we want to conduct the experiment under the best possible control conditions."

Ruffin will be designated a quiet dorm and is expected to be used as an experimental dorm by the IDC using the 108 of the present residents who intend to live there again next year. Dean Long said, "I'd like to extend congratulations to Ruffin men for the gentlemanly manner they have made their protests and petitions."

He said that the president of Grimes had been notified and that all possible efforts will be made to accomodate the men that must be moved. If they wish, they may remain in the upper quad and roommates may be kept.

The final dormitory plan is to have Ehringhaus and Grimes as the all-freshman dorms and Ruffin as a four-class dorm.

Argentina Is Threatened By Strike

BUENOS AIRES (UPI) — Followers of ousted dictator Juan D. Peron threatened a 24-hour nationwide general strike Wednesday as President Arturo Frondizi sought to build a civilian-military coalition government to end Argentina's weeklong political crisis.

The pro-Peronist labor organization "The 62" — a 62-union group controlling at least 1½ million workers — said the walkout would start at midnight Thursday. It would protest the government's annulment of election gains won by Peronist candidates last Sunday.

The armed forces and government promptly girded for possible action.

There were reports Frondizi would ask industry in general to acept a financial moratorium until the banks reopen, which may not be until next Monday. A bank moratorium already is in effect on all due payments by check draft or promissory notes.

Meanwhile, Frondizi worked on the final selection of a military-civilian government, the price set by the armed forces as a prime condition for his continuance in the presidency.

Frondizi yielded to military pressure early Wednesday to end the political crisis. Following the sweeping Peronist victories in Sunday's parliamentary elections, the government had intervened to nullify the results. Argentina's constitution provides for intervention in cases where the government is threatened by disorders.

Palace sources said the President's new government would be built along business rather than political lines. It was doubted Frondizi would bring in many, if any, members of the chief opposition, the People's Radical party.

Russians Say They're Able To Co-operate

MOSCOW (UPI) — Premier Nikita Khrushchev informed President Kennedy Wednesday that Russia is ready to work with the United States in space exploration—including eventual joint efforts to put a spaceship on the moon. But he said full cooperation would depend on conclusion of an East-West disarmament accord.

Khrushchev, in a note the U. S. President announced here, suggested as a first step joint American-Soviet rescue operations for any astronaut who in the future may be forced to make emergency landings on their return to earth.

The Soviet premier was replying to a note of March 7 in which Kennedy proposed that the United States and Russia consider concrete measures for joint exploration of space.

Khrushchev's note, as reported by the official Soviet Tass news agency, said Soviet representatives in the United Nations space committee will be instructed to meet with U. S. representatives to "discuss practical problems of cooperation" in the joint space venture.

But Khrushchev made it clear that any Soviet-American program would be "limited" to East-West armament agreement, which the 17-nation Geneva conference is seeking.

Depends On Disarmament

"It seems obvious to me," he said, "that the scope of our cooperation of the peaceful exploration of space . . . depends in some degree on the solution of the disarmament agreement."

"I state this consideration," he added, "for the simple reason that it would be better if we see all the sides of the question in a realistic light."

Double Endorsement

After last year's Student Party harangue over dual endorsement that party has this year blandly proceeded to endorse three candidates already on the University Party slate.

Each year, almost without exception, several candidates carry the endorsement of both parties.

The party which gives an already-endorsed candidate its support usually does so with the sanctimonious pronouncement that it "endorses the best qualified candidate regardless of prior affiliation."

This, of course, is political double-talk in its most refined state. What the party actually means is that it can't find a presentable candidate, and would rather give its endorsement to the opposition candidate than take a chance on running a loser.

Party loyalty fades quickly when faced with the spectre of a loss.

Two of the candidates doubly-endorsed this year seek legislative seats. The third is a candidate for president of the Carolina Athletic Association.

The argument for doubly-endorsing the latter is reasonable. The CAA presidency is essentially a non-partisan office. But the practice of doubly-endorsing legislative candidates, or any other candidate who will function in a partisan capacity, serves only to continue the trend toward combining both parties into one spineless lump.

The campus has little enough choice as it is. Both parties usually select candidates whose views are at best non-controversial and at worst non-existent. They all love their mothers and the Old Well, support the Campus Chest and believe in student autonomy.

But how many will take a strong, unequivocal stand on athletic emphasis, fraternity discriminatory clauses, integration and civil liberties, educational standards, off-campus issues, or any one of many questions which have two sides, one of which may be unpopular?

Typically, the two candidates whose views are strongest—and thus most unpopular—are Independents. Neither organized party would come near them with an endorsement. Strong views are as popular as poison ivy at Carolina, and both parties know it. And, naturally, the object both have in mind is to win, and to hell with leadership.

This accounts for the general campus opinion that the only thing that separates the UP from the SP is four letters in the alphabet and control of the dorm or fraternity vote.

Unquestionably, there are many questions on which both parties will agree: Stronger student government, dorm social improvements, added cultural emphasis, improved study conditions and the whole list of tepid issues dear to the heart of campus politicians.

It's time both parties took stock of exactly why they exisit and drew some party lines. The campus, at this point, is a little sick of hearing Old Wellisms, looking at smiles, and seeing candidates doubly-endorsed.

Double Blessing

Florida's Sen. Spessard Holland seems to have spooked a herd of traditionally anti-civil-rights Senators with his proposed anti-poll-tax amendment to the Constitution.

Sen. Holland, whose amendment will probably carry anyway, aroused the ire of several staunch from segregationis states by plopping the bill in their laps as a substitute for a bill to make the New York thome of Alexander Hamilton a national monument.

* * *

The case that Sen. Holland made for the bill is refreshing in this era of anti-anti-Negro arguments. Sen. Holland eschewed most of this comment and pointed out that the voting percentages in the five states that still have poll taxes was shockingly low. Alabama, he said, had only a 31 per cent turnout in 1960. Mississippi had less than 27 per cent.

* * *

His argument was not primarily that the tax was discriminatory, but that it made for poor voting turnouts. Government by the few was his target, not government by the white.

* * *

It is pleasing to see the Florida senator attack in one argument both the anti-Negro aspects of the poll tax and at the same time point up and damn Sen. James O. Eastland's contention that more, not fewer, restrictions should be placed on voting.

Holland's arguments are a double blessing to democracy.

Candidates Answer

Should NSA Take Stands?

Editor's Note: The eight candidates for the National Student Association have been invited by the editor to answer various questions concerning NSA. Today they reply to the question: In what manner, if any, should NSA take stands on national and international issues.

Due to unforeseen circumstances, Charles Heatherly (U.P.) is unable to submit a reply.

* * *

The National Student Congress of NSA should consider resolutions dealing with problems of national and international concern. In a world of numerous diverse political and social movements, the American student cannot afford to answer conflict with silence.

—Joe Masi, U.P.

A discussion by NSA on national and international problems can be worthwhile provided that such discussions are not weighted in favor of any one viewpoint. Equal time, and when written material is distributed, equal space should be given to both sides of a controversial issue, with the best spokesman for each side consulted. The quantity of resolutions passed is not the important thing; instead, what really matters is for the students to learn all the relevant facts through detailed investigations of complex problems.

—Mark Armstrong, U.P.

The NSA should take stands on national and international issues through resolutions passed by its national congress. It is then the duty of every member school to send delegates to the congress who are informed, articulate and representative of campus opinion in order that the resolutions of the congress might better represent the opinions of college students. It seems reasonable to question the right of any part of the NSA except its congress to speak for students opinion.

—Bill Imes, U. P.

The National Student Congress should concern itself primarily with issues which have a direct impact on the American student and his educational community. The problems facing students in other nations are also proper areas of legislation.

In recent years, it has become necessary for the American student to take stands on issues which are not of direct consequence to "his role as a student." To decline to debate questions which are of the foremost concern of the international student world would be to abdicate this responsibility to other student groups. A responsible student voice should be heard.

—Hank Patterson, S.P.

NSA should take stand on national and international issues in that they relate to the student in his role as a student. In this manner NSA has taken stands on civil rights, HCUA and Federal aid to education, as well as issues of local campus importance. These issues and others are directly related to the American student and I have supported them as such.

NSA is the only organization working to represent the American student which is effective. NSA can become a more representative organization, but never by avoiding issues of importance to students.

—Bill Straughn, S.P.

USNAS should express consideration and forthright positions on national and international issues which are of direct concern to students in their search for truth and their preparation for future leadership. An example of what I feel to be proper issues would be federal aid to education and nuclear testing. USNSA should be guided in the stands it takes by the criteria of the importance and efficiency of the action considered, the expressed interest of students in the issues, and the competency of students to evaluate the facts and come to a reasoned and responsible decision.

SP Compares The Record

Dwight Wheless, Student Party nominee for President of the Student Body, has introduced more legislation that has either been passed or not yet acted upon (14 bills) than the entire University delegation of 18 legislators (9 bills).

It is particularly interesting to compare the legislative records of the two presidential candidates who were the floor leaders of the respective parties:

Dwight Wheless (SP)

1. A bill to appropriate one hundred and seventy-five dollars to alleviate inadequate social facilities.
2. A bill to appropriate two hundred and fifty dollars to WUNC Radio station for the institution of carrier current operation.
3. A bill to amend the by-laws of the Student Legislature.
4. A bill to appropriate sixty-seven dollars and fifty cents for delegates and alternate fees for the NSA spring regional assembly.
5. A bill to revise the organization of the Campus Chest.
6. A bill to appropriate two hundred and twenty-five dollars to WUNC to purchase phonograph records.
7. A bill to include in the 1962-1963 student government budget an item for $600 for an exchange scholarship between the University of North Carolina and Tours University.
8. A bill to clarify the order of Presidential Secession.
9. A bill to amend the revised by-laws of the Student Legislature of the University of North Carolina to provide for a weekly financial report by the Chairman of the Finance Committee.
10. A bill to establish the television fund committee.
11. A bill to appropriate $50 to the Finance Committee of the Student Legislators for Better Communications with Constituencies.
12. A resolution to call for a legislative hearing concerning criticisms of and possible improvements for the honor system.
13. A bill to appropriate $500 from the unappropriated balance to I.D.C. for continuation of the dance program.
14. A bill to appropriate $1,000 from the general surplus to a committee for dormitory improvements.

Inman Allen (UP)

1. A bill to establish a committee tainment.
to coordinate campus wide enter-
2. A bil to appropriate nineteen hundred and twenty-four ($1924.00) to the Yackety Yack for the printing of additional books.

The question is this: if Inman Allen has a program, why has he sat two years in the Student Legislature without introducing that program.

Sevier Defends McDevitt; 'S. P. Bungled Case'

To the Editor:

Because you fall in a long line of DTH editors who have been quite impressed with their positions and with the influence they think they have on the campus voters, I was not surprised by the appearance of your March 17 editorial entitled "A Candidate . . ."

First, you stated that it was "outright bunk" to assume that a candidate is a candidate only after his 'formal filing." You suggested that for this reason the Elections Board was wrong in considering as campaign expenses only those incurred after such official nomination.

Be reasonable, Mr. Editor; doesn't the Election Board (and the Legislature's elections law) have to set a limit somewhere?

Certainly Larry McDevitt was running hard before February 26; let's not condemn him for that for while at it, he trained himself thoroughly so that now he is unquestionably the best candidate for the vice presidency, and he wants this office.

McDevitt's expenditure in question certainly represents a political move, but why is it unethical, when it clearly came before his official filing with the Elections Board? Legally and ethically, October and February would have been the same; politically, February was the choice.

Also, because McDevitt was not officially a candidate at the time the cards were distributed could not the name as easily have been anyone else's?

Secondly, you claim that McDevitt "knocked hell out of the spirit of it (the law)." Would you suggest that this was any more without the spirit of the law than was the Student Party's commandeering the publication of a long-time defunct dormitory newspaper for their wholesale support at the dormitory's expense and not at their own? I believe this happened last spring. And how about the bungling of McDevitt's case by the present S.P. administration so that he will not know what he may yet spend until it may well be too late to spend it? I am surprised that such things never reached the editorials of one so concerned with the spirit of the elections laws.

Finally, Mr. Editor, may I suggest that perhaps the valuable space you fill with editorials daily could be surrendered for statements by the candidates themselves? In this way, the electorate could make its decisions on the basis of well-thought-out personal statements rather than on tainted editorials.

McDevitt Gives His Side Of Story

Open Letter to the Student Body:

On Tuesday, March 20, the Constitution Council met to decide whether or not the cost of certain materials distributed by me before I was officially a candidate for vice-president of the student body shuold be placed on my expense account.

In recent publicity regarding this matter, only one side of the story has been told. Now I would like to tell mine. One of my main areas of concern was, and still is, the lack of student interest and expression of student ideas concerning student government. On this basis I began to use much of my free time to visit students throughout the campus explaining the many facets and absorbing numerous suggestions, attitudes and ideas. Toward the end of the semester I realized that I had not even begun to make a dent in my goal to get ideas from the entire campus; it was then that I formulated the idea of distributing some printed material which though not as effective as a personal visit might, and did, stimulate some thought and replies. Before this was done, however, the matter was checked through the Elections Board Chairman and due to a misunderstanding as to the wording of this card and due to a popular misconception of the Election Law indicating a 30 day deadline before which material could be distributed, I was told that as long as these cards were distributed before 12:00 midnight on Sunday, February 26, my action was permissible and the cost of these cards would not be charged to my expense account. On this same Sunday I received word that there was now some serious doubt from the powers that be as to whether the expense incurred in printing these cards could not be officially placed in my expense account. Naturally I had all distribution stopped and fortunately only five dormitories had been covered.

Since question had arisen, I felt that in keeping with the spirit of an above-board campaign I should personally report this to the Elections Board and ask for a ruling on the matter. This I did, and on March 8 the Elections Board ruled that this expenses should not be charged to my account. However, there is another board which has the power to reverse such decisions, the Constitutional Council, and I received direct word from leaders of the opposing party that an appeal would be registered with this council. No appeal was registered; meanwhile, the campaign continued, and I was unable to make plans for the use of my campaign funds. Finally, I received word from the opposing party that a decision had been made to wait until the latest possible date to register the appeal. That was that and I appealed the case myself for a judgment ruling. The council met and they too ruled that this was not chargeable to my account. Now the halls began to ring with charges that I should have told someone else that I was going to appeal. A letter had been sent by our present vice-president Hank Patterson informing all those who would be involved of his reason for and intent to register this appeal. This pleased me very much; never the less I still had no idea how long it would be before the appeal was registered. Following the meeting of the Council it was found that its membership had been appointed not elected and this itself was unconstitutional and the meeting has been rescheduled for Tuesday.

From the publicity that has come from this I have been described the past couple of days with such terms as "dishonest", "unethical", "liar" to name a few. These little gems of personal information are completely unfounded and border on slander. Using this personal situation as an illustration, I wish to express here the hope that the remainder of this campaign will be free on both sides of "mudslinging"; there is no place on the Carolina campus for practices of this type and I personally will tolerate no such activities from over-zealous supporters on my side of the fence.

—LARRY McDEVITT
UP vice-presidential candidate

Florida Fights Communism: Jones

The state of Florida has taken the lead in the fight against Communism by instituting a six-week course called "Americanism versus Communism" which will be taught to all 12th graders in the Florida public high schools starting next fall.

This is an educational advance long overdue. Other states and other school systems have shied away from teaching about Communism for fear that the student might be "converted", or some such nonsense. The nation is at war with Communism, and it is high time the subject of Communist is no longer overlooked in our public schools.

It is apparent that Florida's course on Communism will not be like the "loaded" courses of Dr. Schwarz and other travelling preachers of anti-communism. Such "loaded" courses serve to point out the gross ignorance of the general public on the subject of Communism.

Realizing the necessity for a course that neither offends the intelligence of the high school student nor the dignity of the "academic freedomists," Florida is proceeding cautiously and carefully in developing the course of study. Absent from the course will be the "liberalism begets socialism begets communism" doctrine that Liberals so detest. Instead strong emphasis will be placed on an appreciation of our American heritage, our free-enterprise economy, our democratic processes, and our personal freedom and liberty.

It is our hope that the North Carolina State Legislature, and individual school boards, will move quickly to set up similar courses on Communism in our public schools. This is the form of "aid to education" which most conservatives would support. In order for the United States to achieve victory over Communism, we must first of all have an active and aware populous. Such courses that serve to point out the true colors of Communism cannot be too soon coming.

Rains Block First Day Of Spring, But Harsh Winter Bows Out Anyway

By United Press International

One of the worst winters in half a century went into the record books Tuesday. Spring bowed in amid a typically seasonal conglomeration of rain, snow, fog and blustery winds.

Tornadoes, a perennial traveling companion of spring, threatened to bob up in parts of Texas, Oklahoma and southwest Arkansas.

Fog curtailed air travel at St. Louis, Mo., Detroit, Mich., and Buffalo, N. Y. Fog and drizzle blanketed large areas of the eastern middle West and the East.

Showers and thundershowers moved across the Missouri and Mississippi Valleys. The rain fell on melting snowbanks in the midlands.

Freezing drizzle or snow flurries hit the upper Midwest and some snow fell on higher elevations of the southwest and West. Northern California got spring showers.

Spring Arrived

Spring officially arrived at 9:30 p.m. EST in the northern hemisphere when the sun's path crossed the celestial equator.

It replaced a winter of record cold and snowfall in the middle west, mudslides and floods in the West, crop-killing frosts and deep snows in Dixie and one massive winter storm along the Atlantic Coast.

The U. S. Weather Bureau said it was the first time since 1910 that abnormal weather was the pattern from coast to coast.

The central Midwest was particularly hard hit by snow and cold. Forecasters said eastern South Dakota had its worst winter in history. Iowa had its coldest winter since 1936 and its snowiest winter since 1909.

The Atlantic seaboard had an unusually mild winter. But the March storm that battered the coastline from Florida to New England was the worst in several decades. New Jersey alone reported a death toll of 32 and more than $80 million damage.

Facts And Figures

Other facts and figures that will be passed on to grandchildren:

—Snowfall was 33 inches above normal at Minneapolis, Minn.

Boston, Mass., had its driest January in seven years and its snowiest February in 28 years.

—Central Oregon reported its coldest weather in 30 years.

—Montanas recorded a 55-below-zero temperature at West Yellowstone on Jan. 10 and a 68-above-zero reading five days later at Fort Benton.

—Spencer, Iowa, got more snow in February than it normally measures in an entire year.

—A flood that swept southern Idaho in February was dubbed by the Army engineers as the "worst in the recorded history of the area."

—San Francisco had the highest January temperature it has ever recorded — 79 on Jan. 8. Two weeks later the city had snow for the second time this century.

IDC Official Says Improvements Will Come With Interest

"If residents want any improvements in the dorms, they'll have to show an interest in getting them—by taking care of what they have now," said Gerald Thornton, Chairman of the IDC Dorm Improvements Committee, in a statement yesterday.

"They could improve things themselves. For instance, they could put curtains and pictures in their social rooms and take care of the furniture they have," he suggested.

The University will place pencil sharpeners in all dormitories wherever they are needed, within the next few weeks, he says.

Thornton says this is not the first time this has been done, but it definitely will be the last. "The dorm residents," he says, "will have to take care of the sharpeners if they expect to have them at all. The University has made it plain they won't be replaced this time."

According to the committee chairman this is just one example of a trend. The dorm residents haven't been taking care of the improvements they have gotten from the University, so these improvements have been automatically cut down.

Commenting on this, Thornton said, "The University can make improvements in the dorms only after all other expenses—including repairs—have been paid. Recently they have been spending so much for repairs that there hasn't been much left for improvements."

IDC President Jim Gauldin echoed Thornton's views. He said, "Further improvements haven't been made because of a poor attitude on the part of some students."

"The few students who burn bulletin boards, throw drinks against the wall, tear phones up and the like keep the majority from getting the improvements they want. The majority will have to influence the few if they hope to get them; and they can do this if they will."

Post Office Unveils System For Settling Labor Gripes

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Post Office Department has come up with new machinery designed to show government and private industry how to eliminate unfairness and delays in processing employe grievance appeals.

Under the existing post office system, a worker must appeal a grievance — for example, against suspension, firing or lack of promotion—to the same official who made the original decision.

The department feels this has bred inconsistencies, delays, unfairness and "rubber - stamping" of the appeal. The new plan is aimed at giving both the employe and management a fair shake.

It was learned that Postmaster General J. Edward Day has given tentative approval to the sweeping overhaul of appeal procedures for the 580,000-man department.

Since coming to Chapel Hill he has been for one year President of the American Philological Association and is currently a member of the Joint Planning Committee for the International Congress of Classical Studies to be held in this country in 1964. alliances, Kennedy said.

—The President was asked what the United States would consider the minimum terms for inspection in connection with efforts to get a nuclear test ban agreement at the Geneva negotiations. He replied that this country was ably represented at Geneva by such men as Secretary of State Dean Rusk, Arthur Dean and William Foster and that they would have to handle the details of the negotiations. However, he said there is disagreement between the United States and Russia because the Soviets say they are not prepared to permit international inspection teams on their soil to check up on suspicious events.

Declined To Comment

—He declined to continue the controversy over Richard M. Nixon's charge — denied by the White House — that Kennedy had advance CIA information when he made a campaign proposal to aid anti-Castro Cubans. The President said that he thought the statements by the White House and by former CIA director Allen W. Dulles Monday were clear. These statements attributed Nixon's charge to a probable misunderstanding.

Smoking Ban May Be Issued

LONDON (UPI) — London and three other cities in Britain took steps Wednesday to ban smoking in public places as part of a nationwide campaign against cigarettes on health grounds.

Bernard Bagnari, chairman of the London County Council control committee, said his group was considering whether it could make no-smoking a condition of granting licenses to movie houses and other public places.

In Manchester Bristol and Glasgow similar moves were being made.

The County Council of Westmoreland decided to recommend to members that they do not smoke at meetings.

Britain's growing preoccupation with smoking came about because of a report by the Royal College of Physicians issued early this month linking cigarette smoking with a high incidence of lung cancer and other diseases.

On Wake Forest Students

For at least two days it has been spring in Chapel Hill and the warm weather has ushered in the beginning of spring sports at UNC. The golf and tennis teams started off their home appearances on successful notes with easy wins over Dartmouth. The lacrosse club didn't fare so well, but no one complained about the weather. And in sunny Florida Wednesday afternoon the UNC baseball team started its season, with the home opener slated for Monday against Ithaca.

But one Atlantic Coast Conference school still has only the winter sport of basketball at the top of its list. Wake Forest, whose students are easily the most rabid basketball fans in the Big Four, sends its group of hardwood heroes to Louisville this weekend in a quest for national championship.

Those Wake Forest fans present an unusual spectacle at Demon Deacon basketball games, especially the home games. Not only do a ridiculously large number of students turn out for the games, but even coeds follow their team almost as avidly as the male students. The Baptist College students never say die, they just keep assuring their "Cow College, Dook, and Whiskey Hill" (as they affectionately refer to the other schools' students) comrades that Bones will one day lead them to that great day.

One of their greatest wishes has always been to beat Carolina in basketball. They did just that in big Lennie Chappell's sophomore year and again this season—twice each time. But beating UNC consistently has been a problem for the Deacs. Last season Frank McGuire's last team beat Wake three straight times and with UNC out of the ACC tournament the Deacons won the league title and finished runners-up to St. Joseph's in the Eastern Regionals.

And of course their big wish has been the national title. If ever they've had a chance, they do this season, but they'll have to beat two of the biggest obstacles in college basketball in Ohio State and Cincinnati.

Buckeyes Picked To Win

This brings us to our final basketball predictions of the season. In the regional games, we missed only on the Oregon State loss to UCLA in the Far West Regionals for 11 right out of 12 and a .917 percentage.

With due respects to those 4,307 Wake Forest undergraduates who lovingly hanged their basketball team in effigy earlier this season we'll have to go along with Ohio State to beat the Deacs and take the National Championship. Here are this week's picks for the NCAA and NIT tournament contests.

Ohio State over Wake Forest by 10. The Deacs will not fold as they did in December when the Buckeyes stomped them, 84-62, but Ohio State's speed will pay off after a close first half. The Bucks are looking ahead to a revenge battle with Cincinnati, but they have to look over Len Chappell's shoulders. Therefore, Lucas, Havlicek and company will not go into the contest over-confident with the attitude that they can tear the Baptist apart as they did the first time.

Cincinnati over UCLA by 15. After winning only four of its first 11 games UCLA rebounded to finish with an 18-9 mark. They've met the likes of Cincy only once when Ohio State trimmed them, 105-84. The UCLA crew will be victims number 28 for Ed Jucker's defending champions.

Ohio State over Cincinnati by 5. Both teams want another shot at each other. The Bucks want to avenge the loss in last year's championship game, and Cincy wants to prove that they deserved the regular season top spot just as well as their upstate foes.

Wake Forest over UCLA by 13. The loss Friday night will not put a damper on Wake's ability. It'll be Chappell's last game for the Baptists and they'll be just as tough as ever.

(In other Saturday possibilities, we'll take Ohio State over UCLA, and Wake Forest over Cincy.)

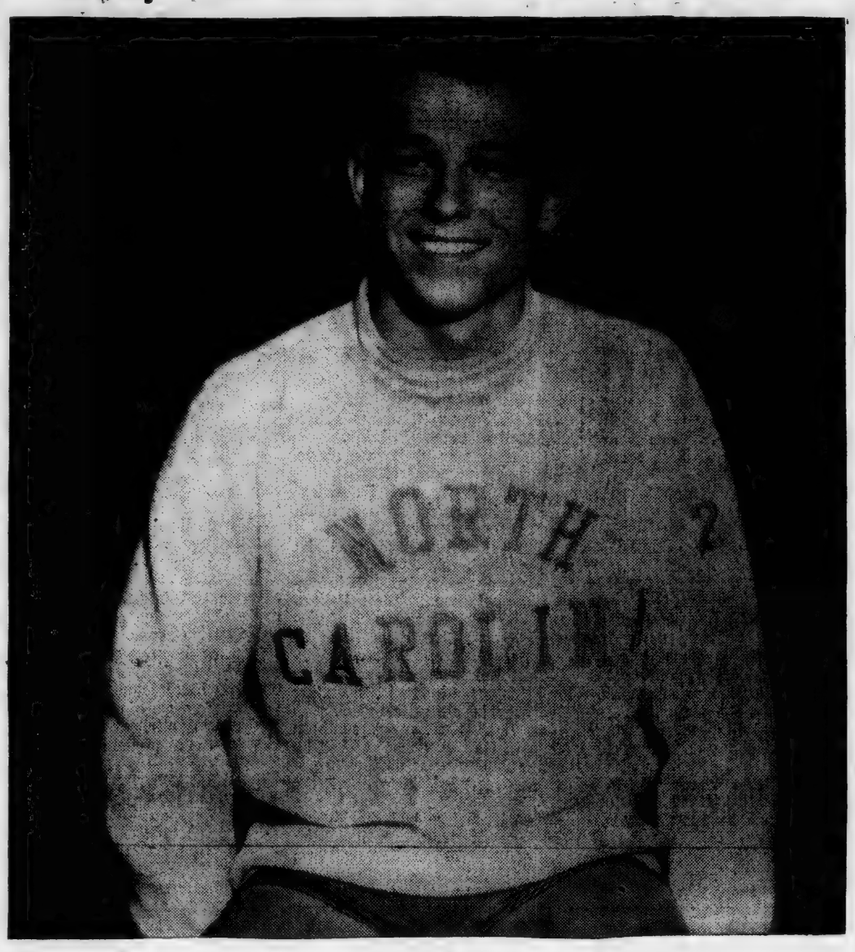
St. John's Best In NIT

St. John's over Duquesne by 7. It'll be a tough one for the Redmen, but they're the best in the New York tournament. Already Bradley, and Houston—both seeded teams—have fallen by the wayside, so the Redmen and Loyola are the only seeded teams remaining. Duquesne proved its power by beating Bradley for the second time this year, but the Brooklyn boys will be a much higher hurdle.

Dayton over Loyola by 4. The Flyers have topped Wichita and Houston to get to the semifinals, Loyola defeated Temple. The Flyers will win in a squeaker.

St. John's over Dayton by 16. The championship game turns into a near-runaway as Joe Lapchick's men take the NIT title. (In other possibilities—St. John's over Loyola or Duquesne over Dayton or Loyola.)

Daily Tar Heel Athlete Of The Week



THOMPSON MANN

For a boy who had little high school swimming experience, Thompson Mann, a swift moving backstroker from Hickory, Virginia, is rapidly developing into one of the finest swimmers in the country.

No record seems too unsurmountable for this dark-haired sophomore athlete. Competing in the Eastern Intercollegiate Championships held at Yale University over the weekend, Mann's 48.8 clocking in the 400 freestyle relay was good enough for Carolina to place third behind Harvard and Williams with a time of 3:21.1, thus shattering the pre-existing ACC record of 3:23. Later, Mann went on to capture two seconds in the 100 and 200 backstroke events with times of 54.3 and 2:01.9 respectively. Although "Pat Earey's pride and joy" cracked both backstroke meet records, Princeton's Jedd Graffe nudged him out both times.

"When you get so that you can swim the 100 and 200 the way Mann did at Yale, you know that you are getting close to the best in the nation," coach Pat Eary explained.

On the 30th and 31st of this month, Mann will round out his brilliant sophomore career as he travels to Ohio State University to compete against some of the fastest backstrokers in the country at the NCAA championships. "Thompson should reach the finals in the 100 and 200," remarked Earey. In his quest to become number one nationally, Mann will draw stiff competition from his nemesis Graffe and Buckeye speedster Schaeffer.

National competition is nothing new to Mann as he placed fifth in the 100 meter backstroke at Los Angeles with an AAU record breaking time of 1:02.9.

Away from the pool this Tar Heel athlete is active in social and academic functions as a member of Sigma Nu fraternity and a pre-med major.

Big 4 Stars Win, Walsh Scores 18

HIGH POINT (UPI) — The Big Four defeated the Carolinas Conference Tuesday night in the 4th annual Boys Home Invitational basketball game, played for the benefit of Boys Home at Lake Waccamaw.

The score was tied 11 times and with three minutes left, the Carolinas Conference led 59-58. But then the Big Four hit five straight buckets to pull away from the CC players.

Donnie Walsh of Carolina hit for two baskets, Art Whisnant of South Carolina got two more buckets and Russ Marvel of State College dumped in the last one with six seconds left.

The Big Four cagers held the advantage at the half, 34-32 behind the playing of Marvel, Walsh, and Whisnant.

18 points apiece to lead the Big Four in scoring and Whisnant collected 11.

Top scorers for the Carolina Conference were Bobby Frank of Pfeiffer with 17 points, Wolfy Unger of High Point with 13 and Jon Burwell of Guilford College with 12. Frank fouled out with four minutes to go.

The game is played annually, pitting the seniors from North Carolina's Big Four—Wake Forest, Duke, Carolina, and State—against seniors from Carolinas Conference schools. However, this year South Carolina filled in for Wake Forest now engaged in NCAA competitions.

UNC Tennis Team Defeats Dartmouth For Second Time

By LOUIS LEGUM

Coach Donald Skakle's sophomore-studded tennis team demonstrated yesterday that it could win the tough matches as well as the easy ones with a 6-3 victory over a resolute Dartmouth squad on the varsity courts. Tuesday the Tar Heels had literally blasted the Indian netters off the courts on a 9-0 shutout.

Skakle attributed the win to a pair of decision in the singles. With the score at 2-2, sophs Ted Hoehn and Bitsy Harrison rallied in three tense sets. Hoehn won 6-4, 3-6, and 6-0 over Dave Smuger; Harrison, 7-9, 6-3, and 6-4 against Doug Judah.

UNC's ace duo, George Sokol and Keith Stoneman had no trouble in beating their opponents. Sokol took Jim Biggs by a 7-5, 6-0 score. Stoneman also won in straight sets over Phil Meyer, 6-1, 6-3. Sokol and Stoneman later teamed to gain a 6-3, 6-3 victory against Meyer and Gordon Aydelott.

The other two singles matches belonged to Dartmouth's Doug Floren, who beat Dave Morgan, 6-2, 6-3, and Aydelott, who came from behind to take Chapel Hill's Charlie Shaffer, 2-6, 7-5, and 6-3.

Hoehn and Shaffer combined to win in the doubles, 7-5, 6-4. However, Smoyer and John Morrison 6-2, 6-4 victory against Kirby Jones salvaged the final match with a and Rich Henderson.

Trackmen Run Past Wolves

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Bob Hart, Jim Brown, and Carmine Lunetta each won two events Tuesday afternoon as Carolina's trackmen trounced State College 115 2/3-20 1/3 in their first outdoor meet of the season.

The Tar Heels took every event and swept first, second and third places in five of the individual contests to rack up the one-sided decision.

Hart captured the 220 and 440 yard races with times of 22.1 and 49.4 respectively, while Brown took both hurdle events and Lunetta won the mile and two-mile races with clockings of 4:31 and 10:01.

In other races, Carolina's John McNinch was timed at 10.3 in the 100 yard dash while Charlie Little took the 880 in 1:57.7. Carolina won Co-captain Barry Tiedemann both the mile relay and the newly-installed 440 relay to complete the sweep in the track events.

Hart, Brown and Little teamed up with Scott Brent to form the winning mile relay team while McNinch, Brown, Brent and John O'Bannon composed the 440-relay group.

Sophomore Tom Clark, who set a new high jump mark of 6'7¾" a week ago Saturday in the ACC Indoor Meet, could only manage 6-2 in his first outdoor try, but still came away with victory.

Carolina took one-two-three in the broad jump with O'Bannon winnon winning with a leap of 22'5½" and Bill Croom and John Pleasant placing second and third.

Harvey Henry and Jim Shumate won the shot put and discus throw respectively as Henry threw 47'5" and Shumate, 128'5".

In freshman competition, State Corn in the broad jump with a beat the Carolina yearlings 83-53 as Wolfpack frosh Stuart Corn personally accounted for 19 points. Corn won the high jump and pole vault while taking second in both hurdle events and the broad jump.

Milt Baugess was a double winner for UNC as he took both hurdle races, while John Shilts, in the 440, Paul Ryerson, in the 2 mile run, and Dick Jonas, in the discus, also captured first places for the Carolina frosh.

Town Touts Meet Phi Delts Tonight

By JOHN MONTAGUE

The ATO Rooters holding a 20-12 lead, suddenly went cold in the second half of Tuesday night's Frat White cage championship, and the Phi Delt Loads took full advantage of the situation, taking a thrilling 26-24 verdict and walking away with the trophy.

The Loads scored 12 consecutive points to take a 24-20 lead, the ATO crew not coming up with a field goal in the second stanza until only 5:31 remained on the clock.

Joe Webb led the scoring for the winners with eight and Joe Vaughan had an identical total to pace the losers.

The Loads now in meet their brother team, the Phi Delt Blue, champions of the Frat Blue circuit, in the All-Fraternity Championship Wednesday night.

Bob Watkins, Lenny Beck and Bob Deaton handled the bulk of the scoring as the Town Touts toppled the Winston Weiners, 49-27, Tuesday night in the All-Dorm finals.

Watkins led the rout with 15, Beck netted 13, and Deaton hit for 11. The Touts will take on the Fraternity champion tonight for the All-Campus title. The game is set for 8 o'clock on the varsity court. A preliminary to this contest will be the Grad Division finals pitting the Dental School against the Pharmacy.

No Two-Man Debate, Says Larry Phelps

All Three Must Discuss Issues, Candidate Says

By HARRY LLOYD

Independent presidential candidate Larry Phelps said yesterday that under no circumstances would he take part in a two-man debate with SP nominee Dwight Wheless.

"Our issues must be discussed by all three candidates," Phelps explained.

Wheless said Wednesday that he would not invite Phelps to participate in the debate held last night between him and Inman Allen, the UP nominee. Allen had stated that Phelps and his running-mate John Salter would be welcome.

"That debate is Wheless' show," Phelps said. "He made the challenge, and not us.

Seek Same Office

Wheless says that he didn't challenge us to a debate because he wanted to debate with Allen on something else, not specifying what. We are running for the same offices, and the purpose of a debate is to bring out differences between the candidates. He has fused to do this.

"After all, Dwight Wheless has two perfectly good reasons not to debate with us on the function of student government. First, he doesn't want to admit the importance of national and international issues, and second, he doesn't want to rock his little party boat by saying something controversial."

Phelps and Salter attacked Wheless for making the excuse that they had not given him time to work them into the debate schedule.

"We talked to him Sunday night," Salter said. "He came to my room. Phelps and I were both there, but he had noting to say about a debate in any form.

"The first we knew of a debate was when Wheless' story was printed in Thursday's DTH. Phelps talked to Wheless Thursday, and was told that in order to participate in the debate, we should have told him five days before debate so arrangements could be made.

"We definitely won't speak after Wheless and Allen debate each other," Phelps said. "We are for total integration—and we think it should apply in every area, including political debates. Wheless just wants the added publicity that he can get from debating twice. The issues must be discussed by all three candidates, or we won't have any part of such a discussion."

WORKMAN FIND SKULL

LONDON (UPI) — Workmen shoring up the foundations of No. 10 Downing Street, the prime minister's official residence, said Monday that had found a human skull inside a stone coffin, the remains of a 16th century courtier executed for some forgotten misdeed. They sent it to the British Museum where officials said it once had had been impaled on a spike.

Senior Candidates

College Weekend Advocated

By RICK BURNS

"The ability of the class officers to reach all members of our class for participation in class projects," was the "keynote" expressed yesterday by Roger Smith, UP candidate for President of the Senior class.

Other UP candidates are Richard Stapleton, Vice-President; Cecil Collins, Social Chairman; Anne Lobdell, Secretary and Jimmy Miller, Treasury.

College Weekend

Smith said that one major project of the class would be a "College Weekend" to raise money "for our gift." Smith feels that by "drawing on all groups of the campus for a common goal, unity can be achieved in our class."

"I think you need unification, particular in your senior year, so that you can identify yourself with a class," he added. Before the senior year there is very little class spirit, se said.

Possible Picnic

Cecil Collins said that plans for the Senior Clas weekend might include a picnic at Hogan's Lake and a talent show followed by a dance.

"It would be something for everyone to take part in," she said. "I've encountered a lot of enthusiasm on campus for both the College Weekend and the Senior Class Weekend."

On the dormitory and fraternity-sorority issue, Smith feels that co-operation in such drives as the alumni drive and participation in the other class projects would "be a greater unifying agent than efforts for the sole purpose of forcing the two groups together."

Good Ideas Around

"It goes back to how hard the officers are willing to work to get the ideas through to the students. There are a lot of good ideas floating around but it is the officers' ability to bring them in contact with the students that count."

Miss Lobdell stresed the needs for efficient records in the alumni drive. She added, "I'm interested in making sure everyone is aware of every meeting."

Asked about Richard Stapleton being in the infirmary, Smith joked, "I don't want people to get the impression we have an unhealthy slate."

Miller added that the success of the class gift as a contribution to the University would depend on the success of the class projects.

Debate Squad Has 7-3 Mark At New York

The UNC negative debate team captured a 5-0 record in a tournament at Brooklyn College last weekend. The affirmative team had a 2-3 record.

Debating for the negative team were George Carson and Reuben Moore. On the affirmative were Kellis Parker and Charles Heatherly.

Also at the tournament were Dartmouth, Holy Cross, West Point, and 61 other schools. Officials said this was the largest tournament in the nation.

West Point was the tournament winner.

Experienced Editors Needed—Managers

"Only experienced editors can carry out the realistic recommendations made by Chuck Wrye and Jim Clotfelter for improving the Daily Tar Heel," said campaign co-managers Fran Roth and Mike Putzel yesterday.

Miss Roth is the new president of the Pan-Hellenic Council. Putzel is president of the Young Americans for Freedom and former president of Cobb dormitory.

"No plan for improvement of the newspaper will succed unless the editors have sufficient experience and working knowledge of the Tar Heel's special problems," Miss Roth and Putzel said.

Experience

Wrye was DTH asst. sports editor and reporter last spring. Former news editor Clotfelter has been asst. to the editor, night editor, columnist and reporter.

They have been endorsed by the Publications Board and the Student Party.

"It is obvious to anyone who has observed the workings of the Tar Heel for the past year that its biggest problems stem from its small staff," Miss Roth and Putzel said.

Staff Endorsement

"The present DTH staff has overwhelmingly endorsed Chuck Wrye and Jim Clotfelter as the candidates most capable of improving the staff situation and solving the newspaper's other problems," they said.

A letter endorsing the co-editor candidates appeared in the DTH last week. It was signed by 13 present and past staff members, including the editor, advertising manager, associate editor and executive news editor.

Larger Staff

Wrye and Clotfelter have proposed that a full-time copy editor be added to the news staff and that a staff recruitment program be implemented.

"One of us will always be available to work with the staff," they said.

"A competent Tar Heel administration," said Wrye and Clotfelter, "should have sufficient staff to give full facts and insight into such issues as the value and role of student government; the function of the professor as a clasroom teacher or a researcher; the degree of student autonomy from the University administration; and the value of an honor system."

DU Pledges Are Winners

Delta Upsilon won the Stanley Sturm Award for the Outstanding Pledge Class of 1962 for the second consecutive year at the annual Greek Week Convocation in Memorial Hall Wednesday night.

The award is given on the basis of scholarship, total points in Greek Week field day, and work day points in Greek carnival and extra-curricular activities.

Individual Awards

Individual awards were given to Sigma Alpha Epsilon for first place in the carnival, Alpha Tau Omega for first place in scholarship and Delta Upsilon and Sigma Alpha Epsilon for joint first place in the field day events.

Wednesday night's convocation was the ending of the week that was developed to replace the "hell week" that was prevalent among fraternities some years ago.

IFC-Sponsored

Greek Week is sponsored by the Interfraternity Council, directed by Charlie Battle, for the purpose of creating better interfraternity relations and for deciding on the outstanding pledge class each year.

Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson spoke to the assemblage of the 24 fraternity pledge classes and told the neophytes that a challenge was "in store for the new initiates of Carolina fraternities."

Following Dean Henderson's talk, Brooks Emory, Treasurer of the IFC and Co-chairman with Battle, presented the awards to the respective groups. The climax of the meeting was the announcement of the Best Pledge Class trophy.

Jeff Pickett, president of the Delta Upsilon pledge class, accepted the award on behalf of the fraternity. It was the second consecutive year that Delta Upsilon had won the award.

Bean Birds Select 22 In Rites

Pre-Dawn Chirping Marks Ceremony For Fledgings

By Lew "Grosbeak" Llewellyn

In the early morning hours today, the members of the Noble Order of the Beanbirds jumped from their nests, perched in surrounding trees and swooped down upon the greater campus to gather new fledglings into the "home nest".

The new fledglings "hatched" into the Noble Order were: Gaston "Goatsucker" Caperton, Page "Peacock" Bradham, John "Vulture" McMillan, Becky "Bobolink" Elmore, Bob "Booby" Buck, Betsy "Bluebird" Fitch, Johnny "Jungle Fowl" Corpening, Darst "Duck" Murphy, Larry "Loggerhead" Brown, Larry "Loon" McDevitt, Charlie "Cuckoo" Jonas, Sam "Solitary Sandpiper" Applegate, Diana "Turtledove" Dial, Callie "Cardinal" Frazier, Sue "Starling" Drennen, Pat "Stork" Butler, Nancy "Nutcracker" Davis, Head "Broadrump" Bender, Dershie "Downy" Bridgford, Lucy "Lark" Wood, Munny "Screech" Yates, and Douglas "Albatross" Eyre.

The initiation for the birdlets took place after the spring "diet of worms" for the old birds, and the birdlets were selected after endless hours of chirping and singing by the old birds to find members who were able to meet the bird-like qualities. These qualities are:

(1) fly alone — even with a broken wing; (2) go out on a limb without falling — even when pushed; (3) give a worthy demonstration of the Beanbird shuffel — even around — even when inflamed; squawks in the air and on the with a broken leg; (4) control their (5) peck — even when claws are sore and tender; (6) twitter-tweet — even with a shattered beak; (7) use their claws to cling with "dear bird life" to the limbs of wisdom, service, hope, democracy, loyalty, beauty, friendship, humor, and humility.

Dore Schary Notes Luck In Theater

By WALT HANDY

Writer, director and producer, Dore Schary told the students of UNC's drama department that they "should be prepared to take advantage of an opportunity. Getting into the theatre is hard. It is a matter of luck."

Schary has been lecturing twice each day since Monday and will remain on the campus until Saturday.

Schary advised that one who desires to become an actor must do everything he can from community theater to off-broadway. He said that he would like to see a closer tie between the commercial theater and the collegiate.

Experience Stressed

Schary emphasized the importance of experience, and hard work. He said "If you have talent you might get a chance."

What impresses him most about an aspiring young person? "The way he has applied himself; what he has done with his knowledge," was Schary's reply. "Anything that you do is a help to you."

"It is a narrow plank I walk in relation to you young people," he said, "I am trying to be realistic. The way is hard, but the rewards are worth it."

Schary is the author of "Sunrise at Campobello" and was director, co-producer of "the Unsinkable Molly Brown" which is currently on tour.

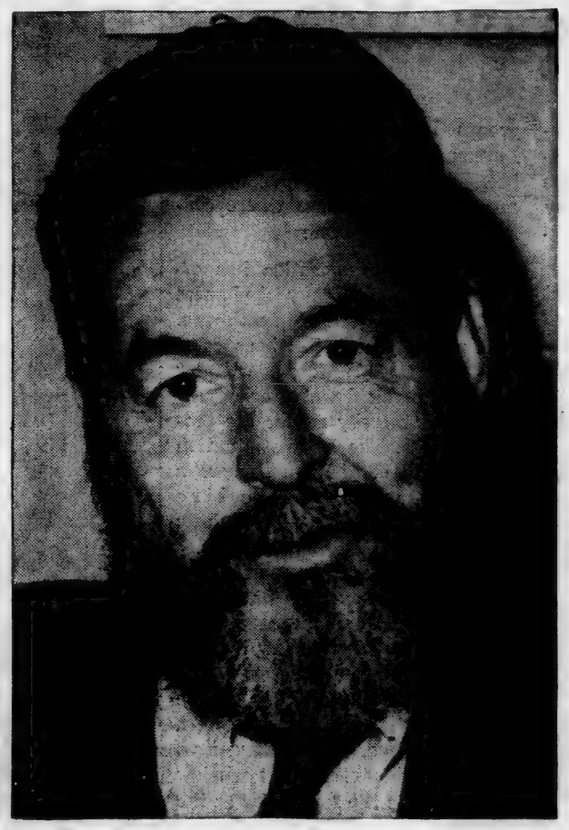
Poet Randall Jarrell Is Named Winner Of '62 Gardner Prize



RANDALL JARRELL

Award Made At Ceremony In Greensboro

GREENSBORO — The O. Max Gardner Award for 1962 was won here last night by Randall Jarrell, Woman's College poet, literary critic, and teacher.

Jarrell was cited for the award at a dinner in North Spencer Dining Hall of Woman's College. The award dinner is held annually on one of the three campuses of the University.

Gov. Gardner

The Gardner Award, first presented in 1945, was established in his will by the late Governor Gardner along with a bequest of $25,000. He directed that the award citation and bequest income be presented to the member of the faculty university "who has been adjudged by the trustees as having made the greatest contribution to the welfare of the human race during the past year."

Governor Gardner, born 80 years ago today, regarded the consolidation of the University of North Carolina in 1932 as one of the highest achievements of his administration.

Jarrell, a Tennessean, has been at Woman's College since 1947 and holds the rank of professor of English. He is the author of eight books, has won many distinguished literary prizes and has served as Consultant in Poetry in English at the Library of Congress.

National Book Award

During the past year his newest book, "The Woman at the Washington Zoo," won the National Book Award in Poetry, a prize given by American publishers for the best volume of poems published in the current year.

Last June Bard College conferred on Jarrell the honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters.

Dinner Address

The dinner address was made by Dr. O. Meredith Wilson, president of the University of Minnesota. President William Friday of UNC presided. Music was by the Woman's College Chamber Music Players. The entire program was televised by WUNC-TV.

Aside from his versatile literary productivity Professor Jarrell has been one of Woman's College's most popular and stimulating teachers, it was pointed out tonight. His course in narrative, for freshmen, has the highest enrollment of any elective course in the WC English Department

Award Brochure

The Award Brochure distributed tonight cited the following concerning the award winner: "Randall Jarrell is a poet, and he is a teacher. More important, he is a poet teaching. Once at a press conference in New York he was asked whether it was good for a poet to teach. Mr. Jarrell answered, 'I'm crazy about teaching myself . . . If I were a rich man, I would pay money to teach.'"

Born in Nashville, Tenn., in 1914, Jarrell did undergraduate and graduate studies at Vanderbilt between 1931 and 1939. He was at various times before coming to Woman's College literary editor of The Nation, a celestial navigation tower operator in the U. S. Air Force, and an instructor in English at Kenyon, the University of Texas, and Sarah Lawrence College.

Published Poems

His published poems include volumes entitled "Blood for a Stranger," "Little Friend, Little Friend," "Losses," "Selected Poems," and "The Seven-League Crutches." Another volume contains a series of critical essays, "Poetry and the Age." He is also the author of a novel, "Pictures from an Institution."

Jarrell has completed the manuscript for his ninth book, "A Sad Heart at the Supermarket." He also has edited and written an introduction to an edition of Rudyard Kipling short stories, and he is now completing a translation of Goethe's "Faust."

To Protect Public

Consumer Aid

President Kennedy's recent message to Congress advocating consumer protection comes as welcome news to housewives. But in many areas of the country it is being vigorously opposed.

The president pointed out that "many of the new products used everyday in the home are highly complex. The housewife is called upon to be an amateur electricion, mechanic, chemist, toxicologist, dietician and mathematician."

The complexities of consumer buying invite fraud and selling appeals that are aimed at prestige or some other non-utilitarian desire, rather than rational choices.

Mr. Kennedy proposes various actions, both administrative and legislative, to safeguard the consumer in such areas as food and drugs, cosmetics, installment purchases, transportation and television. The major legislative actions requested include: a requirement that new drugs be proved effective as well as safe before they are placed on the market; control of drug advertising to doctors; disclosure to borrowers of the actual rates of interest; support for pending legislation to require that television receivers be equipped for both UHF and VHF signals; and a provision for temporary cease and desist orders by the Federal Trade Commission against unfair competitive practices.

Behind these proposals are the extensive investigations by Congressional committees and executive agencies. Senator Kefauver has demonstrated the inadequacies in existing drug legislation and Senator Douglas has publicized abuse in the credit field, while the Federal Communications Commission has noted the narrowness of viewer's choice resulting from using only VHF channels. Other private groups like the Better Business Bureau and Consumer's Union have been aware for many years of these areas and many more where consumers are victimized.

The latter organization has often proved that many appliances are built with a specific death-rate. This means that it has been carefully calculated that a particular part will break down after a year or so, and thereby render the product useless. The same situation was pointed out in tires, where a few years ago the average tire would last 25,000 miles it now lasts 18,000.

Food processors are required by law to mark the exact weight of the contents, but some processors blatantly circumvent this law by listing the weight underneath a flap or in letters so small they can be seen only with a magnifying glass. One manufacturer printed the weight on the transparent window of a box — in the same color as the contents.

Those who oppose the new regulations as intrusions by the federal government into private enterprise, may be just the ones who have been victimizing and hoodwinking the public for years. Actually it seems more than probable, because as manufacturers are caught in a tighter and tighter profit-cost squeeze every year, they try to maintain prices by lowering the quantity and quality of their merchandise. Those who can maintain quality, quantity and not raise prices are certainly acting in the public interest.

But for those manufacturers who succumb to the temptation of exploiting the American consumer, there will, we hope, be adequate legislation and other remedies to cope with their unethical and greedy practices.

What's In A Name?

Heading the Show Business section of the most recent issue of "Time" is an article commenting on the importance of a name in determining the success or failure of a Hollywood or Broadway actor.

* * *

To underscore his point, the writer gave a list of examples: Tony Curtis' real name is Bernie Schwartz, Natalie Wood's is Natash Gurdin. Eve Arden's is Eunice Quedens, Dane Clark's is Barney Zanville, and so forth.

* * *

We were wondering if some of our campus politicians might give this name-changing bit a try. Hugh Inman Allen, for instance, might avoid being labeled Hughey, or worse yet, Innie, by changing his name to Rock Allen. Dwight Wheless might call himself Tab Wheless.

* * *

The flock of coeds running for various offices might use any one of several names that come to mind. Bell Tower. Caroline Blue. Olga Well.

* * *

Maybe someone will give it a try. Almost everything else has been attempted.

Womanhood's Sanctity Upheld

I have the honor to offer a retort to the letter written by one Blake Patterson, purported to be of the Michigan Daily, whatever organ that is:

I respectfully offer a reply to Mr. Blake Patterson's letter which was printed in the Tar Heel on the 18th instance. It is submitted for the perusal of his readers that if wisdom were negotiable he would likely be in the intellectual poorhouse. At any rate, he has somewhere along the course of his obviously immature years been ill advised. The term MOTIVE as employed by Mr. Patterson imports to the informed upon first blush that a CRIME is to be committed, and I submit that that alone would disgust any intelligent girl!

Perhaps that author knows better than I of the spineless members of our sex who seek to substitute a fair lass for a punching bag; at least some of us have been so fortunate as to avoid association with those so lacking in vertebral fortitude. In the same vein I would ask Patterson how he feels about the fact that, as he himself so aptly stated, he is apparently a product of a marital union sought only as a last resort. He seems to disclaim her heritage by the indirect and self-serving manifestations of his own prowess. If young Patterson is a member of the majority of college students now-a-days whose manna from heaven is money from home, I wonder how false and artificial the legal tender feels to his touch while he is deploying it to further his enlightened meandering?

There are some ages, predominantly in favor of the more formative years, during which BOYS (the term is used in context by Mr. Ogden Nash and others) do not seek the companionship of girls. Contrariwise they detest them and their presence at times. But those boys are not favorably impressed by flowers, or by paintings, or by music. Yet they pass on, presently noting some exceptions, to become men — gentlemen — and father, and so on ad infinitum. I likewise point out some inconsistency in Mr. Patterson's contention that male companionship is cheaper than playing consort to females, and his apparent (if he is the Lothario he claims to be) experience. If he finds the satisfaction of his rather selfish desires to be of no pecuniary consequence, he is either exceptionally easy to please, or he lives in a different day and age from that which some of us have passed through on the road to a greater appreciation of human values through our experiences!

Dogs and Women have Rights

Perhaps Blake is more intelligent than I, but I cannot recall when I have ever been terribly bored by the conversation of any young lady with whom I have the simple but esteemed honor to pass the time of day. In find ample support among a vast this I feel that my position would majority of the members of the male sex, Patterson notwithstanding.

We were not given to know what school author Patterson attended, but there is to be had no record at this University which speaks that it is a transgression of law or policy to talk in private with girls.

With regard to the remark concerning dogs I have only to say that dogs, as well as women, should have the right and privilege to choose those upon whom they would heap their NON-PHYSICAL AFFECTION, whatever that is.

At this point I would strongly lend support to a mass effort by the female population to severely censure Patterson. There are mothers, wives, sweethearts, sisters and just good friends; there are women of every noble calling and profession, from the highest of responsible places to the most humble charwoman — literally millions of females who would certainly be mortified, to say the least, to find that their only purpose in life was to staff the fountains of pleasure from which lusty young men might drink to satisfaction! Adverting to my former conclusion that Mr. Patterson is ILL-ADVISED, I now baste it to include UNINFORMED.

Heaven Forbid the Day

If Mr. Patterson has ever the opportunity to visit the mountain region of our great State, or the high roads of Scotland, the Scandanavians, the Balkans, or Ireland, or any other place where men are men and quite proud of it, I would fear for his physical integrity during the attendance upon a buck-dance, highland fling, irish jig, or numerous other such displays of strength, dexterity, and coordination, should be there cast even the slightest aspersion to reflect upon the masculinity of the all-male participants. Personally, I enjoy attending movies, etc., in company with girls, but I do not deny Patterson the right to attend them with whomever or whatever he chooses.

To conclude with the hope that Mr. Patterson may abide to read it, I believe the more favorable contention is that SEX, as used by Patterson, like ennumerable other major considerations which attend upon our passage through life, has a necessary and proper place. To resort to the vernacular, we believe it is here to stay. Surely the very relationship between man and woman — the very foundation of our existence if you please, is sex-oriented, using the term favored by Mr. Patterson. But the human mind, as well as the body, is capable of expansion. No, it is highly susceptible to it. Thus may heaven forbid the day when there are no women, no coquetry, no inspiration, temptation or excitement; but forbid as well the day when the normal male can see no value, save sexual, in his counterpart.

Mr. Patterson perhaps should reorganize, recapitulate, and above all, reevaluate.

The author herein would be pleased should the foregoing letter find its way to the source of original publication of the letter commented upon, as well as receiving consideration for the Tar Heel.

Party Achievements Listed By Randall

To the Editor:

This year the University Party is making a determined effort to secure the dormitory vote by pledging support to many very worthwhile dormitory projects in recognition of the fact that the dormitory residents comprise one of the most important groups in the student body.

The question is: Why hasn't the UP introduced legislation to bring about these goals? All four of the UP big four candidates were in the legislature during the last two sessions and have had ample opportunity to present a program.

The fact is that the UP did not introduce a single bill that had any direct effect on dormitories. A further check of the official records of the 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, 31st assemblies of the Student Legislature reveals that the UP introduced only one bill dealing with dormitories in all that time:

DORMITORY MEASURES

Student Party

1. BW-26-12 Bill to set up a committee to study the feasibility, practicality, and the need for having washing machines and dryers in the vicinity of the men's dormitories.

2. BY-26-36: Establish committee to administer the Television Repair Fund.

3. RW-26-39: Resolution for improvement of Cobb Dorm Parking Lot.

4. BF-26-49; Bill to appropriate $190.00, at least $95.00 of which should be from the television repair fund for the purpose of purchasing a TV set for the Student Infirmary.

5. BW-27-13: Bill to authorize a Referendum of Women Dormitory Residents Concerning the Collection of Social and Activity Fees.

6. RW-28-1: Resolution to support the installation of adequate fire protection and alarm systems in all dormitories.

7. BF-28-26: A Bill to appropriate $350.00 to the Men's Interdormitory Council.

8. RW-28-41: A Resolution in support of the installation of cup dispensing drink machines in dormitories.

9. BF-30-13; Bill to appropriate $175.00 to alleviate inadequate social facilities.

10. Jan. 8, 1954: Sixteen bills introduced in one night: TV sets for all dorms; washing machines for McIver, Spencer, and Alderman.

11. BF-31-27: A bill to appropriate $343.00 to the Men's Interdormitory Council for an experimental program of paid intramural managers.

12. BF-32-74: A bill to establish a Communications Committee which aided the establishment of dormitory newspapers.

13. BW-32-23: A Bill to Establish a TV fund committee which concerned repair of TV sets for small dorms.

Candidates Lambasted

To the Editor:

So Bill Harriss and Hank Patterson are running for N.S.A. delegates. Were four years not enough? Do they consider the Carolina undergraduate competent to represent Carolina at the N.S.A. convention? Or, after their glorious reign, do they feel that the undergraduates cannot do without them?

Carolina has benefitted from the vast knowledge acquired at N.S.A. conventions by those two soon-to-be graduated young men. It is difficult to walk across the campus without thinking, "There is something N.S.A. did for Carolina — Bill and Hank learned how to do that at last year's N.S.A. convention." As students walk about the campus, they feel proud that part of their student fees was spent to give their delegates an expense-paid trip to some Midwestern city where they could meet with liberals from all over the country — students know their money could not be spent for a better purpose on the campus.

Carolina students often visualize their N.S.A. delegates at the convention. Students visualize their N.S.A. delegates at the convention. Students visualize their delegates sitting there, nodding their heads and slapping each other's back as some well-known liberal or socialist blasts "Yankee Imperialism", or as the N.S.A. Executive Committee announces that it has sent a telegram to the Japanese students who rioted against former President Eisenhower.

Bill and Hank were there — voting, nodding and slapping. They were there after their Junior year; now they want to be there after their Senior year — perhaps next year they will want to be there after their first year in Law School or graduate school.

Who knows, they may stay here forever — then we could have some very old delegates to the N.S.A. conventions. I admit that they wouldn't look like students, but that wouldn't mean anything—many who now attend are not students, merely professional liberals.

RS-70 Scored As 'Obsolete'

To the Editor:

I find Wade Wellman's argument in favor of an appropriation of $6 billion for the RS-70 bomber not only out-dated but also somewhat contradictory. Mr. Wellman complains that President Kennedy is involved in a tragic error in opposing this plan which "would virtually end our strategic-assault worries." Mr. Wellman would go along with "the recommendations of almost every military expert in the country," in a plan for a fleet of these highly expensive bombers.

The question we must ask ourselves is just how effective will the bombers be. Mr. Wellman has given us a list of their good points but there are several gaps, the major flaw being the time element. War today has been predicted to last only minutes merely a matter of a flock of missiles landing at strategic points all over a country the size of the U. S. There would not be time for the RS-70 to take off, much less a place to land when it returned.

Another drawback is that although Russia may not have a missile at present to stop the RS-70, there is no reason to suppose that they might not have developed one by the time construction of the bombers is completed. Mr. Wellman's example of the B-58 serves as an excellent example of this. No sooner was the Air Force able to dupe Congress into spending millions on this bomber than that formidable fortress of the skies became obsolete, and the Air Force began to fight for the RS-70.

In fact bombers themselves have become obsolete as have interceptor fighters, super aircraft carriers and battleships. And yet Congress continues to spend milllions and now billions on weapons that are obsolete before they are built. Why? Because of the "military experts", the generals and admirals of WW II who fought violently against the first aircraft carrier and court martialled Billy Mitchell when he tried to convince them of the merits of bombers. They are changed men now, however, due to their vast experience. They now know how effective these weapons can be and are struggling to improve them, oblivious to the fact that an entirely new turnover in military strategy is taking place. Let's not us, the eye-witnesses to this change feel bound to the out-dated methods of our "experienced" grandfathers. Let's forget the RS-70 and see if we can't find some other way to spend that $6 billion.

School Of Medicine Holds Open House This Saturday

The UNC School of Medicine will open house for college students from throughout the state Saturday.

All students are welcome and pre-registration for the annual event is not required. Students and pre-medical advisors from the following schools have already indicated they will attend. Wake Forest College, Guilford College, Elon College, N. C. State College, Woman's College, Davidson College, Duke University and Western Carolina College. These groups will be in addition to students attending from the University of North Carolina and other institutions of higher learning.

Registration

Registration will begin at 9:30 a. m. in the lobby of the School of Medicine Building. At this time visitors will receive lunch tickets and tour-group assignments.

A series of short talks will be given between 10 and 11 a.m. Dr. W. R. Berryhill, dean of the School of Medicine, will welcome the visitors. Glenn Pickard of Asheville, president of the Medical Student Body, will talk on "A Student's View of Medical Training at UNC."

"A Graduate's View of Medical Training at UNC" will be given by Dr. William Joyner, practicing physician and part time faculty member of the Medical School.

Dr. E. McG. Hedgpeth, chairman of the school's Admissions Committee, will talk on "Admission Policies at UNC."

The fourth tour of the morning will be of N. C. Memorial Hospital, the patient areas and the laboratories.

Lunch will be served visitors in the Hospital Cafeteria at 1 o'clock. All visitors are invited to attend a track meet with Clemson College at Fetzer Field at 3 p.m. Admission is free.

Eichmann Appeals His Death Sentence

JERUSALEM, Israel (UPI) — Adolf Eichmann Thursday began his final court fight against his death sentence for mass murder with a 61-page appeal which included a plea for testimony from one of West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer's top aides.

Eichmann sat impassively in his bullet-proof box as his attorney, Dr. Robert Servatius, began the appeal before five judges of the Israeli Supreme Court. It was expected to take four days. If it is turned down, only clemency from President Itzhak Ben-Zvi can save Eichmann from the hangman.

The courtroom is the same in which Eichmann received the death sentence Dec. 15 for murdering millions of Jews during World War II.

Point by Point

Servatius sought to demolish the Israeli posecution's case, point by point. His objections ranged from the circumstances of Eichmann's kidnaping in Argentina to the competence of Israel to try him.

He again appealed to German officials who could shed light on Eichmann's role in the Hitler regime, and said Hans Klobke, Adenauer's state secretary, could testify that Eichmann had no choice but to follow orders from higher Nazi officials.

No Drama

The opening session of the appeal produced none of the drama that occurred almost daily in last summer's four and one-half months of the trial.

The action was limited to legal maneuvering, with no witnesses. Most of the onlookers Thursday ignored the legal arguments and concentrated on Eichmann, who appeared in good health although a shadow of his former self.

$2 Million Given For Road Link

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The United States made a $2 million contribution Thursday to a joint fund to provide a highway link that would make it possible to drive from Alaska to the southern tip of South America.

The contribution was turned over to the Organization of American States OAS which will administer the project.

French Fleet Is Sailing For Algeria

PARIS (UPI) — France's Mediterranean fleet sailed toward Algeria Thursday for what could develop into a showdown between President Charles de Gaulle's government and the outlawed European Secret Army organization OAS.

The missile cruiser Colbert, flagship of Adm. Andre Jubelin, left the southern France naval base of Toulon and joined other units of the fleet exercising in the Mediterranean. They included the aircraft carrier Lafayette.

A Navy spokesman said the fleet will arive at Mers-el-Kebir, the giant naval and air base just outside Oran, in a few days.

It was termed a "refueling stop" that was scheduled some time ago. But it coincided with steadily mounting tension in Oran after a street battle there Wednesday between French security forces and OAS commandos supported by European civilians.

Withholds Decision

De Gaulle has withheld a decision to send the French army into action against Europeans in Algeria. So far it has been used solely to create protective cordons to keep Europeans and Moslem mobs from clashing.

But the OAS Thursday flung down the gauntlet at the French army. It ordered the army from midnight onward to stay out of Bab-el-Oued, the OAS stronghold. OAS handbills warned that any troops would be considered as "enemy soldiers" and fired on. Similar warnings were delivered in Oran.

The OAS again Thursday showed its stranglehold on Oran and Algiers. No planes left either city for France. Travelers were told by ticket clerks at airline offices they could not buy tickets unless they had exit permits issued not only by French authorities but also by the OAS.

Reds Ask E. German Control Of All Routes To West Berlin

GENEVA (UPI) — The Soviet Union proposed Thursday that Communist East Germany be granted control of the air, land and canal routes to West Berlin and that an international body of advisers be set up to help the Communists carry out procedures.

The United States immediately dismissed the proposal as a minor variation on the Old Soviet plan to drive the Western Allies out of Berlin and further Communist aims of turning West Berlin into a "free" demilitarized city.

The proposal was put forward by Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko in a two-hour conference with Secretary of State Dean Rusk. The meeting failed to make the slightest progress on cold war issue and it appeared the current series of U. S. - Soviet Berlin talks was on the brink of collapse.

A complete impasse existed in the Big Three nuclear test ban subcommittee as well, and an American delegation spokesman said Rusk virtually had abandoned hope for progress on Berlin or a test ban at this time.

The Western sources said the new Russian proposal failed to meet Western demands for free and unhindered access to West Berlin and was far apart from the Western proposal some weeks ago that an international commission assume control of all of West Berlin's lifelines — ground, canal and air.

A U. S. spokesman said of the new plan: "This is a minor variation of the total Communist plan. There is no change in the basic problem."

The only ray of hope in the day's activities in Geneva came Thursday night at a cocktail party tendered by the Americans. The U. S. and Soviet co-chairmen of the 17-nation disarmament conference discussed procedure to be followed.

Colorful Alumni Game

The Alumni-Varsity football game is 15 days away and Coach Jim Hickey's men are past the midway point in their spring drills. On April 7 the rising sophomores, juniors, and seniors will take the field against the graduating seniors and a large number of alumni in what should be one of the most colorful spring games ever staged in Kenan Stadium.

In addition to 1961 All-Conference footballers Jim LeCompte, Ray Farris, and Bob Elliott, a number of pros and former UNC All-Americans will play against the 1962 version of Jim Hickey's Tar Heels.

Charlie Justice, the greatest of UNC backs, will play as will recent graduates Jack Cummings, Rip Hawkins, Ronnie Koes, Al Goldstein, Ed Sutton, Ed Lipski, Andy Miketa, and Art Weiner. Wade Smith and John Schroeder, assistant frosh football coaches and UNC stars only two seasons back will perform. And the Chapel Hill merchants have their say in Bob Cox of Town and Campus and Joe Augustine of Stevens-Shepherd, ex-UNC footballers.

Kortner Biggest Surprise

Including today, there are only nine days of practice remaining for the football players. Four practice sessions in each of the next two weeks precede the Alumni game. The ACC limits offseason drills to 20.

Hickey's biggest surprise during the first half of the spring drills has been Cole Kortner who curently holds down the number two left tackle position behind Jim Alderman. Kortner was a heavyweight wrestler last year for Coach Sam Barnes, but missed half of that season and all of this year because of a shoulder injury. A scholastic junior, he's playing football at UNC for the first time and Hickey is pleased with what he's seen.

Designating players as first, second, or third string is hardly fair since Coach Hickey and his staff plan to employ the three-platoon system next season. The first team or starting unit will be known as the Blues, the second team or offensive unit will be called the Rams, while the defensive specialists wil be tagged Tar Heels.

The coaches are looking forward to putting this system to use next fall and it would certainly be a pleasant autumn in Chapel Hill if the results are similar to Paul Dietzel's successful program at LSU with his White, Go, and Chinese Bandit units.

In the backfield Sandy Kinney, red shirted in 1961, is running the Blue unit at quarterback. An excellent passer, Kinney has three years of eligibility remaining. At running back, or left half, freshman speedster Ronnie Jackson and Joe McLamb are the top men, while at wing back, or right half, Ward Marslender holds down the number one spot. Marslender will co-captain the 1962 squad. Barry Westfall is Blue team fullback.

Runco, Bob Lacey and Jim Ray have all looked good at left end. Steve Yates, a starter last season, has been bothered by a knee injury. At the other end Bruce Greene, switched from guard, is the number two man behind Hammett. Frank Gallagher, Joe Robinson, and Christian Hanburger have looked sharp at the tight end post.

At left tackle, Alderman and Kortner are the top two. Gene Sigmon is number three man, but he too has been plagued by knee trouble. Rich Fellman has had a good spring. The play of Esposito, freshman John Hill, Rusty Hodges, and Jim Naughton has impressed the UNC mentor. The tackle positions, where John Hegarty and Jim Shumate played in 1961, present one of the biggest problems to the staff. Also there is the possibility that big Tony Hennessey may not be able to play this fall.

Green's Best Spring

Duff Greene at right guard has had his best spring ever at the position LeCompte filled in last season. Buddy Cozart, switched from fullback to guard, and Clint Eudy, a freshman, are the number two and three men. Tillery and Jerry Cabe, both starters at left guard last year, are back.

George Boutselis and rising sophs Gary Black and Jim Gallagher have turned in fine showings at quarterback behind Kinney. John Flournoy is the top defensive man and may play safety where he starred his sophomore season. Last year John was handicapped with an injury and saw little action.

Hickey was pleased with the showing of his halfbacks during the first two weeks. Marslender and Roger Smith are "seasoned good football players". Frosh quarterback Ron Tuthill has been switched to halfback and has looked good. Others are speedsters McLamb and Jackson and Ray Jones, Dave Henry, Dave Braine, Tom Brooks, and Jim Whitmire.

Ed Kesler, switched from quarterback, is the number two man behind Westfall at fullback. Sophs Richard Zarro, Jim Szymaitis, and Pete Kirvan have made good showings thus far.

On the injured list, besides Yates, are center Jay Malobicky, left half Hank Barden, and fullback Ken Willard. Willard has resumed practice this week and the freshman star should be ready for the Alumni contest.

Golfers Drub Indians Again

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Coach Ed Kennedy's UNC golf team completely dominated play for the second straight day, Wednesday, as the Tar Heels downed Dartmouth 38-1, on Finley Golf Course.

For the Carolina linksmen, who had routed the Indians, 42½-2½ in the first of their dual matches on Tuesday, the victory was a prep for two tough meets today and tomorrow with visiting Michigan State.

Jay Harris, a junior from Mebane, N. C., came away with medalist honors Wednesday as he shot a four-under-par 68 in downing Ace Eaton, 3-0. Greensboro sophomore Sam McNairy also broke par for UNC with a 71 in his 3-0 victory over Joe Shannon.

Dartmouth's Dave McCollum won the Indian's only point when he dropped a 2-1 decision to UNC captain Pete Green. MCollum with a 79, was the only Dartmouth golfer to break 80.

Sophomores Harvie Hill, who shot a medal-winning 70 on opening day, and Jere Ayers, both came in with 73 while senior John Brabson fired a 74.

Carolina's match with the Spartans will start on Finley at 1:30 this afternoon.

- Coed Intramural Basketball -

After a month of cage competition, Alderman and Whitehead have emerged as finalists in the W.A.A. basketball intramural tournament. The two teams met Thursday night for the championship trophy.

In the semifinals Tuesday night, Alderman defeated Spencer II, 81-46, and Whitehead won over Delta Delta Delta, 59-33.

Spencer had won the League I title by beating Chi Omega and Alpha Gamma Delta. Whitehead had to top the Nurses, Pi Beta Phi and Kappa Kappa Gamma in League II. Alderman beat out Kappa Delta II and McIver easily in League III, and the Tri Delts defeated Spencer I and Kappa Delta I for the League IV championship.

The sorority and dormitory with the greatest number of participation points during the year will each receive all-sports trophies.

NCAA Semifinals On Tap Tonight

Wake Forest meets Ohio State and Cincinnati plays UCLA in the semi-finals of the NCAA playoffs tonight. The Wake Forest-Ohio State clash will be televised locally. Game time is 7:30.

The winners of the Eastern and Western championships tonight clash tomorrow night for the NCAA championship. Cincinnati is the defending champion, but Ohio State's Buckeyes were rated the top team during the regular season by both press polls. The Bucks won the NCAA title two seasons ago and then lost to their downstate neighbors in overtime in 1961.

Wake Forest comes from the Atlantic Coast Conference, the league that boasted the national champion in 1957 when UNC's Tar Heels won the title. UCLA is a member of the Big Five, which produced national champion California in 1959.

Already this season, Ohio State has defeated Wake Forest, 84-62, and UCLA's surprising Bruins, 105-84.

Ohio State boasts the best record, 25-1. Cincinnati is 27-2 and Wake Forest 21-8. UCLA, after winning only four of 11 games, is 18-9.

McQuire To Coach At Clinic

RALEIGH — Coach Frank McGuire of the Philadelphia Warriors and Frank Ramsey, star of the Boston Celtics, will be guest lecturers at the sixth annual Everett Case Basketball School for Boys this June.

McGuire, former University of North Carolina coach, and Ramsey of the world champion Celtics, will join Case and his freshman coach Lou Pucillo, a former all-America guard for the Wolfpack, in the basketball school scheduled for June 3 to June 22 at the N. C. State Fairgrounds, in Raleigh.

All phases of basketball will be covered by this outstanding quartet of basketball personalities.

There will be three one-week sessions, and two two-week sessions. The school will be divided into three age groups: nine to 11, 12 to 14, and 15 through the junior year in high school. No senior in high school is eligible.

The entire school will be held on the State Fairgrounds, with three full size courts available in the Coliseum. The boys will be housed and fed in the modern Youth Center.

UNC Nine Defeats Florida In Opener

Timely doubles by Russ Hollers and Larry Neal helped coach Walter Rabb's UNC baseball team open its season Wednesday with a 13-9 victory over the University of Florida.

Hollers doubled home three runners in the fifth, when the Tar Heels scored seven runs. Four walks also figured in the frame as Florida sophomore Jimmy Elliott weakened after an impressive start.

Neal drove home two runs with his double in the eighth, when Carolina's four runs broke a tie and hung the loss on veteran C. W. Price. Sophomore righthander Bobby Cox relieved in the seventh and got credit for the win.

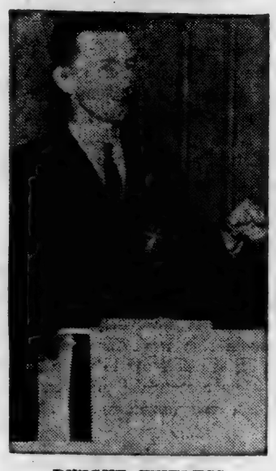
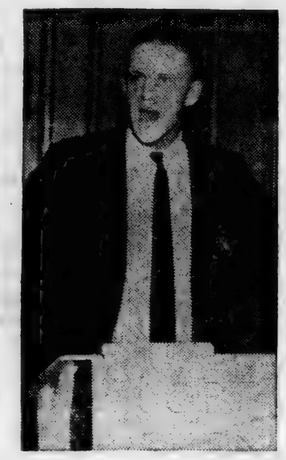
Candidates Argue Question Of SP Dorm Representation

Allen Claims He Advised Ruffin Group



DWIGHT WHELESS



INMAN ALLEN

By HARRY LLOYD

Student Party and University Party candidates for the Big Four offices attacked each other over dorm representation, Student Government participation, and past records in a sometimes-flaring debate in Cobb Dormitory Thursday night.

When SP presidential candidate Dwight Wheless presented the figure that the SP had introduced 203 bills in past legislative sessions as compared to only 58 for UP members, UP nominee Inman Allen fired back that most of the members that the SP were claiming were doubly-endorsed candidates who were in actuality members of both parties.

Allen declared that the present SP administration had made only an outward appearance of helping dormitory residents, and offered that it had been he who aided the residents of Ruffin Dorm when the administration came up with the plan of an all-freshman dorm in Ruffin next year.

"I was down at Ruffin the night after the story came out in the Tar Heel," Allen explained. "The boys there didn't know what to do. They first thought about a petition to be signed by all the students in the upper quad and as many other students as they could get. They said, 'Inman, you know more about this than we do. Tell us what we can do.'

Until 4 A.M.

"I told them that the administration would pay more attention to the petition if it were signed by the members of Ruffin. By 4 o'clock the next morning, we had the names of every Ruffin resident on that petition."

In a question and answer period following the opening talks, incumbent president Bill Harriss challenged Allen's statement that his administration had been unaware of the plan to change Ruffin, and that they had already advised the Ruffin residents before Allen met with them. "What they did is real grassroot student government," Harriss said.

Also during the debate, which was attended by a standing-room-only crowd, both parties advocated what their separate platforms would do for dorm residents, but both parties were in dissension as to whether the split between dorm and fraternity man should exist.

Welch Is Elected President Of IDC

By OWEN BISHOP

Bruce Welch, a Morehead Scholar from Asheville, was elected President of the Interdormitory Council at its meeting Wednesday night.

Other officers elected to the IDC for the coming year are: Ralph Mosley, vice-president; Owen Bishop, secretary; Lin Dearing, Treasurer; John Gould, chairman of the IDC Court; and Gale Martin, court clerk.

After his election, Welch appointed John Mitchiner, a junior pharmacy major from Edenton, as special assistant to the president. The appointment was unprecedented within the IDC.

Welch has been active in campus extra-curriculars for some time and in the IDC for the past two years. He has been chairman of the IDC Court, a member of the student legislature, on the GM Board of Directors and a member of the Society of Janus.

As IDC president he will direct the overall program of the organization for the coming year and will represent it in dealings with the administration, faculty and Board of Trustees.

Assistant

The president's assistant, John Mitchiner, served as IDC vice-president this year and is a member of the Honor Council. His new duties will center around working with the new president and helping him implement his policies and plans.

Ralph Mosley, the new vice-president, has served on the IDC Court and the Social Committee. His major job in office will be organizing the year's social program as chairman of the Social Committee.

The Secretary, Owen Bishop, was chairman of the IDC Publicity Committee last year and accepts with his office the responsibility of keeping minutes of meetings, attendance and other records.

Lin Dearing, the treasurer, has been in the IDC for two years and will be taking on the responsibility for handling the funds of the IDC and of each individual dormitory.

IDC Court

The IDC Court will be under the leadership of Chairman John Gould, who will direct its work, and Clerk Gale Martin, who will keep all Court records. Gould has been in the IDC for two years, serving on the Court one year and as chairman of the Intramural and New Dorms Committee the next. Martin has been an active member of the Court this year and has served on several committees.

Folk Sounds Ramble Tonight

The New Lost City Ramblers will be featured tonight at 8:00 in Graham Memorial's presentation of "Folk Sound '62." The concert will be in Memorial Hall and is free to townspeople and students.

Backing up the Ramblers will be a Carolina folk music group called the Chicken Farmers and two Tar Heel performers, Mike Hall and Dan Brock. Although the Ramblers are making their debut on campus, one of the group's members, Mike Seeger performed here last season.

Hall, a well-known folk song celebrity at UNC, limits himself to American songs and blues, while Brock, a junior from Lexington, Kentucky, specializes in traditional ballads. Brock has worked closely with one of the oldest and most respected figures in the field of ballads, Mr. John Jacob Niles.

Elections Board

There will be an important meeting of the Elections Board Mon. at 4 p.m. in Woodhouse Conference Room. If unable to attend, contact Dave Buxton.

Clotfelter, Wrye, Urge Stimulation

More Opinion Is Asked On Edit Page

"The Daily Tar Heel should not become a shapeless, spineless information bulletin," said Chuck Wrye and Jim Clotfelter, candidates for Daily Tar Heel co-editors, yesterday.

"We will work to make the Tar Heel interesting and stimulating — a newspaper which the students will read every day."

Former staff members Wrye and Clotfelter have been endorsed by the Publications Board and the Student Party.

"Various Viewpoints"

"All segments of opinion are welcome to contribute material," said Wrye and Clotfelter, "but there is no need for dividing the editorial column responsibilities among 15 writers, as has been proposed by our opponent, Ernest Stepp."

Under Wrye and Clotfelter as editors the Tar Heel would "impose no restrictions whatsoever on subject matter or point of view of letters-to-the-editor," they said.

Humorous

A regular book-movie-threater review column and one or more humorous writers should be added to the editorial staff, said the candidates.

"These changes will give the campus a livilier, more interesting Tar Heel than they have seen this year," concluded Wrye and Clotfelter.

Russians Very Like Americans, Bateson Says

Bateson said that all 11 Russian "students," aged from late twenties to earlier thirties, were high up in the Communist youth group, the Consomol.

Bateson said that all conversation at the party had to be through an interpreter as none of the Russians spoke fluent English. The interpreter was a Russian immigrant who has lived in the United States for the past ten years.

Bateson said that Jim Roberts, a graduate student who speaks fluent Russian, had been a great aid in translating. "Russian literature was a frequent topic of conversation; one man was a newspaper editor from Kazahtan in Siberia. He was a friend of Eli Ehrenberg, a popular Russian writer.

This editor liked Hemingway very much said Bateson, "but when asked what he thought about the American press he said that he did not approve of so much advertising, Bateson said. "Conversation was friendly, yet it always tended away from politics."

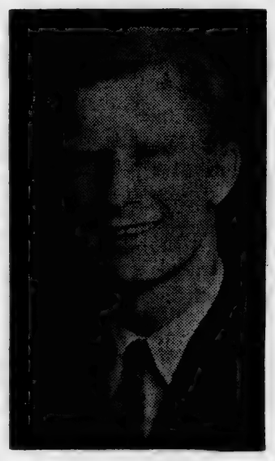
Write-In Candidate

Mike Mathers In Race For Tar Heel Editor

Race Expense Accounts Due

Dave Buxton, chairman of the Elections Board, said yesterday that itemized statements of campaign expenses accounts must be turned in by monday noon as stated in the Election Laws. The statements should be turned in at the Graham Memorial Information Office or Student Government Office.

According to the Election Law, an itemized description of any campaign expenses, and a complete, itemized, signed statement of expenses shall be turned in to the Elections Board by each candidate and party on or before noon Monday.



MIKE MATHERS

Is Now DTH Ad Manager

Mathers, present advertising manager of the DTH, will graduate in June with an AB in journalism. He will continue here next year as a special student in journalism.

Other Candidates

Already in the race for editor are Ernest Stepp and Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye as co-editors.

Mathers said he entered the race late because "after much consideration, I decided that neither of the candidates running will be able to produce a really good Tar Heel."

Mathers has been on the DTH and the publication board for 2½ years. He began newspaper work in his senior year in high school on a California weekly, the "Vista Free Press."

Last summer he was on the advertising staff of the "Rock Hill (S. C.) Evening Herald."

Work on Handbook

He has worked on the Carolina Handbook and the Carolina Quarterly. Mathers also represented Dorm Mens III for one year in student legislature.

As of March 18 this year the Daily Tar Heel had billed $25,000 in advertising, already $1,000 more than legislature had allocated.

Campbell's Statement

Orville Campbell, past editor of the DTH, and Publisher of the "Chapel Hill Weekly" said, "During my many years of association with the Tar Heel, both as a student and since then as a printer, I have met few students with better organizational ability than Mike Mathers.

"I am certain that if he is elected editor, he will do a most creditable job for the student body and the University," he said.

Mathers estimated that approximately $7,000 profit — a record for any DTH — would be turned in Student Legislature general surplus fund at the end of the year.

Tim Burnett, business manager of the DTH, said, "I have worked on the paper for three years and Mike is the most competent advertising manager I've seen. I have no doubt that he is able to run the entire paper as well as he has run the advertising staff."

Stepp Emphasizes DTH Revamping

Ernest Stepp claimed Friday that "his program for reorganizing the DTH was the most realistic of announced programs" and that "the program of his opponents would do nothing for the Tar Heel but present the same old hash—rehashed."

Staff of 50

"Some people have labeled my announced staff program as unrealistic. But a staff of fifty members has worked at other schools, and it should, and will, work here. Being a reporter or sports writer of the staff of the DTH should not mean that a student would work every day.

"However, there are many students that could and should give several hours a week to the DTH, if they felt appreciated for their work," Independent candidate Stepp said.

"I have been the only candidate to announce a program and a staff plan which is designed to attract these needed reporters. My apprentice program will give any student chance to work for the Tar Heel, a fair and equal chance to work for the paper regardless of his major.

Bylines

"Guaranteeing a byline to a writer and his story, when he wants it, will give a reporter the incentive to keep writing for the DTH.

"Some people have asked why I feel the DTH needs an editorial staff of 15. My reply is that by using such a staff, I will free the paper of having only one man's opinions on the editorial page.

Free to Bicker

"The staff will be composed of people with varying views and will be free to continuously bicker with each other in the editorial columns."

Stepp, endorsed by the Publications Board, said "he felt that the Tar Heel was a newspaper first and an editorial function second."

News Presentation

He added that his staff program would give the Tar Heel a chance to present campus news dynamically. He also said that a larger staff would let the small amounts of UPI news to be rewritten and presented on a college level.

Referring to Mike Mather's announcement as a candidate for DTH editor, he termed the campaign as "interesting, surprising, but a late move. Write-in campaigns are almost impossible to conduct," Stepp added.

Mathers Notes Lack Of Spirit On Tar Heel

Mike Mathers, write-in candidate for editor of the Daily Tar Heel, yesterday released this statement to the DTH:

"The trouble with the Daily Tar Heel today is a genuine lack of spirit. This will not be solved by trying to pack the already limited facilities with inexperienced people.

"Fresh Ideas"

"Only with good leadership and FRESH ideas wil the DTH be able to pull out of this apparent slump. These qualities cannot be found in the present candidates.

"Administrative leadership and general coordination would alleviate much of the shoddyness found in the DTH. The meeting of deadlines, which has been a major fault, would give the men who set type more time to put out a more finished product.

"One of the main functions of the editor should be to create an atmosphere whereby students will want to contribute written opinion as well as time. The enlarging of the staff to 8,000 people will only kill any feeling of responsibility an indivdual might have.

Faculty Interviews

"An idea that might be worth discussing here would be to interview various faculty members on international, national, state and local problems. This would be done regularly once or twice a week depending on the amount of interest students have for certain current events.

"For example, the subject of the Common Market and Kennedy's plans for lowering tariffs should be discussed in the DTH not only by students but by UNC professors who deal in subjects relating to this topic. The opinions of a political science professor, one from the school of business administration, and a third from the economis department would be written in a question and answer form.

Student Polls

"The polling of student feeling would not only add interest to the editorial page but would also stimulate student thought on subjects concerning them directly or indirectly.

"Another idea which may be effective would be to publish a weekly or bi-weekly magazine in conjunction with the business staff of the DTH. This magazine would

Quarterly On Sale Today

"It's the biggest magazine The Carolina Quarterly has ever put out, and probably the best too." So said Jerome Stern, the editor in an interview at the printshop with the roar of the presses nearly drowning out conversation. "Eighty-eight pages," he shouted and disappeared to check on the color selection for the cover.

The magazine goes on sale today at the Intimate, the Bull's Head, Graham Memorial Information desk and other places around campus.

He returned with the wet page proofs in his hand. "There's the lead story—Harris Downey. He's been printed all over, Epoch, The Kenyon Review. It's a great story."

Stern flipped to the last page. "Now here is one on James Branch Cabell. I guess William and Mary or the state of Virginia never will forgive him for his behavior."

A member of the Carolina Quarterly staff suddenly appeared with a glistening copy of the cover. It is difficult to describe exactly what it looks like. Stern says it was painted by a mysterious but talented artist who will remain forever unknown. "I'm afraid Reflections might take offense at our cover picture but we had no such intent," Stern commented ruefully.

Five Stories

There are five complete stories in the issue by writers from Chapel Hill to Honolulu. UNC coed Molly Rains is having her first story published.

With all the fiction, poetry has not been neglected. There are dozens of poems from people all over the country. Campus poet Dudley Carroll and Peter Krones appear as well as works by Leon Rooke of the UNC News Bureau.

Candidate: Dwight Wheless

By MARTY KRUMING

With March 27 drawing closer and closer, how many Carolina students actually know Student Party presidential candidate Dwight Wheless aside from his numerous campaign posters and his impressive record in student government.

As far as Dwight Heneard Wheless is concerned politics are the spice of his life. Born in High Point, Wheless attended the elementary school there and went on to complete four successful years at the High Point High School with an enrollment of 1800 students.

Class President

As a junior at High Point, Wheless was elected president of his class and ran away with the student body presidential elections his senior year. During his high school career, Wheless was a member of the National Honor Society as well as being Lieutenant Governor of Boy's State.

Through his four years at High Point Wheless was an ardent and illustrious debater.

Having been offered a state loan, Wheless entered the University of North Carolina in the fall of 1958. Only a freshman on the campus, Wheless quickly made a dent in student government as he was elected floor leader of the student party legislature.

Wins Linker Award

Upon completion of a highly successful sophomore year, this young politician was presented with the much coveted Linker Award, given annually by the Janus Society to the most outstanding undergraduate. Another link was added to his political chain when he was elected to the state student legislature.

Finally, with the election of student body president Bill Harriss last fall, Wheless was raised to the post of presidential advisor. As a member of Harriss' cabinet he introduced 13 bills in addition to the one submitted earlier.

Political Background

Elaborating further on Wheless' political background, he has served as vice-chairman of the Student Party, chairman on the Ways and Means Committee, and has worked effectively in all three branches of student government.

Away from his desk in Graham Memorial, Wheless leads quite a diversified life. In addition to being a proficient piano player, he has also preserved his interest in debating. Majoring in political science, Wheless plans to enter the North Carolina Law School in the fall.

Summer Work

In case you are wondering how Dwight Wheless spends his summer months, you will probably be surprised to learn that he is a traveling Bible salesman in Indiana.

Besides Wheless, other candidates running on the Student Party ticket this coming Tuesday are Mike Lawler vice-president, Lindsay Raiford Secretary, and Jimmy Weeks treasurer.

NSA And Student Government

Editor's Note: The following answers by the candidates for The National Student Association are in reply to the editor's question: What should be NSA's relationship with individual student governments?

NSA depends on the existence of democratic student governments, for, if it is to speak for student opinion, it must have a wide-spread democratic basis. In effect, student governments are sovereign in the NSA. Part of the function of the NSA is to allow student governments mutually to seek ways of making student government a dynamic concept.

—BILL IMES (U.P.)

Realizing that the individual student government is the articulator of the collective thought of a university, the National Students Association should encourage these governments to become ever more aware of their responsibilities in the educational act, and communicate to them a sense of purpose aimed at enriching the experience of every member of their constituencies.

—JOE MASI (U.P.)

NSA must be the servant, not the master of individual student governments. Thus, it should make every effort to contribute to the solution of problems commonly faced by student governments. A basic criticism of NSA is that it has become too concerned with trying to formulate worldwide policies with the result that problems of more immediate concern to the campuses are not given sufficient attention. If there is a conflict between student body opinion and NSA policies, student officials, must disregard the latter, however much they may personally agree with them.

—MACK ARMSTRONG (U.P.)

NSA is a confederation of student governments. Then, the relationship between NSA and the student governments is determined by what the student governments want it to be.

I believe that the relationship should be one of education and aid to the student governments. The education should be carried out through NSA sponsored conferences and mailings so that the student governments as represented at the NSA will be prepared to consider and act on the issues that they will be facing.

NSA must also work with student governments so that they will be in better position to serve the students. NSA should also work for the expansion of its direct aid to students, such as low cost travel, paperback text books, and insurance for students.

—BILL STRAUGHN (S.P.)

NSA should maintain a reciprocal relationship with individual student governments. I nthe first place it must draw its course of action from the will of individual student bodies.

On the other hand, the Association should reciprocate by informing the various campuses of its stand on national and international issues. We are seeking to attain better communications between American students and their forum the National Student Association.

—CHARLES HEATHERLY (U.P.)

Student Government should remain the instrument through which NSA programs are implemented. Student Government should initiate discussion in appropriate campus organs concerning the important issues facing the American student community. The position of the Carolina student on given issues as reflected by the Student Legislature or in a campus referendum should be communicated to the national office of USNSA by Student Government.

Student Government should inform the campus of positions taken by the National Student Congress and present fairly the reasons for these positions. In addition, if the Student Government dissents on a certain decision, it should explain its reasons for doing so.

—HANK PATTERSON (S.P.)

NSA owes its existence and sustenance to the individual student governments for which it speaks. When considering any measure, both the executive committee and the Congress should always bear in mind the opinions of its constituents, the college students of the United States.

When a few people are invested with large amounts of power to control policy and opinion, it becomes easy for them to forget those whom they represent. This must not be the case of NSA, for the image of the American college student is at stake, and NSA can improve this image if only it be presented accurately. NSA should never lose touch with its member schools; rather, they should be an integral, functioning influence in all NSA activity.

—DICK AKERS (S.P.)

NSA's Stand On International And National Issues

As students in the leader of the free countries of the world, we should be very much concerned with both national and international issues. For this reason, I feel that the students of America should voice their opinions and beliefs on such topics. NSA provides the proper forum for this.

Role of NSA

The role of NSA, I feel is to act as a representative voice of student opinion in this country. On the national level it is a student forum which takes a stand on contemporary controversies. Locally it provides coordination and assistance to student government.

In the past delegates have been more or less arbitrarily selected. For the first time, they will be selected by the student body in the general election thus attaining greater representation of student feeling.

—CHARLES HEATHERLY (U.P.)

Editor's Note: Candidate Heatherly was unable to hand in replies to the previous questions concerning NSA, therefore we are printing his answers today.

Due to unforeseen circumstances, Bill Harriss (S.P.) was unable to hand in an answer.

Tomorrow the candidates will answer the question: How would you vote on integration, federal aid to education and "In Loco Parentis?"

Golden Gloves

Candidates' Answers

In tomorrow's issue presidential candidates Dwight Wheless and Inman Allen will comment on two important fraternity issues—discriminatory clauses and the 80 per cent rule. We have asked both candidates to outline their stands on these two questions and indicate what action they will take.

We hope the candidates will forego the usual political side-stepping and take firm positions, not only on what they themselves believe, but on what each proposes to do in support of his belief if he is elected

Hopefully, both candidates will present effective measures to eliminate both: the 80 per cent rule because it impresses an unfair restriction on fraternities as groups, and discriminatory clauses because they have no place in any setting, least of all in a university.

We have also asked the candidates to give some evidence that their proposals for improving dormitory social and study conditions will work. Both sound good on paper, but the important question is which will produce results—if either. The candidates will also give their views on the problem of segregation, both locally and nationally. Each has been asked to tell the campus what specific action his administration would take in this area, if any.

Athletic emphasis—or de-emphasis—will also be discussed by the two candidates, as well as other issues that need to be pulled from under wraps and commented upon.

Some of the questions are critical. The Carolina student body has been inactive on them too long.

It would be encouraging to see a candidate go into office committed to decisive action on the questions that have real effect on the campus, now and for some time to come.

Minority Voting

Each year, about one-third of the student body turns out to cast votes in spring elections. Of this one-third, perhaps 15 per cent bother to vote because of a real interest in who will run student government.

The remaining percentage votes because of special interest—fraternity prestige, to do a favor for a friend—or merely because a ballot box is convenient.

After the ballots are counted, and student government officials have been elected by one-third of the student body, the remaining two-thirds join together in a yelping chorus of gripes and charges of do-nothingness.

Yet, according to a spot survey, less than 18 per cent of the student population knows enough about student government and its functions to name more than two members of the Student Legislature. This is a clear indication that most of the complaints stem from almost complete ignorance of student government.

In the coming year, student government will play an important part in shaping policies that will have an effect, great or small, on almost every student here. Some of these policies will be hare-brained, ill-conceived, trival and downright asinine.

Others, like judicial activity, budget appropriations, fraternity and dormitory regulations, publications, action on a student union, and numerous recommendations on academics, athletics, and so forth, will have broad and important effects.

The offices that will be filled Tuesday are important ones. They should not be filled by only one-third of the student body.

University Responsibility

Sit-ins at the University of Chicago in response of the University's admission of racial discrimination in off-campus housing have posed several moral and practical problems not easily dealt with. One thing is clear, however: a great urban university, if it wishes to remain great and urban, cannot be oblivious to the crisis facing most of our urban areas. A corollary to this proposition is that what the university does in response to that crisis should be a matter of public knowledge and concern.

The University of Chicago is not alone with its problem. Columbia University, New York University, and the University of Pennsylvania, among others, are involved in similar programs of neighborhood reconstruction. These institutions must not lose sight of the fact that segregation of Negroes has been the cause of many of the problems our cities now have.

The problem is national and calls for a national solution. A federal department of urban affairs might have been able to cope with the situation effectively, but failing that, the federal government should act with whatever means are at its disposal to deal with the crisis that past neglect has caused.

Students Urged To Act!!

As most students must know by this time, both the Varsity and the Carolina Theaters are completely integrated. This action — whether or not one approves in the limited sense of who one will sit next to; rather, I mean "effect" in a more generalized sense. Since we as students are affected by this action, it might be appropriate to ask ourselves a few questions.

Should you as a student take action? What avenues of action should be open for you as a student? What is the function of a university in regard to action of this type? And finally, what is the role of a student government in this type of action?

For the moment I would like to discuss one of the questions that I threw out, "what is the role of a student government in this type of action?" Should they dodge issues . . . as has been the case in the past . . . or how about passing resolutions that have no meaning . . . such as the recent one on disarmament, or how about trying to become an effective, dynamic force in the United States by joining with interest people through-out the country in making definite statements of policy and by finding out and informing the students of alternatives on specific issues? Why doesn't the student government actively accept the challenge handed it and take ACTION.

Ask Ike

Right now the universities of the world have the greatest potential of any single body for shaping the policies of nations. If you don't believe that ask Mr. Eisenhower about Japan; ask Mr. Rhee about Korea; or ask the students of Turkey, Mexico, and France about student action. Some students are being heard in America: in California . . . all over the South . . . . some even in Chapel Hill. In spite of these isolated incidents of American student action no university in this country has come out in support of, say recognition of Red China, or the Sohn Plan to disarm.

My proposal is this: just because the presidents, chancellors, and faculties, (and we must include our own two Bills), of universities do not through their positions actively support measures that could alter U. S. foreign policy is no reason for students of these same institutions to dodge the issues and bury their heads in the same sand with the professors and presidents.

Perhaps one of the biggest obstacles to overcome is the idea that college students don't know what they are talking about. When we are expected to know what we're talking about hasn't been cleared up yet. Is it the day after graduation . . . after we're twenty-one . . . when we have had military service? Of course this is completely absurd! We all know of people out of college, over twenty-one, with military experience who don't know which way is up.

Install Gum Ball Machine?

Be that as it may, there is a certain amount of criticism to be expected from our elders who, ironically, are often les sinformed than we. This criticism should not deter student action . . . it should spur us on rather than provide an excuse for playing ostrich. And if the criticism is valid, as some will undoubtedly be, then let's see to it that we inform ourselves more: inform ourselves to the level that we know precisely what we advocate and what the implications of our arguments are.

Is there enough sand to go around? If the college administrators occupy most American sand perhaps, it would be unwise for students to crowd in there with them. Why not get someone in student government who is concerned with more important things than installing a gum-ball machine beneath Davie Poplar? Why not, for example, come out against HUAC, or "right-to-work laws," or capital punishment? Not only would that shake up some of the administrators but it might get some students interested in what is going on in the world. Then the student government could ask the professors to indorse its policy. Then the University of North Carolina would be accepting her responsibilities to educate her students, to provide an academic atmosphere in the state, and to enlighten the leaders of this country as to the thoughts of the "future leaders" of the world.

The sky is the limit. If you want your student government to be what Messrs. Wheless and Allen want, then make a personal reappraisal. On the other hand, if you can see beyond Silent Sam, if you have something to say and want to be heard, if you feel your responsibility as a student-citizen-human, if this is you . . . then by all means let's not "rot in apathy", let's not let Big Fraternity Court ideas supercede important issues . . let's do become TCTIVE!!! Let's talk, argue, write, study, picket, demonstrate, join, abstain, swear . . . let's pledge ourselves to the progress of academic ideals and humanitarian goals through the institution that has the most latent power in the World . . . the University.

—DAVID CREEK

Commenting Editorially

The current political arguments that pick on people rather than issues have brought to a head what is sometimes not too obvious: Namely that too many people talk and write before they think.

Should one take seriously the libelous, vitriolic, abusive, irresponsible writings that one sees all too often on the right side of editorial page?

The answer, of course, is no. Since it is the present editorial policy to print as much campus opinion as possible, DTH readers are subjected to a constant stream of letters from childish, selfish minds. The fault, naturally, lies with these students (and I use the term loosely) who feel compelled to shock and offend in the public eye.

If these meddlingers would use their excess energies playing Ping-pong, pool, "snake" on your best friend or maybe even doing a little studying, the DTH and the campus would be a lot better off.

—MIKE ROBINSON

About Letters

The Daily Tar Heel invites readers to use it for expressions of opinion on current topics regardless of viewpoint. Letters must be signed, contain a verifiable address, and be free of libelous material.

Brevity and legibility increase the chance of publication. Lengthy letters may be edited or emitted. Absolutely none will be returned.

Field Thinks Green Is Great

Attention juniors! Once again student government elections are upon us. As always we are faced with the perennial problem of attempting to choose the best candidates for their respective positions. This year you juniors are very fortunate as Bruce Green helps to partially solve this problem for you. By far he is THE candidate for Senior class Vice-President. Doubt my word? Well, let's look at the facts.

In the first place, Bruce, unlike some other candidates has something to say. Furthermore he conscientiously attempts to carry out his programs. This was clearly evident in his tenure as Sophomore class President.

You juniors surely remember Bruce's efforts as they were the first of their kind by a class officer other than a junior or a senior. Working hard with campus entertainment, the campus chest, and the Carolina Symposium, plus his other governmental responsibilities, Bruce proved that he was a responsible class officer, working with and for his fellow students.

Upon hearing Bruce speak, it becomes obvious that, to him, the Vice-Presidency of the Senior class is not the figurehead office that many others interpret it to be. This becomes self evident when Bruce presents his proposed platform. Compare his platform with other candidates, if they have one. Judge Bruce's sincerity and motivation against that of his opponents. Again, he has that little extra quality to offer. Bruce Green has the internal fortitude to carry out his ideas. This is what you need and want in a class officer.

Besides his governmental qualifications, Bruce is a well rounded individual interested in all phases of campus life. Among his distinguished accomplishments are: member of the Arnold Air Society, an organization of outstanding AFROTC Cadets; member of the Scabbard and Blade, composed of outstanding AFROTC Cadets and Midshipmen; and an officer of the Kappa Sigma Fraternity. Of couse, his accomplishments on the athletic field have been shown by his fine records on both the football and lacrosse teams. In addition to all of his outside activities, Bruce's academic average is still way above average. Here is truly a remarkable young man.

In closing I ask all juniors to seriously evaluate the qualifications of the candidates for class officers. I know that after doing this you will see that there is only one person for the office of Senior class Vice-President; and that person is — Bruce Green.

"The funds for such a venture could easily be taken from the present DTH surplus without the necessity of Student Legislature appropriating any additional funds.

"These are just a few of the ideas which may help the Daily Tar Heel be a good college daily. The DTH at one time was one of the best college dailies in America; experienced leadership with fresh ideas will make it one again."

Zoologist Receives $97,000 Grant

Professor Maurice Whittinghill of the Department of Zoology of the University of North Carolina has been awarded a research grant amounting to $97,031 by the National Institutes of Health of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, for a five-year study of the genetic effect of irradiation on future generations of human beings.

During the tenure of the grant Dr. Whittinghill will extend previous investigations made on the subject. For several years the zoology professor, under a contract with the Atomic Energy Commission, worked with radiation effect on fruit flies as a preliminary contribution to the better understanding of what radiation exposure might do to humans.

The UNC zoologist-researcher has been working in the project since before the first atomic bomb was dropped witout warning on Hiroshima. His first research in radiation effect was performed when he was a post-graduate fellow at California Institute of Technology 25 years ago.

Expressed in scientific jargon the title of Dr. Whittinghill's new Institute of Health study is "The Genetics of Spontaneous and Induced Crossing Over." Genes, the determining factors in heredity are carried by Chromosomes found in the cells of all living species. "Crossing over" refers to recombination genes which occur during the reproductive process. Called "cross-overs," these genes are responsible for transferring mixed characteristics from parents to offspring.

Deformities, or mutation, which sometimes occur as a result of radiation exposure will be studied during the five-year research.

History Indicates Democracy–JFK

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI) — President Kennedy told the largest face-to-face audience of his career Friday that the great currents of history are carrying the world away from communism and towad democracy and freedom.

He called for American "innovation and daring" to meet world problems and predicted that with greater knowledge mankind "will irresistably burst the bonds of communism and communist ideology." He pictured world communism as suffering from acute internal difficulties.

The Chief Executive spoke in the packed football stadium of the University of California which was celebrating ts 94th annual Charter Day.

University officials estimated the crowd at 88,000. The stadium seats were filled and thousands of persons jammed the playing field.

Kennedy hailed the prospect of Soviet - American cooperation in space as a development that could benefit peoples of all nations and lead to collaboration in other areas of learning.

"It offers us an area," he said, "in which the stale, sterile dogmas of the cold war can be left literally a quarter of a million miles behind.

He warned however that the United States must reject "oversimplified theories of international life — the theory that American power is unlimted or that the American mission is to remake the world in the American image."

Must Seize Vision

Kennedy said that "we must seize the vision of a free and diverse world — and shape our policies to speed progress of a flexible world order."

Cooperation in space, he said, "would remind us on both sides that knowledge, not hate, is the pass key to the future — that knowledge transcends national antagonisms — that it speaks a universal language — that it is the possession not of a single class, a single nation or a single ideology, but of all mankind."

Kennedy flew here from Washington aboard his jet plane for a four-hour visit that included the charter day ceremonies and inspection of the university's radiation laboratory. He was accompanied by his brother, Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy, who went directly on to southern California.

The President was greeted at Alameda Naval Air Station and accompanied to the university by Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown of California and Chairman Edwin Pauley of the university's board of regents.

Cancellation Of Contracts Is Asked

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Stuart Symington said Friday the government still is buying materials for its already "excessive" strategic stockpile under proviously negotiated contracts. He said the contracts should be cancelled.

But the Missouri Democrat, head of a Senate investigation opening soon on the multi-billion stockpile, said he doubted that the government could get out of these firm commitments.

Symington said the government had spent $6.6 billion to buy strategic materials for three separate stockpiles. He said this was $3.4 billion more than would be needed in case of war.

President Kennedy has said the stockpile, whose current market value is $7.7 billion, is astonishingly large. He called it a potential source of unconscionable profits. Symington said purchases of all but three of the 76 strategic materials in the stockpile equaled or exceeded maximum goals.

said the Student Government offered the means whereby cliques and differences between students could be dissolved. "Student Government offers personal contact," he said. McDevitt also proposed an advisor system for the president of the student body so that he could keep aware of the needs of different factions and could make fair decisions.

The SP vice-presidential candidate, Mike Lawler, stressed his party's planks in the area of academic affairs. "More experienced instructors and professors should be moved down to teach undergraduates," he said. "Graduate instructors in such courses as foreign languages and English just aren't experienced enough. The Carolina Forum should be reorganized so that it can plan a year in advance. Dorm libraries and dorm social facilities should be established or improved, as the case may be."

In Every Room

Both parties stressed the need for the individual student to make his voice heard in the workings of Student Government. "Student Government does not exist only in Graham Memorial," Wheless explained. "It is in every room on campus. Students are student government. Every one on campus should be given an equal chance to serve.

"Student government is now being challenged in two areas: academic requirements, and the administration. And you mean which administration I'M talking about. Student government must deal firmly. It must be respectful, but it must also be respected."

Allen, the UP choice, warned those present, who mainly represented dorms, not to vote for or against a man mainly because he was or was not in a fraternity. "If you continually vote SP because you thing the SP represents you, then the split between fraternities and dorms will become wider and wider.

"Student government has something for people everywhere: I think that the Student Government should publish a weekly column in the DTH, so that the campus will know what it is really doing! The challenge facing Student Government now is to bring the campus back together."

Also present were the candidates for secretary and treasurer for both parties, Lindsay Raiford and Jimmy Weeks for the SP and Judy Clark and Bill Criswell for UP.

Statistics Lecture Set For Monday

"The Design of Experiments for Finding Variance Components" will be the subject of a lecture Monday by Professor R. L. Anderson of the North Carolina State College Department of Experimental Statistics and the Consolidated University Institute of Statistics. The subject has recently taken on widespread importance, with an active group of investigators in several centers working on it.

Applications

The applications in view have been chiefly in agriculture and other biological fields, but industrial and chemical applications also appear likely.

Professor Anderson's research has dealt with numerous problems both of applied and of basic theoretical statistics. He is the author of some 22 published scientific contributions, beginning with his doctoral thesis of 1942 at Iowa State College, in which he introduced the circular serial correlation coefficent. In this field of observations serially correlated in time he has since published several other contributions.

Brussels Paper

In the area of variance components in which his Chapel Hill lecture is included, his publications include a paper presented at the Brussels International Statistical Congress of 1958 and now published by the International Statistical Institute in its report of the meeting. He is managing editor of the International Journal of Abstracts for Statistical Theory and Methods, and is on the editorial board for Psychometrika and other journals.

The colloquium Monday will be at 4:00 p.m. in 265 Phillips Hall, and is open to all interested.

Frondizi Forms New Cabinet

BUENOS AIRES (UPI) — President Arturo Frondizi announced Friday night that he has formed a new cabinet.

The president's announcement followed disclosure that ex-President Pedro Aramburu, one of the nation's most respected statesmen, had pledged to cooperate with Frondizi in solving the political crisis sparked by last Sunday's election victories by followers of ousted dictator Juan D. Peron.

In Mexico City, Argentine Ambassador Gen. Julian Garcia said the new cabinet was comprised of political independents. None of the new ministers are from the ranks of the established political parties, he said.

Frondizi's announcement ended, at least for the moment, the political crisis that has rocked Argentina in the past five days.

The successful formation of a new government represented perhaps Frondizi's greatest political victory in his trouble ridden four years in office.

Aramburu's pledge of support was credited with having played an important role in the formation of the new cabinet. The army was reported to have given Frondizi until next Monday to form a coalition government, or resign.

Aramburu said he had accepted Frondizi's appeal to aid in solving the political crisis but added that Frondizi had given him time—"perhaps a week"—for what he described as "necessary consultations."

Plane Search Called Off

CLARK AFB, Philippines (UPI) — The Air Force Friday abandoned its massive search for the chartered Flying Tiger airliner which vanished over the Pacific wth 107 persons aboard eight days ago. All are officially presumed dead.

Aboard the plan were 93 jungle-trained U. S. soldiers en route to South Viet Nam to bolster that country's fight against Communist infiltration. There were 11 crew members, including 4 women, and 3 Vietnamese soldiers.

End of the search that covered hundreds of thousands of square miles of the southwest Pacific and scores of planes and ships was announced by Maj. Gen. Theodore R. Milton.

Machine-Teaching Topic Of Lecture

A public lecture under the sponsorship of the Academic Year Institute and the Department of Physics will be presented here Monday night with Cornell professor Jay Orear as speaker.

Dr. Orear will speak on the topic "Science Teaching Using Self-Instructional Techniques" in room 215 Phillips Hall, at 8:30 p.m.

Dr. Orear will describe the operation and results of a radical educational experiment he has been conducting at Cornell. His experiments there have utilzed the type of programmed instruction, or "machine-teching," now being heatedly debated in educational circles.

This type of instruction, first proposed by the distinguished psychologist B. F. Skinner a few years ago, is designed to enable a student to teach himself. It enables the student to progress at his own rate, without attempts at formal classroom insruction.

A small experimental group of students taking general physics at Cornell were engaged during the fall semester in Dr. Orear's specially designed course. The students attended no regular classes but were completely dependent on the new methods in learning physics.

Dr. Orear is the author of several magazine articles dealing with the subject of disarmament and detection of nuclear weapons tests.

The Cornell professor has been on the faculty of Columbia University and the staff of the Radiation Laboratory at the University of California. He is a former student of Enrico Fermi. He is the author or co-author of two textbooks, and has published about 30 research papers in scientific journals.

Tuesday, March 27, at 4 p.m. he will speak in 265 Phillips Hall at the UNC Physics Colloquium. His subject will be "Recent Developments in High Energy Physics." Tea will be served in the building lounge at 3:40 p.m.

EDUCATIONAL TV: ITS CAUSE AND CURE

A great deal of nonsense has been written about educational television. Following is my contribution:

It has been said that television allots no desirable viewing hours to educational and intellectual programs. This is simply not so. For instance, you can see "The Kant and Hegel Hour" every day at 4 a.m. This excellent show is followed at 5 a.m. by "Kierkegaard Can Be Fun." For such lazy scamps as lie abed beyond that hour, there is a splendid program on Sunday mornings at 7:15 called "Birds of Minnesota, Except Duluth."

So much for the myth that TV gives no prime time to educational programs. Now let us deflate another canard: that TV is not eager to inject intellectual content in all its programs.

If you have sat, as I have sat, with a television planning board, you would know that the opposite is true. I was privileged recently to witness a meeting of two of TV's topmost program developers—both named Binkie Tattersall.

"Binkie," said Binkie to Binkie, "if there is one thing I am bound and determined, it's that we're going to have intellectual content in next season's programs."

"Right!" replied Binkie. "So let us put on our thinking caps and go to work."

"I forgot my thinking cap in Westport," said Binkie, "but I have a better notion: let us light a Marlboro."

"But of course!" cried Binkie. "Because the best way to think is to settle back and get comfortable, and what is the cigarette that lets you settle back and get comfortable?"

"I said Marlboro," answered Binkie. "Weren't you listening?"

"A full-flavored smoke is Marlboro," declared Binkie.

"Rich tobacco, pure white filter, a choice of pack or box. What is better than a Marlboro?"

"A Marlboro and a match," replied Binkie. "Got one?"

Binkie had, and so they lit their good Marlboros and settled back and got comfortable and proceeded to cerebrate.

"First of all," said Binkie, "we are going to avoid all the old clichés. We will have no domestic comedies, no westerns, no private eyes, no deep sea divers, no doctors, and no lawyers."

"Right!" said Binkie. "Something offbeat."

"That's the word—offbeat," said Binkie.

They smoked and cerebrated.

"You know," said Binkie, "there has never been a series about the Coast and Geodetic Survey."

"Or about glass blowers," said Binkie.

They fell into a long, torpid silence.

"You know," said Binkie, "there's really nothing wrong with a cliché situation—provided, of course, it's offbeat."

"Right!" said Binkie. "So let's say we do a series about a guy who's a family man with a whole bunch of lovable kids who play merry pranks on him."

"Yeah, and he's also a cowboy," said Binkie

"And a deep sea diver," said Binkie.

"With a law degree," said Binkie.

"Plus an M.D.," said Binkie.

"And he runs a detective agency," said Binkie.

"Binkie," said Binkie to Binkie, "we've done it again!"

They shook hands silently, not trusting themselves to speak, and lit Marlboros and settled back to relax, for Marlboro is a cigarette not only for cerebration, but for settling back with—in fact, for all occasions and conditions, all times and climes, all seasons and reasons, all men and women. © 1962 Max Shulman

DUPREE'S

Sportscope

NEW YORK — There is a war on in basketball and collegiate football, according to the March 26th issue of Sports Illustrated, and it threatens to bring anarchy to court and field. Officiating is being persistently attacked, says the magazine, and the strife is driving the good referees out and contributing to the worsening of an already bad situation.

Referees in these two sports are being accused of prejudiced and incompetent performance, Sports Illustrated says, and "There is ample evidence that some officials are guilty as charged." But, the article points out, there is equal evidence that the disruptive conduct of coaches, players and fans and "a distressing decline in athletic morality" are just as responsible for the lowering of the general level of officiating.

The article cites instances of lawlessness caused by poor officials, coaches, players and crowds and describes them as symptomatic of "public loss of faith in officiating and a major break in relations between coaches and officials."

The officials recognize the crisis, says Sports Illustrated, but "they seem as blind to its real nature as men describing the elephant they have explored only by fingertip."

The coaches' complaints are listed as:

1. Officials are too old and too fat. They are guessing on plays they can no longer keep up with.

2. Officials are "homers" — i.e., less likely to bear witness against the sons of the home team.

3. Officials are either picky and whistle-prone, or they are lax and allow anything short of the use of firearms; they lack uniform standards.

4. Officials tend to tighten up on crucial plays.

The officials respond with their own answers to the criticisms thus:

1. Coaches denounce officials only to cover up their own lack of success.

2. Officials' mistakes, though human and predictable, are exploited and caricatured in the press.

3. The games have changed in the direction of deliberate viciousness. In the new code it is a crime to foul only if you are caught. Officials alone cannot cope with this.

4. Spectators have become intolerant — and intolerable.

5. The "blackball" allows college coaches to intimidate officials through their jobs.

6. The pay isn't worth the abuse and anguish brought on by points 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5.

Problems of New Immorality

The points of criticism are all discussed in detail from both the coaches' and officials' points of view, and special note is taken of the difficulties produced by the change in ethics among players. In attempting to deal with this new immorality, Sports Illustrated points out, "The official is faced and must reckon with a breed that fouls deliberately, and sometimes maliciously, and seems to have the sanction of his superiors to do so. If he is not sanctioned, he is at least not discouraged."

Unsportsmanlike performance which would have been disgraceful in years past is now lauded by teammates, unchallenged or even defended by coaches. Willful bloodshed in football, and "elbow ethics" in basketball are accepted as the spirit of play. Veteran College Official Charley Eckman testifies that many of the misdemeanors are relatively harmless, but they are complemented by "more vicious fouling than I've ever seen. Five times this season," he says, "I have seen players undercut when they were going in for a layup, and you shouldn't see that many in a lifetime. You can get killed on the undercut."

Baseball May Have Answer

The beginning of the answer may be provided by major league baseball, says the article. That sport has managed to maintain discipline and to make money at the same time. Its owners refused to pander to the blood thirsts of the crowds, and "gave their umpires stature, authority and isolation. With the blessings of the people who hire them, these umpires will, for the sake of order, toss from a game the unruly $75,000 -a-year-man as quickly as they will the lowest-priced troublemaker. The spirit is remarkably amateur, but the effect is professional."

Efforts, Suggestions

Efforts are being made in many quarters to better the situation with the use of tests, schools, clinics and films. Other suggestions which have been offered, but have not inspired any action:

Big Ten Commissioner Bill Reed would have officials serve a 10-year apprenticeship.

Detroit's Jim Miller suggests a sixth official for football, one who could call downfield penalties (pass interference, clipping, etc.) from the press box; Pittsburgh's Tut Melman wants three officials for basketball; Kansas State Coach Tex Winter would have them call games from isolation booths.

Charley Eckman would like to see a corps of better-paid basketball referees, "traveling the country and increasing their consistency." He would also apply the three-second rule to defensive players to open up the middle "where 90% of your fouls are committed and all the fights start."

Officials unanimously recommend a national gag rule for coaches, elimination of the blackball, and "keeping of movie reviews on the amusement pages."

UNC Takes Second In Rifle Meet

The UNC varsity rifle team captured second place in the ACC championships held at Wake Forest recently. The Tar Heel team was composed of three shooters from the Air Force ROTC and one from the Naval ROTC.

Clemson won the meet with a point total of 1125 out of a possible 1200. UNC's second place total was 1115. Maryland was third with 1113.

Leigh Beadle of UNC's AFROTC unit broke the open world record earlier this season by two points with 296 out of a possible 400, was the individual winner in the ACC meet. He set a new conference record with 291 out of 300.

Gators Top UNC Baseballers, 3-1

Florida's Gators defeated UNC, 3-1, at Gainesville Thursday to give the two teams a split in their two game series. North Carolina won Wednesday's game, 13-9.

Sophomore Art Ondich pitched five hit ball for the home team in posting his first collegiate baseball victory. Three of the hits off Ondich were singles by UNC's sophomore shortstop Jim Speight.

Tar Heel hurleds Bob Wacker and Spence Willard yielded only five hits to the Floridians, but wildness on Wacker's part in the initial inning started the Gators on their way.

Tom Moore and Don Ringgold were walked by the Tar Heel pitcher and advanced to second and third on a wild pitch. Bernie Haskins then singled to drive in both runners.

Haskins also drove in the final Florida marker. After Ringgold had walked, stole second and went to third on an infield out, Haskins brought him home with a perfect squeeze bunt.

UNC scored its lone run in the eighth when Jim Brown tripled and came home on an error.

The Tar Heels play Georgia Southern this afternoon in Statesboro, Ga., and return home for a contest with Ithaca Monday.

St. Johns' and Dayton Meet In NIT Championship Contest

By NORMAN MILLER

NEW YORK (UPI) — Dayton's towering Flyers were 3-point favorites Friday to wipe out 12 years of frustration for their coach by beating St. John's Saturday afternoon in the final of the National Invitational Basketball Tournament.

The championship game of the 25th NIT will be televised nationally by NBC, starting at 4p.m. Est. Because the game will be televised locally, too, the crowd at Madison Square Garden was not expected to exceed 15,000.

Many who have followed the NIT down through the years say this is the best of the 10 Dayton teams coach Tom Blackburn has brought to the tournament since 1951. To Blackburn's nagging disappointment, 5 of those teams reached the final round, only to lose out.

St. John's is the only school to have won the NIT three times. Teams coached by Joe Lapchick won in 1943, 1944 and 1959. This year's is a typically well-coached Lapchick team but lacks reserve strength and will concede height to Dayton.

Picked Other's Team

Oddly, in the pre-tournament forecasting, Lapchick and Blackburn each picked the other's team to wind up on top. And both gloomily reiterated their predictions on the eve of the title game.

Said Blackburn: "Here we are again. It looks like the broken record has stuck. I said last week St. John's would win and I still say so."

Said Lapchick: "I think Tom has a winner this year. Dayton has too much size, too much power and too much class for us."

Blackburn scoffed, however, at the notion that the failures of past Dayton teams might instill a defeatist complex in his present squad.

"Heck, these guys were kids in short pants when some of my other teams lost in the NIT," he said. "That past history doesn't bother them; it just bothers the coach."

Flyers Have Height

This season's Dayton team is a well-balanced unit with plenty of height up front in 6-foot-10 Bill Chmielewski, 6-7 Harold Scheen and 6-6 Garry Roggenburk, and two standout backcourt men in the Hatten brothers, Gordon and Tom. The Flyers have a capable man in 6-3 Stan Greenberg. Dayton averaged 90 points in its victories over Wichita, Houston and Loyola of Chicago.

There should be an interesting duel in the pivot between Chmielewski and 6-foot-10 Leroy Ellis of St. John's. Chmielewski has scored 83 points in 3 tourney games; Ellis scored 29 points in each game against Holy Cross and Duquesne.

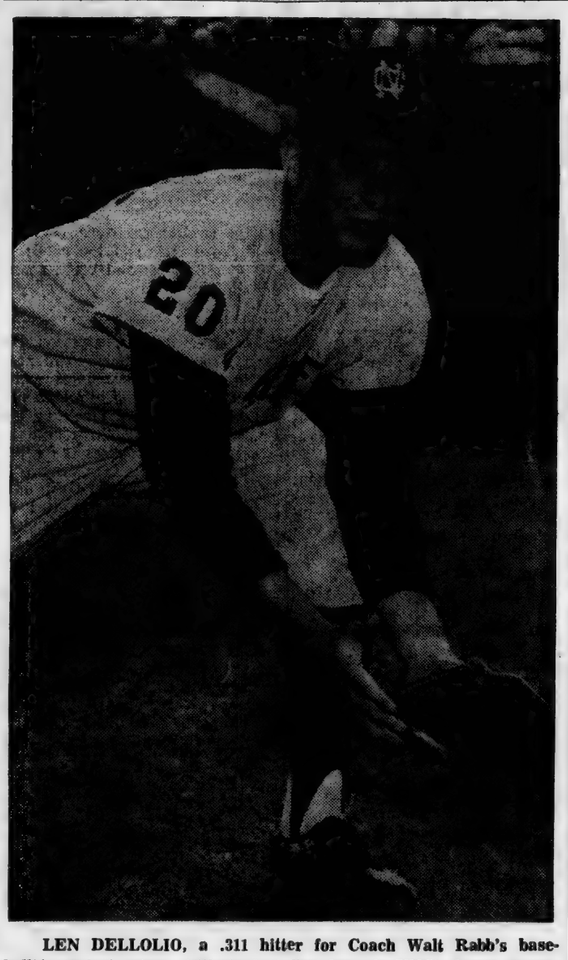
"This is the first game in which Ellis will be stacked up against a center who could nullify him," Lapchick said.

The big-man who gaints the upper hand in this title game could win the NIT's most valuable player award. Besides Chmielewski and Ellis, the leading candidates so far appeared to be Gordon Hatton of the Flyers and Kevin Loughery of St. John's.

Lapchick agreed that "we're in trouble in our man-to-man matchups." Aside from center, the Redmen will be outreached at each starting position. Willie Hall 6-4 will yield 3 inches to Scheen; Loughery will concede 3 inches to Roggenburk; Don Burks 2 inches to Gordon Hatton, and Ivan Kovac 3 inches to Tim Hatton.

St. John's playing in its 16th NIT and fifth final, has a 21-4 season record; Dayton is 23-6.

In the third-place consolation game that will precede the final, Duquesne meets Loyola.



LEN DELLOLIO, a .311 hitter for Coach Walt Rabb's baseball team last season, will start at first base in UNC's home opener Monday with Ithaca. "Woogie" collected four doubles, three homers and 18 RBI's and made only two errors in 210 chances last spring. The Tar Heel baseball team is currently on its annual trip south. They split two games with Florida, played Vanderbilt Friday, and wind up the trip against Georgia Southern this afternoon.

Ohio State Crushes Wake, 84-68; Jerry Lucas Injured

The brilliant Buckeyes of Ohio State University, relentlessly pursuing their drive to the national championship, brutally crushed Wake Forest last night, 84-68 in the opening game of the NCAA basketball playoffs at Louisville, Kentucky.

The victory, played before 18,274 screaming fans in Louisville's Freedom Hall, catapulted coach Fred Taylor's club into the playoff finals for a record third consecutive year. The Buckeyes will meet the winner of last night's Cincinnati - UCLA semi-final battle, tonight at 9:00 for the championship.

Wake kept it close for ten minutes but when Ohio State's tremendous one-two punch of Jerry Lucas and John Havlicek scored succesive baskets with 9:21 remaining in the first half, the Bucks pulled into an eight-point lead they never relinquished.

Ohio State led by 12 at the half, 46-34, and the Deacons never got closer than eight points in the latter period.

Havlicek led the Buckeyes with 25 points, and with Lucas, completely dominated the boards as the two — time and again — got the tip-in off a missed shot. Lucas, the three-time All-American, netted 19 points before leaving the game with 6 minutes left, after a knee injury. Len Chappell paced Wake with 27.

UNC Won National Title Five Years Ago

Yesterday was the fifth anniversary of the most remembered athletic conquest in North Carolina history. UNC's Fabulous Tar Heels of 1957 captured the NCAA basketball championship on March 23 by defeating Kansas 54-53 in a thrilling triple overtime battle.

Five years ago today the headline "Tar Heels Are National Champions" appeared in the Daily Tar Heel while countless Carolina students nursed victory celebration hangovers.

All-American Lennie Rosenbluth and Pete Brennan, Tommy Kearns, Bob Cunningham, Joe Quigg, Bob Young, and Danny Lotz played in that memorable contest. Other members of the 1957 champs were Roy Searcy, Gerhrmann Holland and Ken Rosemond, now UNC frosh coach.

Happy Anniversary, champs.

UNC Golfers Beat Mich. State, 27-3

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina's golf team registered its third straight dual meet victory yesterday afternoon, as the Tar Heel hurlers Bob Wacker Michigan State, 27-3 on Finley Golf Course.

Coach Ed Kenney's linksmen won six of the seven individual matches in addition to copping all best ball competition, while keeping their undefeated mark intact.

Pete Green, Jere Ayers, and George Murphy all fired an even-par 72 for Carolina to tie for medalist honors. Green, senior co-captain and All-American from Franklin, Mich., downed Al Badger in the feature match of the day, 3-0, while sophomore Ayers and Murphy, both playing in the third foursome, beat their oppponents by like scores.

Garry Barrett and John Overgarde were the only other pointmakers for Michigan State. Barrett lost to UNC's Jay Harris, 2½-½ while Overgarde deadlocked Sam McNairy, 1½-1½.

For Carolina, which meets Michigan State again this afternoon at 1:30, Hill and Abe Andes had 73, while Harris carded a 74 and McNairy, an 80.

The Tar Heels took the best ball activity, 8½-½ with only Hill and Andes, playing in the second foursome, failing to post a shutout.

Touts Tap Phi Delts, 46-33, For Intramural Cage Title

By JOHN MONTAGUE

The Town Touts successfully throttled a second half Phi Delt rally and went on to whip the frat champs for the All-Campus Basketball Championship Thursday night, 46-33.

After a ragged first half by both teams which saw the Touts holding a 19-12 advantage, the Phi Delts caught fire early in the second stanza, outscoring their opponents 10-1 to knot the score at 20 all. This was as far as they were to go.

The Town crew showed a little spark of their own at this point, rolling up 8 consecutive markers to take a commanding 28-20 lead and sewing up the championship in the process.

The remainder of the game saw both squads hitting with considerably greater frequency, but the Phi Delts were unable to produce another rally and the 1961-62 Intramural cage season came to a close with the Town Touts at the top of the ladder.

The talented trio of John Hickey, Lennie Beck and Bob Watkins handled most of the point production for the champs, scoring a combined total of 34. Watkins netted 12 points to share game honors with the Phi Delts' Riley Pleasants, while Beck and Watkins each bucketed 11.

The Phi Delts were hampered somewhat by the first-half absence of their leading scorer, Jerry Evans, who paced his team to a 57-38 victory over the Phi Delt Loads in Wednesday night's Frat Finals. In that contest Evans had 16 points, Pleasants netted 15 and Billy Hubbard bagged 14. However, the Town Touts were definitely the champions Thursday night and you can't rub any of the glamour off their respectable 13-point triumph.

In a preliminary to the Tout's conquest, the Peacocks dumped the Dental School, 49-38, in the All-Grad finals. Eddie Burke scored 21 points to pave the way for the champions, while Herb Hawkes also was in double figures for the Peacocks with 13.

Danny Lotz led the Dental quint with 16 markers and Russ Owens added 13 points to the losing total.

Thursday night's roundball action was the winter sports finale in intramural circles. The spotlight now falls on the springs sports, with table tennis, bowling and soccer already underway.

Russian Visitors Talk And Twist During Carolina Visit

By LOUIS L. ROSENTHAL

The cause of "people-to-people relationships" was furthered last week, as 12 Russian students visited the UNC campus.

The residents of Battle-Vance-Pettigrew dormitory took tree of te visitorso into teir dorm for three days, and made them feel "like they were our own roomates."

Steve Lehrer, dorm president, and John Harrison, vice-president, began a series of meetings with dorm residents and the coordinators of the visit, Jim Roberts of the Political Science department, and Anne Queen, director of the YWCA, to let BVP house some of the Russians.

George Totitbadze, an art teacher, and one of Russia's better young artists; Valentin Kuzmenko, an aeronautical engineer; and Oleg Kockakidze, an architect, were selected for BVP, while nine others went to the PiKA and Beta houses.

When the visitors arrived, they were taken to the dormitory to meet other residents.

One of the Carolina students had a football, and a game was suggested. Although the Russians had never played the game, they picked it up quickly, and one even threw touchdown passes. Then one of the visitors wanted to play soccer with the football. Although Kockakidze spoke a little English, the students managed to talk by a mixture of sign language and slowly-spoken English.

Later Wednesday, the Russians attended a banquet at the Carolina Inn, a reception at the Greenfield home, and a meeting at the New Left Club.

Thursday, after breakfasting with several dorm residents the students met with Chancellor Aycock in his office.

They went to Durham, where Totibadze displayed his talents.

At a meeting with the Negro leaders of Durham, the artist penned sketches of the leaders, while they were discussing racial relations in the U. S.

Later during a tour of the Liggett and Myers Tobacco factory, Totibadze drew portarits of the pretty guides. All through their stay, whenever he saw a pretty girl, or someone he liked, he sketched him.

Back at the dorm, the students exchanged their nation's coins, cigarettes, vodka and other souvenirs. The Russians gave many of the residents various medals they had received in Russia.

Some of the boys in the dorm liked the Russian cigarettes better than their American ones, and all agreed the Rusian Vodka was better than the American.

Friday, their last day in North Carolina, the Russians talked with Governor Terry Sanford. They then toured the North Carolina State College School of design, gymnasium, and pool. They met with Chancellor John Caldwell of State College, and saw the State Art Museum.

At the request of members of Alpha Delta Pi Sorority, the Russians had dinner at the sorority house. After the meal the girls taught the visitors the "Twist." "Not five minutes after we had shown them the dance, they had picked it up," said one of the girls.

Ross Lavroff, a professional interpreter from New York, accompanied the Russians on the tour of the Eastern coast. He is an American citizen, who defected from Russia several years ago, although "some people Friday night got the impression that I was one of the Russians."

The three Russians staying at BVP and their hosts went down to the Rathskeller, to drink beer and toast each other to "long life, and everlasting friendship." The Russians also carved their names on the table, as many Carolina students have done.

As a climax to the busy week, the BVP residents gave a party in honor of their guests. Vodka was served, as president Lehrer toasted the visitors, and presented them with cigarette lighters inscribed, "Carolina."

The Russians also learned to "limbo" and Totibadze drew portraits of several residents.

After the party ended, early because the Russians left early Saturday morning, Lehrer commented, "we wish they could have spent more time with us. We enjoyed having them and wish they can come back. We tried to treat them as old friends, rather than new enemies."

Candidates for DTH Editor Offer Statements of Policy

Clotfelter And Wrye

The Daily Tar Heel should have its own press, said Chuck Wrye and Jim Clotfelter, Student Party endorsed candidates for DTH coeitors, yesterday.

With its own press the Tar Heel "would be a professional operation, setting and meeting its own deadlines, with its printshop workers and superintendents," said Wrye and Clotfelter.

"The Tar Heel could then become a truly 'student-run' operation," they said.

Down Payment

Wrye and Clotfelter pointed out that the newspaper would return more than $7,000 to the Student Legislature this spring. "This money might be used as a down payment on a press," they said.

"The initial expenditure would not have to be too great," they said. "Over a period of years the press would save the Tar Heel and the students a considerable amount of money.

"The campus would get a better newspaper at less cost," said Wrye and Clotfelter.

Stories Coevered

The co-editor candidates said a DTH press "would mean that all 'late stories' which are now impossible to cover—political conventions, elections, night speeches—could be reported.

"The shop workers with a Tar Heel press would be working solely on te DTH, not having to share their time with the Chapel Hill Weekly, as is presently the case,"

I have been asked, and rightfully so, to explain myself. It would be much easier to do this if specific questions were asked, but since this is such an imperfect medium I will have to guess the nature of your questions.

As far as intergration is concerned I believe that it is wrong to judge a man by the color of his skin. However, I also believe in the private ownershiip of property. There is actually not much conflict here. All public institutions—those which are supported by taxes—should be on a race free basis. Whether a private instiut-tion should be integrated or segregated is a question faced by the owner of that institution. And, anyone has the right to peaceably picket.

Not Bircher

As it may or may not be readily inferred by the previous statement, I am an economic conservative. I am a strong advocate of the free enterprise system. I am not a John Bircher nor am I a supporter of HUAC.

HUAC, while having admirable ends, does much more harm to American Democracy than good. This is easily seen in its ability to alienate university students as well as other people who believe in the freedom of speech. It is immediately recognized that communists are a threat to our society and should be squelched at every opportunity. Instead of doing

Ernest Stepp

The following is a statement by Ernest Stepp, candidate for editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

"I do not believe the present Tar Heel is a good campus newspaper and I do not believe that any of my opponents have presented a program to make the DTH a dynamic newspaper.

"I have never held a position on the Tar Heel, even though I have done some news and sports work for the paper. I am proud to say that I claim no part of the present DTH. To work for the DTH, one should be proud of the paper and its policies. If I am elected editor, I will try with the best of my ability to make the DTH a paper the student body can be proud of.

Strive for Fairness

"I do not believe that the present Tar Heel is fair to all interest groups. If I am elected to the DTH editorship, I will at once strive to make the DTH a fair and responsible newspaper.

"I deplore the present leftist editorial tendencies of the paper, but feel that the paper should be willing to let all groups have a say-so about what goes on in the DTH. This is why I advocate a 15-man editorial staff in my reorganization policies. I do not believe the student body wants to know what I think from 18 editorials a week.

News Play

"I will try within the best of my ability through my re-organization plans to give the student body a paper filled with local news, some national news, varying editorial views, campus feature stor-

Phelps Speaks Out On UNC Athletics

The following is a statement by Larry Phelps, independent candidate for president of the Student body.

Intercollegiate athletics were initially conceived as a way of bringing members of different schools together for fun and exercise. As long as it kept this general character, they served a very useful function. This, however, was not the case. Groups other than those connected with the school began to take more than a casual interest. In act, this interest has spread so far today that its University origins have been completely forgotten.

I believe that intercollegiate athletics must be brought back to the University. This naturally means de-emphasis. If de-emphasis proves impossible, then abolition is the only logical consequence.

I am violently against any social discrimination. If certain fraternities do practice discrimination, it is the duty of student government to eradicate this prehistoric vestige.

I believe that any restriction placed on fraternities should be on an individual basis. If fraternities as an extra-curricular activity must meet an eighty per cent rule then it should follow that all organizations, such as the band, the DTH staff and YACK Wshould be encompassed by the same rule and this is clear ridiculous.

Alderman Coeds Win Cage Title

Alderman Dormitory retained its basketball title Thursday night by defeating Whitehead Dormitory in the finals of the W.A.A. intramural tournament, 87-48. Jeanne Godwin paced the winners with 36 points, followed closely by Catherine Bolton with 28 and Joanne Godwin with 18. B. Parks with 22, S. Woolen with 21, and Barrow with 5 tallied for the losers.

Adams Writes For Quarterly

Dr. John B. Adams, associate professor in the School of Journalism, is the author of a research article in the current issue of Journalism Quarterly.

The article is entitled "The Relative Credibility of 20 Unnamed News Sources," and examines news stories in which no individual is identified as the source of the news. Adams found that different kinds of anonymous sources differed in the extent to which they would be believed by readers.

Campus Briefs

ALL CANDIDATES

The expense accounts of all candidates and parties must be turned in by 12 noon tomorrow at the G.M. Information office or the Student Government office.

Finance Committee

The finance committee will meet from 3:30 to 5:30 Tuesday in the TV Room of G.M. to discuss the budget. Anyone who wants to discuss items on the budget should be present.

Freshman Camp

There will be a Freshman Camp training session Tuesday night at 7 p.m. on the second floor YMCA. All persons interested in the program for next year should attend.

Company Interviews

The following companies will recruit on campus Monday: Heritage Furniture Co., Crawford & Co., and the N. C. National Bank.

Dorm Officers

Because the elections Board cannot provide ballots for the election of dormitory officers, all dormitory presidents are asked to prepare ballots and a separate receptacle (such as a shoe box) in which to deposit them. Ballots may be plain sheets of paper, but voters will have to write out the name of the candidate and his office on the ballot. Ballots should be counted by members of the executive council of each dorm and results immediately turned in to the IDC office or to Rex Savery in 17 Old West. Any questions on this subject can be answered by IDC Elections Chairman Rex Savery, 968-9026, or IDC president Jim Gaulden, 968-9165.

Orientation

Women's orientation counselor interviews are set up for Monday through Thursday. Dorm girls should sign up for an interview in their respective dorms. They can pick up an application blank at this time. Girls living in town and in sorority houses should sign up for interviews in Graham Memorial.

The schedule for interviews is as follows:

Monday

7:30-8:30 p.m. Nurses Dorm.

Dorcas Elena Henley Is Miss Chapel Hill

Dorcas Elena Henley of Linville was crowned Miss Chapel Hill Friday night after her selection from a field of five finalist.

Carolyn June Wolliford was voted Miss Congeniality by her fellow contestants and second runner-up by the judges. She is a 19-year-old secretary at N. C. Memorial Hospital and hails from Fayetteville.

"I'll promise to be a good Miss Chapel Hill," Miss Henley said after her selection. Afterwards she planted a kiss on voice instructor Walter Golde, who teaches her regularly and prepared her for the pageant.

"Wonderful" Reign

Miss Henderson will return to being just another student at the University, from which she will graduate this year. She said she had had "a wonderful" reign as Miss Chapel Hill .

The other finalists in the contest were Ginger Carnduff of Washington, D. C., and Marion Berryhill of Charlotte. Non-finalists were Frances Peeler of Chapel Hill, Gail Murray of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Linda Elizabeth Sitton of Hendersonville, Cathy Mintz of Mount Olive, and Juday Elam of Mars Hill.

A crowd of more than 375 attended the pageant held in Memorial Hall. The event was sponsored by the local Jaycees, and Billy Arthur of Chapel Hill served as master of ceremonies.

Halftime entertainment was provided by the Harlequins, a singing group of Duke University students. Earlier in the evening, Rolf Harrington sang several current recordings.

Wheless And Allen Discuss Questions

Dwight Wheless

Editor:

My statements are brief and to-the-point. These questions should not be sidetracked but rather should be dealt with directly and pointedly. My answers to these questions carry my personal belief and personal commitment for action.

80% Rule

The 80% rule imposed against fraternities is unfair. It is neither logical nor equitable that a group should be severely punished because of the failure of an individual in that group. Fraternities on this campus are responsible entites and should be treated as such; if a fraternity-affiliate has low grades then his fraternity should (and I believe fraternities have been doing this) take steps to help and encourage him—his help and encouragement need not come as "force play" from the administration. Fraternities are able to cope with any problems which confront them—the academic problem should be theirs for discussion and action.

Discriminatory Clauses

I am individually opposed to fraternity discrimination clauses for several reasons: first, no person should be discriminated against because of his color but should always be afforded equal rights and opportunities; secondly, many fraternities are prohibited by national charters from even considering persons of certain races and colors—this is not congruent to our professed belief in individual (fraternity) responsibility. Each fraternity should have and ought to reserve the right to offer

80% Ruling

The 80% academic achievement ruling imposed by the administration upon the fraternities at UNC has several different ramifications which must be understood by anyone objectively trying to evaluate its purpose and effectiveness. Set down as a measure intended to raise the admittedly low academic averages of fraternity men (although these averages are often higher than the all men's average), the rule has caused severe financial loss for some houses and the absence of a fall semester pledge class for other houses. For these reasons I feel the 80% rule is weak and damaging in practice, although in theory —to strengthen academic achievement and create a more serious academic attitude in the fraternity system—it is strong and constructive. As for any action I think Student Government should take in this area, I feel it should support the Interfraternity Council in its dealings with the adminisraion on htis issue. I also feel that when deferred rush is begun in the year 1963-1964, the 80% ruling should and must be rescinded by the administration and that Student Government should actively begin working for this end, gaining an understanding with the IFC and the administration as soon as possible.

Athletic Emphasis

Although the main purposes of this University are educationally and academically oriented, the policy of Student Government in this area, I feel, should be such that it would emphasize athletic

SP Senior Class Platform Released

The Student Party candidates for Senior Class officers released a six point platform Friday emphasizing informal social activities for the whole campus and specifically the Senior Class.

The candidates are Richard Vinroot, president; Larry Brown, vice-president; Beth Walker, secretary; Jeff Gulled, treasurer; and Gail Woodward, social chairman.

The six points include the following:

1) Lecture series with local lecturers and no expense.

2) Continuation of the Faculty Award of the Month.

3) A good class gift which will require a class project.

4) Monthly combo parties to help unify different groups on campus.

5) A Junior-Senior Class weekend in the fall, including a concert Friday night, football game Saturday and an informal dance Saturday night.

6) A Senior weekend in the spring, a week of privileges for the seniors. Tuesday will be Barefoot Day. Wednesday will be a free cut day with a lawn party and combo. Thursday seniors will get free passes to town movies. And Saturday there will be street dances.

"We are trying to build up a sense of class unity," said Beth Walker, candidate for class secretary.

Miss Walker, Richard Vinroot, and Larry Brown are currently serving together as Junior Class officers. "We are trying to provide social entertainment for the whole campus as well as the Senior Class, and our experience together this year shows us that these ideas will work," she said.

Candidate: Inman Allen

By MARTY KRUMING

When the polls open at 10 a.m. across the campus Tuesday morning how many Carolina students will wonder what type of a person University Party presidential candidate Inman Allen really is.

If there was one word needed to summarize Hughe Inman Allen's life it would be leadership. Allen was born in Atlanta,, Georgia, the son of the present mayor of Atlanta. After attending elementary school there, he went on to complete four illustrious years at Westminster High School.

At Westminster

While at Westminster, Allen served as president of the National Honor Society, president of the Quill and Scroll, business manager of the Annual, officer of the Student Council ,and assistant editor of the school newspaper. In addition Allen was an honor Roll Student and a member of the Key Club.

Morehead Scholar

Allen's shining four years at Westminster earned him a Morehead Scholarship at the University of North Carolina. Entering Carolina in the fall of 1958, Allen soon made his presence known in campus affairs. Rising from vice-president of Graham Memorial his sophomore year, to the presidency of G.M. his junior year, Allen is presently chairman of the Executive Board of Directors.

This young executive has also served as a member of the Carolina Symposium Committee, YMCA, and Student Legislature Finance Committee. In maintaining a working knowledge of all campus affairs, Allen has acted as Student Legislature floor leader and orientation counselor.

In Father's Campaign

Not only has Inman Allen had a strong voice in Carolina politics, but he has also gained valuable experience working in his father's successful campaign last year. Since the voting age in Georgia is 18, Allen appeared on television and campaigned among the younger generation in an effort to gain support for the present mayor.

Aside from his devoted love for politics, Allen spends a great deal of time hunting and fishing during the vacations. Although a football player at Westminster, he switched to soccer when he entered Carolina and only a knee injury sustained during his freshman year prevented him from continuing.

Majoring in political science and a member of the SAE fraternity, the UP's presidential candidate plans to enter the University law school in the fall.

Summer Work

In respect to Inman Allen's summer life, he has spent the last four years in Brevard.

Along with Allen, other candidates running on the University Party slate are Larry McDevitt, vice-president; Judy Clark, secretary, and Bill Crisswell, treasurer.

Growth And Education

President Meredith Wilson of the University of Minnesota told an audience at Woman's College this week that the size of a university has nothing to do with its excellence.

President Wilson pointed out that the University of Minnesota has an enrollment of over 30,000 and compares in excellence with other state universities.

It is good to hear this reassurance from the president of a large state university. Carolina is apparently heading in the direction of huge enrollment and a massive campus. And with each hike in enrollment, there is a corresponding rise in the feeling that a university cannot be both great in size and in quality.

This kind of sentiment has little to recommend it. If faculty excellence, library facilities, classroom and dormitory space and equipment keep abreast with enrollment, there is no reason that size should hamper quality.

It should not, at least, if emphasis is correctly placed and growth goes on in the arts as well as the professions and education is aimed at turning out intellectuals rather than doctors, economists, accountants, doctors or some other professional man.

In the face of a rising number of students who seek an education for the sole purpose of acquiring professional training, there is a great danger that a university will grow into a training center rather than an educational one.

Numbers, as President Wilson pointed out, do not necessarily reflect a particular attitude toward education. What is more important is whether the major portion of the enrollment is being educated, or merely trained. Here at Carolina, an attitude of careerism blankets the atmosphere like a fog.

The fact that more students will enter here means only that a greater number will come under it.

Literacy Tests

The administration's literacy test bill, which Attorney General Robert Kennedy described the "substitute of an objective standard for the present subjective color bar to Federal voting," would do a great deal toward curbing misapplication of current literacy, understanding, interpretation, o reducation tests now being used to deprive Negroes of suffrage in some Southern states.

Jim Crow voter's qualification tests are necessarily vague so that they can be used easily to disqualify Negroes.

Making it Federal law that a sixth-grade education can be used as a substitute for any such state qualification test would make the use of the literacy test as a weapon against the Negro a difficult proposition.

This bill, as a companion to the proposed constitutional amendment which would eliminate the poll tax, should help the Negro cause throughout the South.

All phony voter qualification provisions such as the literacy tests and poll taxes must be abolished before the right to vote can be adequately guaranteed to the Negro. These two bills will go a long way toward doing just that.

NSA Endorsement

Because delegates to the NSA convention are being elected at large this year for the first time, and the candidates have been limited in their campaigns because of the intensity of the presidential campaigns, we would like to point to the four men who are most qualified to represent Carolina at NSA.

Of the eight men running, four have the necessary ability and experience to give Carolna a strong voice in shaping national student policy.

Hank Patterson, because of his close association with NSA and his experience in student government, is easily the the most qualified candidate. His voice in NSA is already respected and he has been active in forming policy.

Joe Masi is an energetic and outspoken defender of political and social justice. He has a good grasp of national student problems and promises to be an effective force in representing Carolna at NSA. He is not blind to the deficiencies of the NSA and will take an active role in correcting them.

Bill Harriss, through his experience as president of the student body —an office that necessitates close contact with NSA—will represent Carolina ably. He has demonstrated his capabilities as a leader and a formulator of policy.

Bill Imes is highly capable, and has a grasp of international and national issues equal to or exceeding that of any of the other candidates. He is a forceful and effective speaker and will not equivocate.

These four will provide Carolina with the most experienced and dynamic leadership available. Of the eight candidates, these four promise to be the most effective slate of delegates.

How Would You Vote On . . .

Editor's Note: Today the eight NSA candidates answer the question: How would you vote on integration, federal aid to education and "In Loco Parentis."

Integration: I recognize the right of all citizens to have an equal opportunity to receive the benefits of tax supported facilities. The best way to achieve this is to create an informed public opinion through appeals based on reason, not emotion. In regard to private organization, the right of individuals in a free society to choose their own associates without external interference must be preserved.

Federal aid to education: I oppose a program whereby the federal government would appropriate funds for school construction and teachers' salary increases. Instead, I prefer to let each state keep a certain percentage of its citizens' total federal income tax payments and spend that money on education, because improvement in education, to be effective, must be generated on the state and local levels.

IN LOCO PARENTIS: It is unrealistic to say that the university can duplicate the role of the parent. However, since a university's standing is largely determined by the actions of its students, the university should be able to exercise some discipline over those actions. Such authority can be given without depriving students of all opportunities for self-regulation.

—Mack Armstrong (UP)

Integration: It has become the consensus of public sentiment and court rulings that when facilities are supported by public funds, they must be open to all regardless of race or color. To this movement I have acceded, realizing that this is only just under our form of government. But now we are being faced by those who would have "total integration" in all levels of our society and existence. To these crusaders I must say that I could never support any measure which infringed upon the vate activities as he sees fit within the framework of our laws as they exist today. I staunchly support the rigtht of private discrimination, for this is as much a part of our heritage as that of public equality.

Federal Aid to Education: I believe that this country owes it to itself to maintain and improve the quality of education offered in its colleges. It appears that many of the individual states though abounding with good intentions, have proven to be too slow in providing the high level of education needed for these times. When this becomes the case it is the responsibility of the Federal Government to take up the slack. This is not a question of creeping socialism; rather, this is a question of our national existence itself for it is only with truly educated men and women that we can maintain our position of prominence and security in the world today.

"In Loco Parentis": The role of the University should be that of providing the opportunity to its students for obtaining a well-rounded, liberal education. Part of my conception of a liberal education is that a college student be regarded as an adult and treated as such. This treatment does not include responsibiliety for the student's activities after hours off campus. These activities, should they violate society's standards, are matters for the Civil authorities and not the University. The University need not be a man's teacher and mother combined.

—DICK AKERS (U.P.)

Integration: As a believer in the doctrine which ascribes human dignity to all individuals, I see discrimination on the basis of race, color, or religion as a crime against social justice. I look forward to the day when no American is unwelcome in his own country.

Federal Aid to Education: I am not of the group which views federal aid to education as a step towards federal control of thought or action. Although I am opposed to aid for private or religious institutions, I believe that federal funds for public school construction and maintenance is wholly in keeping with the principles of academic freedom.

In Loco Parentis: Where it has prevailed, In Loco Parentis has resulted in the diminishing of student awareness and participation in the administration of the government of his campus. In Loco Parentis has weakened the structure and vitality of a free student press and eliminated autonomous student governments. I am committed to battle against any limitations on academic freedom, and, thus, will fight In Loco Parentis.

The most important point on which you will be choosing your NSA delegates is how they stand on the issues which will be considered. How do I stand on the issues?

Integration: I strongly feel that the institution of segregation is evil, un-Christian, and a deteriment to American democracy. I will be doing everything in my power to remove this blight from the American way of life.

Federal aid to educaion: In general, I support federal aid to education. I feel that the states have failed to supply the quality of education needed today. They need federal aid but not federal control. However, I do not feel that federal aid should go to provide for segregated instutions.

"In Loco Parentis: "I believe that the student is responsible and capable of governing himself. At the 14th NSC, I voted for the resolution condemning the doctrine of in loco parentis, and I will be working for programs to 1implement the ideas in this resolution.

I want to see NSA facing te issues confronting the students of today in a mature tnd responsible mtnner. It is important that NSA face these issues. For if it does not, who will?

—BILL STRAUGHN (S.P.)

I will support resolutions and actions of students working for the fulfillment of equal opportunity for all peoples regardless of race, creed, or color. I feel that student action must be sensible and must be carried out in a non-violent, legal fashion.

I support federal aid to public education, both for construction and general expenses with the provision that these funds must be administered through state governments.

A student is a citizen and I believe that he should be accorded the rights and responsibilities due a full member of the educational community. The student needs to be encouraged to act maturely, responsibly, and effectively. any times institutions using the doctrine of in loco parentis hamper student responsibility and cause apathy and obstruct creativity. For these reasons I oppose the doctrine of in loco parentis.

—BILL HARRISS (S.P.)

From the earlier reported incident in which I was involved (referred to by the DTH as "unforeseen circumstances') I feel it has already been established that I favor integration. I would vote affirmatively on any such proposal as long as it pertained to the pubilc concern.

I do not favor federal aid to education except in rare circumstances where no other means are possible. The federal government will not hand out subsidies generously without demanding a generous control over the concerned institutions. Such control is undesirable, I feel.

When an individual departs for college, he should be capable and willing to assume adult responsibilities. If he is mothered by the institution to which he goes, he cannot achieve this responsibility, and his immaturity will be prolonged. The student sroould be allowed to make his own decisions and then he must stand responsible for them. The sooner he learns to play the game of life the better it will be for him and all concerned. For this reason, I would cast a vote against a proposal "in loco perentis."

—CHARLES HEATHERLY U.P.)

Integration: I believe that all possible legal steps should be taken to further integration in public offices and facilities, but that the total integration of society can only be accomplished through other means than by law. The attitudes and concepts of society must be subjected to a thorough questioning by churches and schools at the same time as society adjusts to an ever-increasing association between races.

Federal Aid to Education: I believe that education is so important and so large a problem that it justifies the expenditure of federal as well as state funds. The impacted Areas program seems reasonable proof that federal spending would neither affect curriculum nor "tell the teacher what to teach."

In loco parentis: It is, of course, impossible for a large impersonal institution to play the role of parent. Rules are needed for the efficient functioning of the college society, but college students are supposed to be young adults instead of older children. To treat them as children is to thwart the ideal of the educational experience as a factor in a person's maturing.

—BILL IMES (U.P.)

The National Student Congress will be concerned this summer with the efforts of Negro students to gain entrance to facilities offered to them as part of the general public. I support the non-violent legal protests of students seeking admittance to these facilities.

I am in favor of federal aid to public education, both for construction and general expenses, to be administered through starte governments.

In Loco Parentis. I am strongly opposed to the doctrine of in loco parentis which denies a student of his rights and responsibilities as a full member of the educational community. The student should have a meaningful voice in his community and should be allowed maximum latitude in which to think and act. Practices associated with in loco parentis merely take from the student the responsibility of making decisions and reinforces "immaturity, conformity, and disinterest . . . ."

—HANK PATTERSON (S.P.)

Dissatisfied With Independents

To the Editor:

After reading the statements made by the indenpendent candidates for president and vice-president of the Student Body, I have real reason to wonder if the two independent candidates are really as informed with the workings of Student Government as they would like to have people believe.

I wonder if they have even stopped to look at the platforms of the political parties on campus. Have they taken the time to go back to the STUDENT PARTY platform of last spring? I fear not, since they give no credit whatever to the work carried out by the present Student Party administration. I would like to point out that the Student Party platform that the present Student Government administration was elected on did concern itself with issues on the international, national, and campus level. But even more important, these issues were stressed and work as been done in carrying the planks of the platform to an actuality. Ialso would like to point out, to the idependent candidates, that the present Student Government has done extensive work in carrying out the platform on which they were elected. And of just as much importance, I have the utmost confidence the Student Party candidates for election this spring will do an even more commendable job.

Borrowing a quote from the statement made by the independent candidates in Wednesday's TAR HEEL: "The whole purpose of Student Government should be to create on campus a climate of student awareness of national issues . . . Student Government can only lead by taking stands." I would like to present a question to the independent candidates whether or not the present Student Government has taken any stands on issues of international, national, and campus issues. I maintain that the present Student Government has done precisely this. Student Government has taken stands in the above-mentioned areas and has done extensive work to promote the betterment of the campus in all of these areas. For example, the stands taken by the Student Legislature on segregation, Federal Aid to Education, and disarmament. If these stands have not served to promote student awareness and interest. I'm sure that the two independents cannot do any sort of a decent pob for the betterment of our campus. And not only wit these issues has Student Government been concerned with, but also areas such as the recent bond election which would have provided immeasurable capital improvements for our campus. And even though the bond issue failed, work there has not stopped. The present administration is now working on helping present a similar set of issues at the next opportunity. This is just a very brief summary of the diversified work of our Student Government. And if the independent candidates feel that party-endorsed candidates are dodging the responsibility of taking stands on pertinent topics, I am sure that they would be perfectly free to take a good, close look at the platform of the Student Party.

Robinson's Ramblings

Our recent balmy weather is a welcome sight to the campus. But certainly no more so than the candidacy of Mike Mathers for the DTH editorship.

The extremes that Clotfelter and Stepp presented to student body are now remedied with a tried and proven moderate like Mathers.

He has organizational experience, stability and stamina which are necessary to stand up under the great pressure that goes with the DTH editorship. Clotfelter, I believe, has some of these qualities, while Stepp has evidenced them to an even lesser degree.

Mathers is a write-in candidate, but it is not too much trouble to place his name on the ballot, if it will mean a better DTH next year. And I believe it will.

The new Carolina Quarterly came out yesterday and it promises to be even better than the last issue.

This sounds like a lot of tommy-rot, but pick up a copy to see for yourself.

The Quarterly is a gathering place for some of the most talented writers and poets in Chapel Hill. Many a writer who has gone on to bigger triumphs enjoyed his first recognition in the pages of the Quarterly.

Staffers Endorse Mathers

We, the undersigned, do hereby announce our endorsement and wholehearted support for Mike Mathers for editor of the Daily Tar Heel. Some of us are those who previously supported Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye. At that time those persons sincerely felt that these two were the best qualified. However, since Mike Mathers entered the race we feel that he is more qualified to serve as editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

U.P. Is Alive And Kicking

To the Editor:

During the past week the Parliamentarian of the Student Legislature, John Randall, has stated that the UP has rolled over and played dead by not introducing the most bills in recent legislative assemblies. While his acquasions are very debatable, and space will not permit to debate this issue, let us turn to various other organizations which are an important part in Student Government and see how UP members have been serving this past year;

Pete Thompson, Student Body Treasurer; Al Cronenberg, Attorney General; George Campbell Chairman Men's Council; Al Pollard and Sara Jo Allen, Chairmen Orientation Committee; Tony Harrington, Chairman, Campus Affairs Board; Larry McDevitt, Tom White, Chairmen State Affairs Committee; Consolidated University Student Council, Bill Shipp, Pres., Wade Hargroves, chairman.

Bill Sullivan President IFC; Tam Lefler, President, YMCA; Inman Allen, President, GMAB; Pat Morgan, Chairman Toronto Exchange Program; Jey Deifell, Chairman Honor System Commission; Mack Armstrong, Chairman Debate Team; Tim Burnett, Chairman Student Audit Board; Janice Haley, President Pan-Hell. Council; and Bib Bilbro, Chairman Student Athletic Association.

You can see by this list the positions that University Party members have held this year and the work which they have contributed to Student Government has been I maintain that University Party has not played dead this year in contributions to student government.

Clotfelter Scored, Defended By Editor

To the Student Body:

There are certain aspects of Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye's campaign for co-editors of the Daily Tar Heel that should be considered before voting for or against these candidates.

Clotfelter says he is a DTH News Editor. He is not. He was asked to resign by Wayne King a month ago because he, Jim Clotfelter, was writing biased news stories. Clotfelter is, it is interesting to note, referred to in the previous articles about his campaign as a FORMER DTH News Editor. His name is still on the masthead because the print shop has no type of its own in that size and must go elsewhere to make changes, which are, naturally, as few as possible.

Wrye says says he is a former DTH Asst. Sports Editor. Granted, he used to write a few sports stories. He was sent out one day to cover an event and was not heard from again until he announced his candidacy. It is possible, in my opinion, that he may also go out to get information for an editorial one day and never come back. If this happens, then Clotfelter will be the only editor. What then?

It's not unreasonable to assume Clotfelter will follow a pattern similar to the method he used while editor of last summer's UNC News. In the UNC News there was very little news. It's true there were ads, editorials pictures, and complete NAACP coverage, but most campus events went unnoticed.

Clotfelter, after putting in a "hard summer," went home a week early leaving Irving Long to put out the paper. The only trouble was that Irving had never done it before and knew very little about it. Irving, a journalism major, struggled and sweated with it for a week and all by himself managed to publish the last issue. Will there be anybody to do that for the DTH if Clotfelter walks out again?

That possibility seems unlikely, since Clotfelter and Wrye circulated a petition among the staff members which they said was to be used when they went before the Publications Board. I don't know if the Publications Board saw the petition, but everybody else has. Clotfelter and Wrye didn't say it was to be used as campaign material, when people were signing it. Several of the staff members have since told me that they did not mean it to be used in the campaign when they signed it. Some of them also say that the petition has been changed since they signed it.

After considering the above, I personally will vote for either Ernest Stepp or Mike Mathers, who is a write-in candidate.

—Chuck Wrye is a former Asst. Sports Editor.

—The publishers of the summer school newspaper were informed well ahead of time that Irving Long would edit the final edition. Mr. Clotfelter had been named as a National Student Congress delegate four months before.

—No part of the petition has been changed since signatures were gained, to my knowledge.

Ruffin Dorm Group Notes Allen's Aid

To the Editor:

We, the undersigned, were members o the Sace Ruin Committee which was formed to argue Ruffin's case before any and all those people who could help us. Ruffinites were informed of the administration's new dormitory policy in the DAILY TAR HEEL on the morning of March 8, 1962. An informal ad hoc committee was sent to talk with Assistant Dean Long that afternoon to get more details. In response to popular demand Walter Derrick, President of Ruffin, called a special dorm meeting that night to hear their report. Assistant Dean George Strong kindly accepted our appeals for more information, and came down to Ruffin to speak to Ruffinites with only thirty minutes notice. Since we still were not satisfied, Derrick appointed a committee to make plans, gather information and to do whatever was necessary to save Ruffin. This committee met immediately after this dorm meeting to make tentative plans. Many ideas were advanced: however, then and throughout the day, there was some confusion as to exactly what should be done and some doubt about whether anything COULD be done.

It was at this point that Inman Allen came into the picture. Don Curtis, Allen's campaign manager, heard about our trouble and contacted Roger Asher, Chairman of the Save Ruffin Committee. Curtis said that Inman was very concerned about the administration's gradual encroachment on the prerogatives of the students and Student Government at Carolina. Asher was told that Inman probably would want to talk with our committee; and a meeting was set for about one a.m. When Inman arrived we filled him in on the background of our complaint and informed him of some of our ideas. We said that we did not know whether to write a resolution or a petition. Should we try to get signatures on a campus-wide basis or should we limit ourselves to Ruffin? Should we picket or not? We told Inman that we did not know whether we should capitulate and try to salvage upper quad room assignments for Ruffinites, or whether we should fight. One of our group said: "Look, Inman. You've had more experience with the Administration and their procedures than we have. Should we fight? If so, how do you suggest that we go about it?" Inman replied that he did not know if we could win our case or not, but he deinitely thought that we should try. He then outlined his criticisms of our ideas and offered many suggestions on what we should do and how we should argue our case. Of course we offered counter-criticisms and discussions, but by 3:30 or so our committee, with Inman's advice and counsel, was a long way toward formulating a plan of action. Inman's help was invaluable in solidifying and crystallizing our ideas. In the days that followed we, along with other Ruffinites, put our protests and proposals in writing and submitted our petition to the proper authorities. We of the Save Ruffin Committee are unanimous in the opinion that Allen's counsel, that night and in the days that followed, was an integral part of our drive to save Ruffin.

We would like to thank Dean Long and Dean Strong for their patient co-operation. We are also indebted to John Gould and Jim Gauldin of the IDC for their help. Many of our Ruffinites gave us support with ideas and writing and clerical skills. The committee would like to thank all of you for helping us to "Save Ruffin."

participation up to the point where i begins to interere with the educational process. Although a line drawn between these two ideals is not an exact one, I feel Student Government should contribute to the expansion of the intramural program by expanding the intramural manager salary system and Student Government should take an active role in working with the administration to expand the intercollegiate athletic program until it begins to interfere with basic academic requirements affecting varsity athletes as determined by the administration. This is a great university and must have a great athletic program. The athletic facet of greatness must not, however, compromise the academic facet of greatness.

Discriminatory Clauses

The discriminatory clauses which prevent a fraternity from extending a bid to Jewish and Negro students on this campus is a problem that has two sides—the moral, ethical side and the legal side. The situation confronting the individual fraternity chapters on this campus is a complex one—as members of a National Fraternity Organization, they are dependent upon the national organization for advice, supervision of chapter functioning, and often financial assistance. Most national fraternity charters contain the discriminatory clauses which effect directly the individual chapters throughout the nation. The dependence of the indivdual chapter upon its national organization makes the tie with the discriminatory clauses rather strong and legal, since the fraternities are set up as corporations under state and national laws.

The ethical and moral issue becomes pertinent when the question is telescoped onto a particular campus, such as UNC. The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill operates on the policy that no discrimination toward students will be enacted on the basis of race, color or creed. Therefore, I feel, the President of the Student Body should work for this end, an end which reflects the attitudes and convictions of the University establishment. Although Student Government should actively work with the IFC and the fraternities at UNC in perpetuating University policy into all areas of the campus, I strongly reserve the right of individual chapters to remain under the ruling of their national organization. If the individual chapters want to remove any discriminatory clauses, or feelings, from their functioning, this is their privilege and is concurrent with University administration and student government policy; yet, Student Government should not, and must not, try to usurp the rights of the national fraternity organizations in this area.

Glee Club Gives Concert Tuesday

The UNC Men's Glee Club, under the direction of Dr. Joel Carter, associate professor of music, will present its annual spring concert in Hill Music Hall Tuesday at 8 p.m. Guest soloist, Marilyn Zschau will be featured in Brahms' Alto Rhapsody.

Highlighting the choral aspects of the program will be the performance of Brahms' Alto Rhapsody with Miss Zschau as alto soloist. Miss Zschau is formerly a student of the University and presently is studying at Juillard Music School in New York City.

In addition, the Glee Club will present major choral works by Ludwig Beethoven, Henry Clarke, and Gustav Holst and choral settings of many well-known American folk songs.

they said.

"Deadlines and general print shop regulations could be modified to fit the specific needs of the Tar Heel, if the DTH had its own press," Wrye and Clotfelter said.

Communications

The candidates also discussed their desire to "improve communications between various areas of the campus, and between the Tar Heel and these areas," in yesterday's statement.

Wrye and Clotfelter pointed out that their proposed "stringer system," which would have a person in every dormitory, fraternity, sorority, school and department, "would improve inter-campus communications."

Campaign co-managers Fran Roth and Mike Putzel said, "any of the Tar Heel's past problems have resulted from a lack of communication between it and segments of the campus."

Pan-Hellenic

Miss Roth is president of the Pan-Hellenic Council. Putzel is an officer in a "conservative" campus group and past president of Cobb dormitory.

"We think Chuck and Jim's program will make the Tar Heel a more widely-respected media, a more cohesive force on the campus," said Miss Roth and Putzel.

The candidates' proposed "beat system" would have reporters regularly covering the major areas on campus. This would "give students an understanding of the workings of the Office of Student Affairs and other areas where, for instance, student autonomy is threatened and students are affected," Wrye and Clotfelter said.

Mathers

this, HUAC simply drives the most dangerous communists undeground, while feebly it uncovers the harmless communists.

It is my contention that communists can be beaten through education—in the form of public debate as well as unbiased classroom instruction.

Supports ECC

I also believe that the ECC (Common Market) will be able to quell the communist threat economically. A strong wall of capitalism can contain this red growth. The problem for the U.S. as far as entering this Common Market is centered around the question as to whether or not we will be able to lower tariffs and compete with these more underdeveloped nations. How far will our standard of living fall if we enter this free trade agreement?

Moving to campus affairs I would first like to state that, if elected, I plan to criticize constructively, in the left hand column of the DTH, the student legislature, honor council, administration, fraternities and dormitories. I am not endorsed by any political party and I can not see how any editor that is can be unbiased in his comment. An endorsed editor owes the fact of his being in office to a particular party and probably should owe his allegiance to that party in return.

It should be added here that I do not plan to make the DTH a crusader for civil rights. Campus news will be given a more important place than it is at present. If elected I promise to do everything in my power to have no biased news reporting, only through the selection of competent reporters (or the training of inexperienced reporters) can this be accomplished.

I want an interesting, stimulating and enlightening newspaper.

Mathers Replies To Election Rule

The following is a statement by Mike Mathers, write-in candidate for editor of the Daily Tar Heel, in regard to a statement in the next column by Dave Buxton, chairman of the Elections Board.

"Since when can't the votes for a write-in candidate be counted in a democracy? If the students of the University of North Carolina believe that I am the best qualified candidate and will produce the best Daily Tar Heel next year, then would it not be right for me to be editor?

"I think the rule not permitting write-in candidates is completely unconstitutional by the UNC student constitution and by the North Carolina Constitution.

"It is simply a thing used by the Elections Board to save them time in counting ballots.

"I think if I get the most votes I should be editor."

brotherhood to any person regardless o race or color—and should do so.

Athletic Emphasis

Our purpose for being at the University is to gain an education; and yet I am not in favor of athletic de-emphasis. Why? Because I do not feel that athletic programming was, is or ever will stifle out educational opportunities. Rather, athletics is intricately involved in our University life and many times provides an academic stimulus to students. Athletic de-emphasis at our University is untimely and unnecessary; I think the real issue has been side-tracked by the administration. What is needed is ACADEMIC EMPHASIS, not athletic de-emphasis.

Production per cow on DHIA in North Carolina rose from 8011 pounds of milk and 326 pounds of butterfat in 1952 to 9095 pounds of milk and 353 pounds of butterfat in 1960.

Statement Made On Mathers' Candidacy

Dave Buxton, chairman of the elections board, issued a statement yesterday concerning the write-in candidacy of Mike Mathers for Daily Tar Heel Editor.

"Any ballots cast or Mike Mathers will not be officially counted because he is not, and cannot become at this late date, a candidate," Buxton said.

"The only thing this situation could do is force a run-off between Stepp and Wrye and Clotfelter, because any run-off would have to be between official candidates. No one can appear on a ballot for editor of the Daily Tar Heel who has not been endorsed by the Publications Board. Mathers has not been endorsed.

"If Mike Mathers should receive a majority of the votes cast, he will still not be declared the winner.

"Any decision by the Elections Board can be appealed to the Constitutional Council," Buxton added.

"I have been working professionally as a newspaperman since 1957. I have worked for several different commercial papers, other campus newspapers and as a radio newsman. I have demonstrated my leadership ability in AFROTC. No one in this contest has ever been DTH editor before, the student body will gamble regardless of who they vote DTH editor.

"I am an official candidate for the office of editor, my name appears on the ballot. I am an independent because I believe that a party candidate will be under pressure to follow party lines as editor. I am endorsed by the Publications Board. I did not decide to run for editor at the last minute or on the spur of the moment."

Heels Scrimmage Under Warm Sun

By ED DUPREE

UNC's quarterbacks filled the air with footballs Saturday afternoon in the second full-scale

Six touchdowns were scored, five scrimmage for the Tar Teel gridders.

by the airways, and three by the first unit as Coach Jim Hickey's men sweated it out under the warm sun in a three-hour Kenan Stadium scrimmage.

Sandy Kinney quarterbacked the Blues, the first unit, and connected on two long touchdown passes—one of them a 25-yarder to co-captain Ward Marslender. Joe McLamb scored a TD on the ground—the only one of the hot afternoon.

George Boutselis tossed a near-60-yarder to end Bob Lacey and another to Roger Smith. Smith, a right halfback, also caught a pass thrown by Gary Black for the sixth and final march across the end zone stripe.

Coach Hickey was pleased with the play of his gridders, especially the offensive play of the number one unit, as the Heels toiled from 1:30 to 4:30 in their 12th day of spring practice.

Four days next week and four the following week climaxed by the Alumni game April 7 will close out the spring practice slate for the Tar Heels.

In addition to Kinney and Marslender, Ken Willard at fullback and Ronnie Jackson and McLamb composed the first team backfield. McLamb worked mostly on defense, Jackson on offense.

Joe Craver at center, John Runco and John Hammett at the ends, Jack Tillery and Duff Greene at the guards, and Jim Alderman and Vic Esposito were the first team linemen.

Other Tar Heel backs who saw a lot of action were quarterbacks Jim Gallagher and John Flournoy, halfbacks Jim Eeason, Dave Braine, Tommy Ward, and Ron Tuthill, and fullbacks Barry Westfall, Ed Kesler, Rich Zarro and Pete Kirvan.

UNC Meets Ithaca Monday

By ED DUPREE

Short sleeves, bermudas, more frequent cuts, beach weekends outdoor farternity parties—all are are signs of spring in Chapel Hill.

The yell of "fore" on Finley Golf Course, the swish of the rackets on the tennis courts, leet-footed track men tearing around the cinder track at Fetzer Field, football players scrimmaging under the hot sun on Navy Field and in Kenan Stadium—the spring sports schedule is indeed a busy one.

But the first milestone of UNC's spring is the opening of the home baseball season Monday. Emerson Stadium during baseball games has always been a favorite place for those who want to relax, get away from studies, soak up the sun, and watch a perennially strong Tar Heel nine in action on the diamond.

The 1962 home opener tomorrow is with Ithaca College from New York. In the last seven years Ithaca's Bombers have been runnerup twice for the NCAA championship of District 2, comprising New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey colleges and universities.

The Tar Heels under Coach Walter Rabb, who is also Assistant Athletic Director, finished second in the ACC with a 10-4 mark last season and had a 15-6 overall mark. Rabb is in his sixth season as UNC head coach and his teams have always been near the top of the conference. In 1960 his team won the ACC title and District 3 championship and competed in the NCAA finals.

A surprising double header loss to Virginia at the close of the 1961 season shocked Tar Heel supporters and Duke's Blue Devils backed into the league title with an 11-3 record. From that UNC team Jim Mooring, a spohomore outfielder who hit .427 to lead the league, and Nick Warren, a junior who had never lost a college game, were snatched by the pros. Pitchers Bob Deaton and John Stott, catcher Carroll Bolick, third baseman Ferg Norton ,and outfielder Tom Camp all graduated from that team.

But prospects are not dim for 962. Russ Hollers, a .308 hitter in 1959 and a big man on the 1960 team is back after a year's absence to get settled in law school. Russ is a good defensive outfielder and has a strong arm and good batting power. He will play left field.

In c enter ield will be Heyward Hull, a .250 hitter last season who drove home 12 runs. Flanking him in right will probably be Dee Frady. Frady also hit .250 in 1961 and can fill in at either catcher or first base.

Len Dellolio, a .311 hitter who slammed home 18 runs, is the Tar Heel first baseman. Speedy Paul Swing, a .319 hitter last year, covers second.

Last year's shortstop, .300 hitter Larry Neal, has been switched to third base, and frosh star Jim Speight will be the UNC shortstop.

The starting catcher should be either sophomore Bernie Isgett, a good defensive receiver who missed his frosh year because of a broken leg, or junior Wendell Brande.

The starting pitcher could come from a number of hurlers. Seniors Bob Wacker or Dave Murr could start while sophs Andy Billesdon and Spencer Willard could see a lot of action. Junior Larry Jenkins could be called in. Clayton Burns, Bobby Cox, and Bob Carter round out the Tar Heel pitching staff.

Ithaca Coach Bucky Freeman brings a team to Chapel Hill that posted a 6-5-1 mark a year ago. After team batting averages of .321 in 1958, .351 in 1959, and .317 in 1960, his Bombers slipped to .257 in 1961. With the aid of some good sophs, Freeman is looking for an improvement.

Bill Masucci, the leading Ithaca hitter last season, is sidelined with an injury. This leaves Co-captains Bob Valesente, an outfielder who hit .308 and Skip Lyne, shortstop who batted .295 as the best hitters among the lettermen.

Bob Bleadow had the best pitching mark last year. Other veteran twirlers include Roger Freize and Bill Darling.

Golf, Tennis Teams Play Here Monday

By CURRIE KIRKPATRICK

UNC's golf and tennis teams, together undefeated in five dual matches, return to action tomorrow afternoon and Tuesday afternoon as they wind up the March portion of their spring schedules.

Coach Ed Kenney's linksmen had yesterday's match with Michigan State postponed but still came off the week with a perfect 3-0 slate. The golf team, studded with sophomores but led by senior captain Pete Green, trounced Dartmouth twice, 42 ½-2 ½ and 38-1 and finished the week Friday with an easy 27-3 victory over the Michigan State linksmen.

Tomorrow, Kenney's crew takes on Princeton of the Ivy League with Purdue coming in on Tuesday to meet the Tar Heels. Both matches will start at 1:30 on the University-owned Finley Golf Course.

Coach Don Skakle's tennis team lived up to all pre-season notices last week as the netters easily disposed of tough Dartmouth in matches on successive days.

Paced by junior captain Keith Stoneman and spectacular sophomores George Sokol, Ted Hoehn, John (Bitsy) Harrison, and all-everything Charlie Shaffer, the Skakle men blew Hoehn's father's Indians off the courts by 9-0 and 6-3 counts.

The matches, witnessed by some of the biggest tennis crowds in UNC history, were the first of the year for Carolina and the results bore out the speculation that has been g oing on since last year —that the Tar Heels are a definite threat for the NCAA championship.

Shaffer, the 6-3 Chapel Hill boy, is largely responsible for the great throngs that flock to the tennis courts on these sunny afternoons.

All the local gentry, led by Charlie's mother and including many elderly folk from the community, who are great tennis buffs and friends of the Shaffer family, come out to watch Shaffer, Stoneman, and company display their wares. And not since the heyday of Vic Seixas has there been such a tennis show at Carolina.

Michigan State and MIT come into town tomorrow and Tuesday to try and stop the UNC express but it will take a tremendous effort by the visiting netmen to even win a match and Carolina will be heavily favored to extend their unblemished record to four straight.

Dayton Tops St. John's For NIT Championship, 73-67

By NOMAN MILLER

NEW YORK (UPI) — Big Bill Chmielewski, who nearly quit school earlier this season, led Dayton to a 73-67 victory over St. John's in the final of the National Invitation Basketball Tournament Saturday and ended years of frustration for Coach Tom Blackburn.

A crowd of 16,037 at Madison Square Garden, including a delirious delegation of nearly 3,500 Dayton students and townsfolk, watched the towering Flyers from Ohio win this coveted championship for their university for the first time in 10 tries.

As soon as the final buzzer sounded, nearly 1,000 of the Dayton supporters jubilantly streamed into the Garden floor and hoisted Blackburn and his players to their shoulders.

Of the nine previous teams which Blackburn had brought to the N.I.T. since 1951, five had reached the finals only to lose out.

However, the rugged, 6-10 Chmielewski, a sophomore from Detroit, made this the best team Blackburn ever has brought to this tournament. He scored 24 points and made the battle with his rival 6-10 center, Leroy Ellis, strictly "no contest." Chimielewski held Ellis to five field goals and consistently outrebounded his St. John's rival.

Hart Paces Carolina Past Tiger Trackmen

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Bob Hart, a fleet-footed junior from High Point, put on a dazzling one-man exhibition yesterday afternoon as UNC's track team rolled over Clemson, 99-37, for its second straight dual meet win.

Hart, who two weeks ago won the ACC Indoor Games 600-yard run, took first places in the 220 and 440-yard races yesterday, in addition to anchoring Carolina's winning 440 and mile relay teams.

Hart did the 220 in 21.5 and was timed at 48.7 for the 440, but his time for the final lap of the mile relay seemed to be faster than his individual races for he came from far behind to nip the Clemson runner and give the Tar Heels the victory.

Tom Clark, Scott Brent and Jerry Stuver also shared the spotlight with Hart as the Carolina cindermen took 13 of the 16 events on the way to their lopsided victory.

Clark, the record-breaking high jumper from Greensboro, won his specialty with a leap of 6-4, while Brent and Stuver each won one event and raced on the mile relay team.

Brent took the 880 in 1:56.8 while Stuver captured the mile with a time of 4:14.05.

UNC swept all but one field event with its other losses coming in the 100-yard dash and 220 low hurdles.

Clemson's Cater Leland took the broad jump with a mark of 22 feet, 9 inches for the Tigers' only win outside the races. Other Clemson winners were Jim Wynn, who ran 10.1 in the 100 and Wesley King, who beat Carolina's Jim Brown in the hurdles with a time of 24.8 seconds.

For UNC, Harvey Henry won the shot put with a heave of 47' 7½ ", Cutter took the javelin at 181' 8½", Barrie Tiedemann captured the pole vault at 14 feet even and Jim Shumate threw the discus 136' 9¾" for the win in that event.

Other Carolina victors were Carmine Lunetta in the two-mile, and Brown in the 120-yard high hurdles. Lunetta was timed in 9:35.6 while Brown won the hurdles in 15.1 seconds.

-Grantland Rice In Fame Hall

SALISBURY, N. C. (UPI)—The late Grantland Rice, who began his newspaper career at $5 a week, has been named the first member of the National Sportswriters and Sportscasters Hall of Fame.

His enshrinement will come April 3 when the nation's top sportswriters and sportscasters attend their third annual banquet here.

Rice was chosen for the honor from a list of four nominees selected by the National Hall of Fame Committee, composed of top sportswriters and sportscasters from every region of the country.

The final ballot contained the names of Graham McNamee and Ted Husing as sportscasters nominees and Rice and Damon Runyon as sportswriter nominees.

Mathers Endorsed By Selections Bd. For Editor's Post

Mathers said any votes cast for him in today's election will be counted, either officially or unofficially.

"If the Elections Board doesn't count my ballots individually," he said, "I will add the votes for Clotfelter and Wrye to the votes for Stepp and subtract the total from the total number of votes cast.

"I will take this information to the Constitutional Council. They will, I am sure, rule that the law prohibiting write-in candidates in our present election laws is unconstitutional and then will make an official count of my votes.

"I think there should be a place on the ballot for a write-in vote. Whoever the students vote for should be editor, even if the vote is write-in or heiroglyphics."

Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye also said the candidate with the most votes should be the new editor. Ernest Stepp offered "no comment."

Al Roper was elected head cheerleader last year on write-in votes when it was discovered the official candidate didn't have a "C" average.

Mathers Would Establish Student-Edited Magazine

Mike Mathers, write-in candidate for editor of the Daily Tar Heel, said yesterday that he will attempt to publish a magazine by and for the students in addition to the student newspaper.

The magazine would appear every two weeks and would have a separate staff from that of the Daily Tar Heel. The magazine "will print student fiction and nonfiction, summaries on the big stories of the preceding week, and student cartoons."

Mathers said, "The funds for such a magazine could easily be taken from the present DTH surplus without any additional funds from Student Legislature."

"Student and faculty opinions on international, national, state and local problems would be polled regularly. This would add interest to the editorial page and would also stimulate student thought on subjects concerning them directly or indirectly."

Mathers also emphasized the need for good leadership, fresh ideas and administrative ability. "The problems of the Tar Heel cannot be solved by stuffing the already limited facilities with inexperienced people.

"The new editor must be able to create an atmosphere whereby students will want to contribute written opinion as well as time," Mathers said. "I know that I can do this."

McDevitt Says Outside Ideas Are Important

The following is a statement by Larry McDevitt, a candidate for vice-president of the Student Body:

As a vice-presidential candidate, I have two main areas of concern pertaining to student government and its relation to our campus.

One, I feel that student government should expand to a greater extent into the academic and cultural life of the university, and two, student government is not so small that it cannot be placed on a personal rather than an abstract level to the majority of our student body.

Outside Ideas

Student government should not wait for problems to come to it; student government should seek, find and fulfill the needs of this campus. Those participating actively in student government do not have all the answers to the complexities of student autonomy. The reservoir of ideas and thought lies outside Graham Memorial, and this reservoir needs desperately to be tapped. This can be done by personal, room-to-room contact, and this project should be undertaken.

Our Foreign Exchange Scholarship program should be expanded to include the outstanding universities throughout the world, in order to benefit our student body. However, student government should sponsor in the living units on this campus, discussion groups and seminars led by these students.

New Advisor System

It is my hope that a new presidential advisor system can be established with advisors in the dormitory, social, cultural, married and graduate student, and fraternity aspects of this campus to mention a few. The job of these advisors would entail investigation into these various areas to uncover the needs that exist.

Another area in which student government should exert its influence is in regard to the present faculty advisor system, especially as it pertains to undergraduates and general college students. In order for this system to be more effective, its personnel should be expanded.

Revitalized Di-Phi

A great deal of controversy has arisen concerning the right of the Student Legislature to consider resolutions, and I will reserve the right of this body to consider any resolution; however, I feel the majority of such considerations belong in the Di-Phi Debating Society. Student government should take steps to revitalize this organization and restore it to its proper position of prominence as a vital organ of student opinion. If issues merit an expression of opinion and thought from this student body, then this expression should be obtained by a campus-wide referendum.

ERNEST STEPP

Ernest Stepp Seeks Changes In Newspaper

The following is a statement by Ernest Stepp, endorsed by the Publications Board and Independent candidate for editor of the Daily Tar Heel:

"The DTH is not a good college newspaper. I believe that it will only become a better paper through complete reorganization."

"I have tried to prevent picturing myself as a miracle man. I have presented to the student body a plan to reorganize the Daily Tar Heel. I have told the student body that, to have a good newspaper, you must have a larger staff. I have advocated a program of giving writers bylines when they freely give of their time. I also said that an apprentice program would help build this larger staff by recruiting new writers.

Revamped DTH

"I have said that an editorial staff of 15 members is needed to allow the paper to present editorially all sides of important issues.

"My plans for the DTH have been labeled by many as unrealistic or extreme. Most DTH readers are assuming that I am promising them a brand new Tar Heel at once. To do so would be absurd. The DTH needs to be revamped from the ground up. I will work hard toward these goals I have set, but cannot do it by myself. To reorganize the paper will take time and help.

"Biased And Unfair"

"I have no personal feelings against the other candidates. I still say the present Tar Heel is journalistically unfair, biased and irresponsible. I have chosen to only attack the programs and ideas of my opponents.

"It seems strange to me that while advocating responsiblity, that some people would wage an irresponsible attack on my opponents. Sometimes my name has been linked with this and other times it has not. If I advocated such measures, I would have done so in print. We, the DTH editorial candidates, have tried to keep the race clean, only to see irresponsible persons attack us. I will be no part of such attacks.

Political Moderate

"I am a first semester senior in Journalism, but will be attending Carolina for two more semesters. I am an experienced newspaper man, working both professionally and for college newspapers.

Russians' Visit Impressed Many Despite Chicken

By GARRY BLANCHARD

Widely-published accounts of a visiting Russian's angry reaction to too much fried chicken and too few towels drew the ire of many here this weekend.

Critics, mostly students, claimed the accounts did not reflect the "true spirit" of a three-day visit to the University by twelve Russian professional men, all around 30 years old.

The incident occurred Thursday when the leader of the party, Adolph Shukhov, 32, a Communist youth group official, returned to the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity house where he was billeted to find the towels he'd asked for hadn't been provided.

His vigorous complaints ceased with the arrival of the interpreter, who explained the incident was a misunderstanding. Shukhov then accepted his hosts' apologies.

Later, at supper, fried chicken was served. According to fraternity President Jacob Lohr, Shukhov snorted he'd had fried chicken for lunch somewhere else and he wasn't going to eat it again.

Ham and eggs were rustled up as a substitute. "And then he complained that the plate was too full," said Lohr.

In the wake of the Russians' departure for Washington, when the story appeared around the state, several students complained that Shukhov's being "difficult to get along with" had caused the impression that the same was true of the rest of the party, and that they had not enjoyed themselves while here. This was not so, they said.

"That story didn't reflect the true spirit of their visit. We enjoyed having them here.

"It gave us a look into the Russian mind. We understand a little bit more now what we're up against. I think it also pointed up that we're kind of lacking . . . we need more education to understand the modern Russian.

Long said he didn't think the Russians' visit impressed them "one way or the other. They think certain of our leaders are leading us in the wrong paths, which is bunk."

He termed the Russians "tourists" who "knew what to expect," but said "we all got along well."

Pi Kappa Alpha spokesman Al Cronenberg said he felt the towel incident was due to a misunderstanding caused at least partially by the language barrier. But he said the fried chicken incident was probably due to Shukhov's being "difficult to get along with." Over-all Cronenberg said his fraternity enjoyed having Shukhov and two of his comrades stay at their house.

Other points of confusion were caused by the Russians' being billed as students, which none of them were. Authorities explained this was known before the Russians arrived here but no specific press announcement was made.

The Russians' visit was arranged by the non-governmental Council on Student Travel in New York. Twelve others are visiting western parts of the United States.

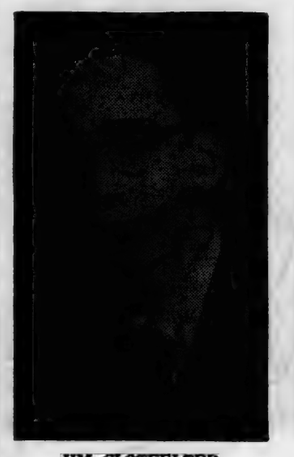
Campuswide Elections To Fill Student Posts



JIM CLOTFELTER

CHUCK WRYE

Clotfelter & Wrye Say DTH Effective

Chuck Wrye and Jim Clofelter, Sudent Party - endorsed candidates for Daily Tar Heel co-editors, said yesterday they would editorially "defend student autonomy against encroachments upon its authority."

The candidates said, "The Daily Tar Heel is the most effective weapon against adminstrative action in fields of student responsibility." The newspaper should also "serve as a check on student government," they said.

"With the use of responsible, intelligent editorial opinion the Tar Heel can be a force of great magnitude and importance to students," Wrye and Clotfelter said.

Other editorial questions with which they would deal as editors are: "the professor as a classroom teacher or researcher; the role of the University in the South and the nation; and the value of a student honor system and campus code."

"No one should be tried for 'ungentlemanly conduct'," said the co-editor candidates, in reference to the campus code. "The term is vague and undefinable," they said.

"Honor cases should be brought only against those students who are accused of academic infractions," said Wrye and Clotfelter.

Wrye, from Greensboro, will be a special student next year. He is a former DTH asst. sports editor and editorial assistant for "Reflections" magazine.

A rising junior from Atlanta, Ga., Clotfelter has been DTH news editor, asst. to the editor, columnist and reporter.

They have been approved by the Publications Board.

Legislature, Big 4, Editor To Be Chosen

At stake are the posts of Editor of the Daily Tar Heel, Student Government Officers, Senior Class Officers, Men's and Women's Councils, Legislators, 4 delegates to the NSA Congress and presidents of the Carolina and Women's Athletic Associations.

Dwight Wheless heads the SP slate of Student Government officers. Wheless is opposed by UP candidate Inman Allen.

Roger Smith (UP) and Richard Vinroot (SP) are seeking the Senior Class Presidency.

DTH

Seeking the editorship of the DTH are Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye, running as co-editors on the SP ticket; Ernest Stepp, an independent, and Mike Mathers, an independent write-in candidate.

Concerning the legality of Mathers' candidacy, Dave Buxton, Chairman of the Elections Board, said yesterday that Mathers has only two chances to become editor.

"If Mathers receives a majority of the votes cast, he can appeal to the Constitutional Council for a decision as to whether or not he was qualified for election," Buxton said.

"Under existing election laws he is not qualified for election.

"If he receives a plurality of the votes cast, he would have to appeal to the Constitutional Council for a decision to declare him an official candidate for his name to appear on a run-off ballot."

Buxton added that, "under the bylaws of the Publications Board, in order to appear on an official ballot for editor of the DTH he must be endorsed by the Publications Board. Those candidates approved shall have their endorsement noted in the DTH at least one week prior to elections.

"Under the elections law this endorsement must be made 15 days prior to the date set for election," Buxton said.

Mathers was endorsed yesterday by a vote of the Publications Board.

Voting

The Elections Board requires that students wishing to vote show their ID cards or sufficient identification, i.e., driver's license, etc., at the polls before registering. All polls will be open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. With the exception of Kenan and Connor dorms and Emerson Stadium, all dorms will have their own polling places. Residents of Connor will vote in Winston Dorm and residents of Emerson Stadium will vote in Ruffin.

Town Polls

Men's Town Districts II, III, IV and the Women's Town District have been changed. The present polling areas and polls are as follows:

Men's Town I, bounded by Columbia Street on the East, Cameron Avenue on the North and the corporate limits of Chapel Hill on the west and south, will have polls at the Naval Armory and the Carolina Inn.

Men's Town District II, bounded by Cameron Avenue on the South, Columbia Street on the east and

Presidential Candidates Offer Final Statements

Candidates for student body president yesterday gave their views on the questions of academic standards, integration, and other campus issues. The following are the statements of Student Party candidate Dwight Wheless, University Party candidate Inman Allen, and independent candidates for president and vice-presient Larry Phelps and John Salter.

Dwight Wheless

There are too many Student Government committees. Many past administrators have felt that participation in Student Government was proportionate to the numoer of committees in Student Government—this has led to unnecessary complexity. I believe that Student Government should be streamlined and simplified in order to increase its effectiveness and student understanding of it.

Each present committee must be reviewed objectively and its duties specified; if duties overlap then committees must be combined. For example, the Last Lecture Committee should be a part of the Carolina Forum; the Student Credit Commission and the Library Committee should both be parts of the Campus Affairs Board, the Dance Committee a part of the Attorney General's Staff, etc. This appraisal of Student Government would simplify and strengthen Student Government at a time when it needs to be strong.

No Color Bar

It is my belief that each man should be afforded equal opportunities, immunities and privileges. If a man comes to me and wants to serve on a Student Government committee, I will not see his color but will base the appointment on his ABILITY. The Student Party has long maintained that a person should be allowed to participate in Student Government because of his ability, with no regard for his color or campus residence. Student Government at our University must concern itself with affording equality to EVERY student, EVERY day.

Academic Problems

We attend the University to gain an education and therefore of necessity SG must concern itself with academic problems. SG should attempt to bring about a stimulating atmosphere in each classroom of our school in order that our

The question of academic standards here is a complex one affected by the fact that this is a state University. Since I have been asked for a personal opinion on the broad question of "Academic Standards," I will merely say that I feel they should be raised. Student government, in working with the administration and the board of trustees of the consolidated University should attempt to gain not only a raise in the level of the entrance examination requirements, but should also work to have greater stress put on classroom performance by students in the University.

The problem of integration on the UNC campus should never be a serious one affecting individual students due to the fact that the University and its services are offered to all students regardless of race, color, or creed. Student Government should work actively for these ends. In my opinion, the question of integration beyond the university is an individual matter; that is, I don't think anyone should use the prestige of a student government office to coerce integration upon private enterprise establishments such as the Varsity Theater. As far as local services in and around Chapel Hill are concerned with University students, regardless of race, color, or creed, I feel we should all do our part in gaining this end, and student government committees and individuals should continue work in this area for University students and personnel. For individuals beyond the student composition, I don't feel student government, as an organ or the President of the student body, other than as an individual, should work for these ends unless a student referendum (and I want one to be held) indicates that the student body is

It appears that there has been a gross misunderstanding of the basic concept of our campaign. We have had the belief that a campaign should be run on the differences between candidates as this would keep it out of the rather petty issues such as dorm vs. frat.

For this reason we have put major emphasis on the national-international awareness facet, because basically this is where we differ from the other candidates.

We chose, after some thought, the major issues of disarmament and integration from a host of others such as HUAC, Viet Nam, right to work laws, and approximately 4000 others that face us as the leaders of tomorrow.

When we categorically stated that we stand for total disarmament and complete integration it appears that we made the mistake of taking for granted that the average student would know that by total disarmament we meant total universal disarmament with controls, and not unilateral, which would be even more insane than the mad arms race toward oblivion that both sides are now competing. As to the question of integration, while this is a moral issue it nevertheless has immediate consequences in our lives as students in a southern university, and the integration of two theaters in Chapel Hill does not close its case. It must also be said that while complete integration is the key to social equality it in no sense means instant integration.

In the reaim of campus issues we believe that probably the most pressing local issue concerns the prices we pay here in Chapel Hill. Realizing this we asked a graduate student in economics to investigate the feasibility of a merchandising co-op. We could not push through a co-op in a month, two months or probably even six months, but through concentrated effort we be-

Lawler Wants Re-emphasis Of Academics

"The growth of this university demands a new concept of the vice presidency; from the old chairman of the legislature to the new executive-chief legislator," said SP candidate Mike Lawler.

In a statement emphasizing the qualifications needed for the position, Lawler explained that the "new concept" called for a "man of both particular and diverse experience; particular work in all three branches of student government and previous personal contact with all facets of university life."

"The results of this working concept will be a strong executive and an active legislator who can work with the entire student body to fill the present and approaching needs in every area of the university."

Students active in numerous phases of student life expressed confidence in Lawler's ability and praised his past accomplishments.

George Campbell, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, cited the candidate's very capable work on the Honor Council. "I believe firmly," said Campbell, "in Mike's sincerity and his willingness to work for improvements in the honor system."

Cobb Dorm President Ford Rowan endorsed Lawler's program for bettering dormitory facilities and conditions. "I know Mike is vitally concerned with the interests of the dorm resident," said Rowan. "In Cobb, we are experimenting with his idea for a basic library in each dorm. Imaginative programs like this can benefit the entire campus."

Arthur Merrill, member of Student Legislature, spoke confidently of Lawler's conscientious ability. He further pointed out the candidate's experience as a legislator and as past chairman of the ways and means committee.

Honor Council member Walter Dellinger expressed sentiments similar to George Campbell, and added that he was "always impressed with Mike's dynamic individuality and ability to associate himself with the needs of many and varied student groups."

Fran Roth, new president of the Pan-Hellenic Council, summed up Lawler as "very intelligent" and being a candidate who will "give the office new ideas with creative imagination."

'80 Pct. Rule: A Vile Inequity'

An Open Letter to Clifton Kreps, Chairman of the Faculty on Fraternities and Sororities—

Sir, there exists on this campus an inequity so vile, a blemish so repugnant, that it defies true description. I am speaking of the so-called "80%-Rule." It has existed beyond any realm of logic, and it must be disposed of before any sensibility returns.

Fraternities have been put into a separate category, and the members are now designated differently than other students. This author realizes that this is not the expressed intention of the Rule, but it is implicit in its existence.

For the privilege of living together a fraternity must sustain a certain average; one which is higher than the campus average; one which is higher than that which any athlete must obtain to participate in athletics. As a matter of fact, the number of student organizations for which a member must sustain a minimum average is extremely small.

Why is this discrimination allowed to exist? Is there, as has been whispered, a conscious effort on the part of the faculty to rid the campus of fraternities?

The writer is forced to ask "why". There is no logical reason behind this banality. All reason rebels against the shackles so arbitrarily fastened.

Faculty members questioned on this say that this Rule will only be replaced when the Interfraternity Council comes up with a better plan. But the writer is impelled to ask WHY any plan is necessary. Are fraternities so hedonistic in nature that they must be curtailed and harrassed? Are there no other sources of trouble on campus that the onus of guilt must be borne by fraternities?

Let us assume that the IFC does arrive at a plan accepted by all the principals. Does this solve the scholastic problems of the campus? Of course not. It merely puts a check on a group which constantly has an average higher than that of the campus average.

The writer doesn't dispute the right of the administration to set up a minimum scholastic average for participation in extracurriculars—if this included ALL extracurriculars. Through some twisted variation of logic, it appears that a decision was reached whereby fraternity membership is the only activity so burdened. To placate the conscience of a system too lax in its scholastic regulations this "stranglehold" was applied to fraternities. This is akin to cutting off one's nose to spite one's face.

Further, one must ask why the entire house is penalized for a small minority who fail to make their grades. If sixty young men constitute the membership of a fraternity, the failure of only twelve will suffice to veritably "clap them all in irons." Regardless of the house average, which a majority is above 2.0, a house is put in scholastic disgrace due to the actions of a few. Regardless of the number of men on "Dean's List," or in scholastic honorary societies, they are all condemned to an academic "Devil's Island."

Why "Devil's Island?" For like that infamous prison isle, rush probation makes it quite hard to recover, let alone ever return. Those that do return are extremely hard-pressed for existence. This hardship is one that no other student group must undergo, no matter how low their mean average is.

Is this fair? Reasonable? Even logical? If the basis for this Rule is that the house should be responsible for its members, scholastically, this writer would like to propose a parallel plan to this. Is it reasonable that 80% of the faculty must produce research work or novels in a limited time, or the entire faculty is held irresponsible and inefficient? As ridiculous as this idea is, so is the plan of the administration to handicap fraternities.

Sir, this writer would like an answer to the above questions; an explanation to this outrage. The mind cries out at such a perverted system of thought that squelches individuality and encourages a schism in the student body.

"We Have Our Own Little Alianza"

The Editorship

The race for the editorship of this newspaper has this year been a violently, often viciously, contested race.

From this vantage point, it looks as if the race has narrowed to a choice of two possibilities, a Wrye-Clotfelter ticket opposed by write-in candidate Mike Mathers.

It appears that these two are both running ahead of the third candidate, Ernest Stepp. Although elections have a peculiar quality of unpredictability on this campus, odds are far better than even that either Wrye-Clotfelter or Mathers will be elected, possibly only after a run-off election.

We have worked closely with Wrye, Clotfelter and Mathers. Perhaps it would be appropriate to point out now that the Wrye-Clotfelter ticket was not conceived as a political maneuver designed to offset some of the wrath incurred by Clotfelter with the popularity enjoyed by Wrye. The ticket is a dual one in every sense of the word. Wrye should temper some of Clotfelter's irrepressibility and contribute strongly both as an organizer and an editorialist. He will not, we believe, be the lesser influence of the co-editorship. Clotfelter has written more news, features and editorial page material than anyone now on the staff. He would continue, we think, to put in long hours in the paper's production. With Wrye as a steadying influence, the combination could easily be the most effective since the days of Ed Yoder and Louis Kraar.

Mathers has been easily the best advertising manager to work for the DTH in many years.

His organizational ability is unquestioned, his own work near-perfect. Politically, he could probably be best characterized as moderate, with the balance tipped toward conservatism. Most of his work has been with the business staff, but he has made contributions to the editorial page. He would, we feel, be an effective and efficient organizer, fair in his treatment of editorial material and a steady and dependable editor.

Wrye and Clotfelter would put out the more stimulating paper, we are confident. We are equally confident that Mathers would put out a solid one.

The choice is yours.

Hang The Rules

One of the more difficult feats for a campus politician to pull off is to ride into office on a write-in vote. Not only must he make his name so well-known that a majority of students will remember it, but he must also make his position so strong that voters will buck the printed ballot and write in his name.

* * *

The psychological disadvantages of this are almost overwhelming. Never, to our knowledge, has a major office been won by a write-in candidate. However, there is perhaps no right more basic to representative democratic government than that of the voter to cast an effective ballot for the candidate he feels is most qualified.

Recently, the chairman of the Elections Board ruled that since the Student Constitution does not provide for write-in balloting, and the Elections Laws make it mandatory for a candidate to attend a compulsory meeting, turn in a petition, etc., before he can officially be considered in the running, write-in votes would not be counted.

* * *

Here, as in another recent case involving the Elections Laws, the decision was reached through pointing to the letter of the law, without real consideration of the intent. The purpose of the regulations concerning candidacy is to insure proper filing and guarantee that campaigns will be run on an equitable and honest basis. The intent is clearly not to deprive a candidate of the right to enter a race late in the campaign, nor to shut out a candidate whom the electorate chooses.

* * *

Electioneering on this campus can, and often does, reach a fever pitch. The regulations covering candidacy and campaigning, in general, serve effectively in keeping candidates from translating political zeal into fraudulence. In this, they are both proper and desirable. But, when interpreted so rigidly that they block open elections, they become antithetical to their own purpose.

* * *

According to five sections of the Elections Law, the Student Constitution and the by-laws of the Publications Board, write-in candidates for Editor of the DTH will not be considered official candidates.

* * *

But none of these regulations are worth the paper they're printed on if they deny the campus the basic right of choice.

Vote as you like, and the rules be hanged.

S.P. Recalls U. P. Record

To the Editor:

Several people have questioned the statistics presented in my first letter to the editor, in which I stated that over the last four years, the Student Party had introduced 77.7% of all legislation passed.

Bills introduced by legislators who were double-endorsed are included within the statistics of both parties. The party assignment was made according to the true party sympathies of the legislators as demonstrated by party membership and attendance at party meetings and caucuses. For instance, bills introduced by double-endorsed legislators Joe Oppenheimer and Pete Thompson were included within the statistics given for the University Party, those introduced by Bill Whichard, Bruce Welch, and Bill Miller are included within statistics for the Student Party.

During the debate in Cobb, Inman Allen raised this question and stated that all candidates endorsed by the UP had to be members of the party. Fortunately, Bill Whichard was present to contradict this statement.

And speaking further of legislative records, it is interesting to note that the UP big four candidates, as legislators, voted against several items during the past year which appear in this year's platform. When the Carrier Current bill was introduced by the SP during the 30th Assembly, Representatives Inman Allen and Judy Clark voted to keep the bill in committee and not allow it to ever be discussed on the floor. In the 31st Assembly, Inman Allen, Judy Clark, and Bill Crisswell (Larry McDevitt was absent) voted against the program of paid intramural managers which was proposed by the Student Party.

There are two reasons why someone could vote NO on a proposal. It could be because the proposed program was not broad enough, or it could be a reflection of a negative attitude toward the whole proposal. However, it is interesting to note that in the above cases, UP never tried to amend either bill, or to introduce any counter proposal. They simply voted NO.

—John Randall,
Parliamentarian of the Student Legislature

Editor Blasted; U. P. Scored

To the Editor:

As I begin, let me state my purpose as criticizing editorial policies of the DTH; otherwise I fear this point might be obscured through the very policies I am attacking.

Surely you agree that I have every right to expect that it might be. On March 19 I delivered to you a letter to the editor which, when it finally appeared on March 22, was not printed in its entirety. You shortened it at your discretion, but made no mention of these imissions to the reader.

The letter concerned your poorly-written editorial on March 17 entitled "A Candidate . . . ".

My primary purpose was to point out the injustice you did a certain candidate. Where your argument should have been directed at what you considered a faulty elections law, you turned rather to assail an individual. Then after saying you believed one thing about his intention, you implied another, namely that he was unethical. If anyone appeared to display a lack of ethics, I think it was clearly you in your editorial.

This purpose I stated in the obvious place for it, second only to a brief introduction designed to catch the reader's eye. How could anyone with your editorial wisdom omit my purpose statement?

As I write this, only four issues of the DTH remain before the campus elections, and you apparently have not yet encouraged or allowed a policy statement by any party-endorsed Big Four candidate. No student can say that he has been assisted in making a wise voting decision by anything that has appeared in the DTH. Is this what we spend $25,381.74 and pay you personally $650.00 for?

Since the above incident is proof enough to me that everything I read in the DTH may well be altered and slanted by the editors, I feel compelled to warn my fellow readers that, especially in the season of politics, we can not be too careful about placing faith in what we read in the DTH. What a tragedy.

Trusting that this letter will be printed in its entirety, I remain a reader.

U. P. Rehashed S. P. Platform

To the Editor:

A copy of the University Party platform was slipped under my door the other night, and it seems to me that the UP is merely advocating things that have already been done and is increasing the duplication and bureaucracy in Student Government.

For instance, the UP advocates dormitory libraries. The Student Legislature passed an SP-sponsored bill just this past Thursday to begin such a program.

The UP advocates establishing a Commerce Committee. The functions of this proposed committee are already being handled by the Campus Affairs Board and the Bad Check Committee.

Also the UP advocates establishing a Committee for Physical Development. The proposed functions of this committee are presently handled by either the Campus Affairs Board and the University Traffic and Safety Committee or are to be handled by the Dormitory Improvements Committee established by the Legislature Thursday night.

In addition, two other points in the UP platform are things that the UP voted against last year in the Legislature: a paid intramural manager program and carrier current.

Reflections

Campaign promise made by a Cobb legislative candidate: "Two Girls in Every Cobb Room . . . Next Year."

Wrye And Clotfelter Endorsed By Baker

Dear Fellow Student,

Having considered the eligibility of all the candidates running for editor of the Daily Tar Heel, we want to call your attention to Chuck WRYE and Jim CLOTFELTER.

As officers representing all phases of campus life, we are very interested in seeing the most capable leadership given to this important position.

We recognize the primary qualifications for the editorship as being experience, strong ability in every aspect of putting out the paper, and the recognition of the Tar Heels' rple as an independent entity, free from control by special interests.

Wrye and Clotfelter are the only official candidates who have held staff positions on the Tar Heel, and in these offices they have worked actively and effectively.

While Chuck was broadening the scope of the sports department by his work there, he also received valuable experience in every step of the paper's production from the print shop to writing for the editorial page. Since his freshman year, Jim has served as news editor, assistant to the editor, and has been a regular editorial columnist.

Their work in student government, the athletic department, and divergent phases of student activity will give them the broad base of knowledge necessary for responsible news coverage.

We have talked to the candidates and find that their experience, combined with their proposed programs and ideas, warrant our endorsement of them as the most qualified leadership for the Daily Tar Heel.

Signed:

Earl Baker, President, Young Republicans Club.
Harry Bloom, varsity swimming.
Larry Brown, Vice-President, Junior Class; varsity basketball.
Thompson Mann, varsity swimming.
Harrison Merrill, Treasurer, Freshman Class.
Hank Patterson, Vice-President, Student Body.
Mike Putzel, President, Young Americans for Freedom.
Fran Roth, President, Pan-Hellenic Council.
Donnie Walsh, varsity basketball.

Robinson's Ramblings

Last week I thought Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye had some newspaper sense. After reading their statement in Sunday's DTH on how they want the paper to have its own printing plant, I know positively that neither of these fellows are fit to be dog catchers, let alone editors of a newspaper.

They said a down payment on a press would be $7,000. True. But it takes a heck of a lot more to run a newspaper than a press. Things like three dozen sets of different type at $400 a set; linotype machines at $23,000 each; an engraving machine; a headline making machine; a casting furnace and a suitable building to put all these machines. Total $150,000. And at that it would be a shoddy printing plant.

Then there is the small matter of getting printers to run these machines. A minimum of three men are needed, so this would cost about $150 every week of the year. Yes, they'd have to be paid even when the DTH wasn't printed, because it's impossible to employ printers only when school is in session.

"The campus would get a better paper at less cost," they said. This is absurd. To spend $100,000 and more on a hare-brained idea like this, is to foster a putrid farce on the student body.

Not that they would do it deliberately, but whether a farcical goal is sought for good or bad motives the result is still the same: a farce.

If these so-called responsible candidates could come up with such an ill-founded impractical scheme on short notice, then what kind of ideas could their astigatised minds produce in a year of running the DTH?

Another reason that makes their idea so ludicrous, is that write-in candidate Mike Mathers, as a Publications Board member, has been chairman of a committee to look into the feasibility of the DTH having its own printing plant. Wouldn't he have used this issue if there had been some substance to it? Certainly, he has the facts which Clotfelter and Wyre are desperately in need of.

Mathers is cool headed, efficient, fair minded and most important he has the facts at his command before he acts.

This brings us to the challenge by Dave Buxton, chairman of the elections board, that Mathers' candidacy is not legal. This is pure bunk. Since when does an appointive student government official set himself up as God Almighty in order to thwart democratic processes?

If Mathers gets the votes, he will be the next editor. This is a fact.

The positions in student government are important not only from a party viewpoint, but from the individual viewpoint of the 9,000 students on this campus. Speaking for Larry McDevitt, Judy Clark, and Bill Criswell as well as the other University Party candidates, I want to say we are all interested and will work actively to expand student government and its services to more directly affect and benefit each student on this campus. This we believe in; this we will work for.

More Letters To The Editor On Eve Of Spring Balloting

To the Editor:

I have nothing against a newspaper showing partiality on its editorial page; I am convinced that this privilege is the essence of journalism, particularly on the campus level where the editorial takes precedence over news coverage. But I was highly incensed to read your editorial endorsing particular candidates for NSA. It was not the fact that you chose to recommend certain other candidates (I had not expected that a conservative candidate such as I would be favored by a person of your views), but it was the implication inherent in the words "Of the eight men running, four have the necessary ability and experience . . ." that I resent. I shall not argue with you; I shall simply list my qualifications and challenge any of the other candidates with the exception of Messrs. Patterson and Harris to excel them.

During my three and one-half semesters here I have managed to be elected to the Student Legislature, in which I have served for a year, the last six weeks as elected sergeant-at-arms. I have been active in the Student Party, serving on the advisory board since last October. I have also participated in the band, the YMCA and have held office in my social fraternity. I have also proven my ability to speak publicly by winning the North-South Carolina Key Club Oratorical Contest while in high school. While taking part in these various activities, I have managed to maintain a 3.5 qp average and have been initiated into Phi Eta Sigma honorary scholastic fraternity while being a member of the Freshman and Sophomore Honors Programs.

I believe my political views have been adequately expressed in previous issues of the Tar Heel, so I shall rest my case with the preceding.

DICK AKERS

To the Student Body:

The slate of candidates endorsed by the Tar Heel for NSA represents only one political viewpoint and thus defeats the purpose of NSA which is to serve as an exchange of conflicting ideas.

If the editor's slate of candidates is elected, Carolina will again be represented by an exclusively liberal voice. Such a delegation cannot claim to represent campus political feeling but only one segment of it. A vote for the editor's favored candidates as a slate will further the concept that only liberals on this campus deserve a spokesman.

On the other hand, the University Party has presented a slate of candidates which proposes to represent all major areas of campus political thought. Liberals have a voice in Bill Imes and Joe Masi (already recognized by Editor King as able spokesmen. Representing conspokesmen). Representing constrong and Charles Heatherly. This slate is balanced and will present a true picture of political feeling at UNC.

For the first time, students will decide today whether they wish to send a delegation to NSA fostering a single political creed or if they desire representation for all segments of campus feeling.

—Jack Young

To the Editor:

Reasoning in accord with Bob Somer's logic as expressed in Saturday's DTH, why doesn't he stay off the editorial page and leave it for undergraduates?

—Al Cronenberg

To the Editor:

As a candidate for Secretary of the Student Body, I am concerned with informing the Student Body of my qualifications for this office. This year I have served in two secretarial positions in Student Government, Clerk of the Student Legislature and Secretary of the Budget Committee.

My work in the Legislature has given me the opportunity to become aware of the policy making procedures of Student Government. My work with the Budget Committee has given me the opportunity to become familiar with the financial structure of Student Government. I feel that this experience would prove of invaluable aid to me in fulfilling my responsibilities to the Executive Branch. I have been in Student Government work for three years here, and in this time I have worked with various Student Government Committees. This work would help me to organize a secretariat which could efficiently serve the many committees of Student Government. I have the time to devote to this office, and I am very interested in having the opportunity to fulfill the responsibilities which would be mine if elected to this position. In view of these qualifications, I ask your consideration for this office.

—Judy Clark
University Party Candidate For Secretary of the Student Body

To the Editor:

During the past few days, Inman Allen, UP presidential candidate, has attempted to associate himself with the dorm man by claiming much of the credit for "saving Ruffin" and in this attempt he has been supported by certain of the members of the "Save Ruffin Committee."

It should be understood by everyone that the composition of this committee was somewhat informal. Although the members were appointed by the president, Walter Derrick, many others who were not appointed, considered themselves to be a member of the committee. Charlie Wright, who signed his name to the Sunday letter in support of Allen as a members of the committee, was not appointed to the committee. If Wright is to be considered as a member of the committee, such persons as Kelly Eanes, Sam Bryan, Fred Horton, and Gerry Good would also have to be included. Some of these persons were appointed to the committee and all of them worked to "save" Ruffin. None of them signed Sunday's letter which was supposed to represent the "unanimous opinion" of the members of the "Save Ruffin" Committee.

Allen said that he advised the committee against circulating the petition campus wide. I fail to see how there could ever have been any question on this point since we were limited for time and such a venture would take weeks.

Many of the Ruffinites who worked to "save" Ruffin resent Allen's attempt to make political hay out of Ruffin's predicament. The thing that turned the tide for Ruffin was the model dorm plan suggested by Jim Gaulden, and drawn up by John Ghoul, Roger Asher, and Gerry Good. To these people, to the IDC, and to all the residents of Ruffin goes the real credit for saving Ruffin.

DR. CATHY

Dr. Cathy Selected Teacher-Of-Month

Dr. Cornelius O. Cathy of the Historical department has been selected as the Junior Class Teacher-of-the-Month for March. The selection was announced by Junior Class President Richard Vinroot and Chairman Jeff Guller. Dr. Cathy is the second faculty member to receive the award.

Unselfish Devotion

"The Junior Class wishes to honor Dr. Cathy because of the unselfish and conscientious devotion to the University of North Carolina and its student body that he has shown in the past years. His adherence in the precepts of academic freedom has been tempered by the highest standards of good taste and respect for scholarship. Dr. Cathy, whenever possible, has taken the time to establish personal, meaningful relationships with his students. Additionally, he is one of the most active members of the faculty, with several published historical works; and on campus, serving as the Chairman of the University Scholarship Committee," read the award.

Dr. Cathy was born in Davidson in 1908. He received both his B.A. and M.A. at Davidson College before teaching for six years at several junior colleges in the state. During the depression, the UNC Professor of History headed one of FDR's CCC camps. In 1937, Dr. Cathy came to Chapel Hill and enrolled in Carolina's graduate history school. However, World War II caused him once again to be interrupted in his studies.

Puerto Rico

The war took Dr. Cathy to Puerto Rico for three years and then to England, where he held the position of lieutenant colonel. Finally discharged in March 1946, he returned to UNC as a teacher. In 1948, after eight years of waiting, Dr. Cathy received his Ph.D. Since then, Dr. Cathy has taught as a Carnegie Visiting Professor at Columbia University in 1950-51, where he was instrumental in establishing a social science program now used by many universities throughout the country including Carolina. He has also taught at the University of Wyoming in the summers of 1954 and 1957, "Where the weather is cool, and the fishing just great."

For eight years, Dr. Cathy was a General College Advisor. At times he had to take care of over 400 students a semester, and "the only ones you got to know were the flunk-outs." Offering some suggestions of the current advisory system, Dr. Cathy feels that much of the responsibility for improving the system rests with the students. "They should not wait until the last minute of registration to discuss problems with their advisor."

After being a member of the University Scholarship Committee since 1948, Dr. Cathy became its chairman. He is in charge of administrating all UNC scholarships, excluding the Moreheads.

Kennedy sums up his first year in office

"I don't think most Americans realize," says JFK, "the way the situation has changed." In this week's Post, in an authoritative article based on talks with the President and his chief advisers, Stewart Alsop tells how Kennedy has revamped U.S. strategy. What was behind his struggle with the Pentagon. And how the new plans are working out.

academic standards might remain high. The Student Party platform has set forth several ideas which would stimulate academic interest:

1. Establishment of a Fine Arts Degree;
2. Acquiring of a well-known writer in residence;
3. A plan to develop a Counter-University which would establish closer relationship between professors and students;
4. A system of lectures, discussions and symposiums in order that each student might be aroused about problems confronting our school, state and nation; and
5. An increased program for our Academic Affairs Committee so that positive suggestions can be made to the faculty about course improvements.

Higher Individual Standards

The work to be done to improve academic standards should be directed toward individual higher standards rather than improved standards by the faculty.

The Student Party platform is concerned with EVERY area of our campus, both socially and academically.

Athletes In Politics

Campus politics are the center of attraction today and a number of UNC athletes are right in the middle of some of the political battles.

Dean Smith's basketball team has three representatives vying for political posts in Dick Vinroot, Larry Brown, and Charlie Shaffer. Vinroot and Brown are presently president and vice-president, respectively, of the junior class and are running for the same senior class offices on the Student Party ticket.

Shaffer, also a member of Don Skakle's tennis team and a football prospect for next fall, is running uncontested for president of the Carolina Athletic Association. Shaffer is endorsed by both the Student Party and University Party.

Pud Hassell, a starter on Ken Rosemond's talented freshman basketball squad, is a UP student legislature candidate in Dorm Men's District II.

Several members of Jim Hickey's football team are also running for offices. Opposing basketballers Vinroot and Brown are Roger Smith, presidential candidate, and Bruce Greene, vice-presidential candidate. Smith is UP endorsed, while Greene is running as an independent.

Clint Eudy, a Morehead scholar and rising sophomore on the football team, is running for legislature in Dorm Men's District III. Eudy is endorsed by the UP.

In the same district, Gordon Appell (SP), one of Sam Barnes' wrestlers, is running.

Whitney Durand, another Tar Heel wrestler, is a candidate for honor council in District IV. A third UNC grappler, John Ulfelder, is running for legislature in Town Men's District II on the UP ticket.

A Look At Predictions

Last week we correctly predicted the winners of the four semifinal games in the NCAA and NIT tournaments, but our win margins predicted for the games were far from fantastic. Ohio State was our choice over Wake Forest by 10, they won by 16. Cincinnati was our pick over UCLA by 15, they eked out a two-point victory.

In the NIT we missed St. John's 10-point win over Duquesne by three, as we picked the Redmen by 7. But Dayton romped over Loyola of Chicago by 16 and we picked the Flyers by 4.

But the finals and consolation games played havoc with our picks. Our choices for the championships, Ohio State and St. John's were KO'd by Cincy and Dayton, while Loyola beat Duquesne in the NIT consolations for another error on our part. We salvage one correct pick by choosing Wake Forest over UCLA for third place in the NCAA playoffs for 5-8 for the week and 16-20 for both weeks.

'We Sinned'

After we picked Wake to fall to Ohio State, Adrian King, Assistant Editor of the Wake Forest "Old Gold and Black," sent us a serious, yet amusing letter. In this column we incorrectly stated that the Baptist College had 4,307 undergraduates and King informed yours truly that the correct figure was 2,305 and 2,678 including grad students. Other excerpts:

"Secondly, out of that 2,678, only 5 disgruntled Deacon fans 'lovingly' hanged the boys in effigy. The disgruntled 5 were promptly denounced by the remaining 2,673!"

"Turning to your predictions, I sincerely trust your observations to be 'fouled' in tonight's game. Of course we will all know about 9:30 tonight. As we see the situation, how can we lose? Billy Graham (on the campus for a 3-day visit) has said we will win; therefore, it would seem that God is on our side. Somebody was there when we played Yale and St. Joe's team."

The envelope accompanying the air mail special delivery letter was bedecked with 37 cents worth of stamps and resembled something from the Pentagon.

A second letter from the paper's assistant editor, postmarked 9 a.m. Saturday, was not so lengthy. It read:

"Ed: We sinned and fell short of the glory of God . . . (Ohio State 84, Wake Forest 68)."

Amen.

Wet Field Cancels Opener; Tar Baby Nine Plays Today

A muddy field cancelled the scheduled opener for Coach Walt Rabb's baseball team yesterday with Ithaca College of New York, but Bruce Crump's freshman team will open its season this afternoon at 3 against Wilmington Junior College.

Rabb's men will try to open their home schedule again tomorrow when they play host to Yale.

The varsity Tar Heels ran their record to 2-1 Saturday when they beat Georgia Southern 2-1 in 10 innings on Heyward Hull's home run. Earlier in the week the Heels had split two games with Florida, winning 13-9 and losing 3-1.

Andy Billesdon, a sophomore, pitched four innings of hitless relief to gain the win against Georgia Southern. Larry Jenkins had worked the first six innings, yielding only one run.

Jon Weber Is First Pentathlon Champ

UNC News Bureau

University of North Carolina sportsdom has its first "Modern Pentathlon" champion.

Jon Weber of New York City, 20-year-old rising senior, puts in 26 hours a week, seven days every week, getting in shape for the Modern Pentathlon at Fort Sam Houston, San Antonio, Texas, next summer.

Weber stands a good chance of being among the first four in the Pentathlon, and a representative of the United States in the international Pentathlon in Mexico.

Last year, at the age of 19, in an outdoor pool, in a pouring rain storm, and with choppy weather, this young man broke the national record and equalled the world's record in the 300-meter freestyle swim event of the modern Pentathlon with a time of 3:41.6 minutes, beating out another great junior prospect from Stanford University.

He works daily to improve his prowess in five events: steeplechase riding, fencing, pistol shooting, swimming and riding.

Sixth Last Year

Last year at Fort Sam Houston, Weber was number six in the running. This year he hopes to make the team.

The Modern Pentathlon competition is sponsored by the U. S. Army. The Army adopted the idea to fit the running, shooting, riding, swimming and swordsmanship characteristcs of a traditional good soldier.

A cool, moderately built, friendly fellow, weighing 150 pounds and five feet eight inches tall, Weber is a good physical specimen of taut but relaxed mein. "The Pentathlon teaches how to stay alert in one kind of emergency, yet to be relaxed and vigilant in another kind. It teaches how to cope with a change of pace," says Jon.

For example, he finds that swimming and fencing call for a certain amount of tension of the muscles just prior to action and during action. But firing the pistol requires the utmost in cool and relaxed concentration.

"You can't let your mind wander when you're shooting," said Weber.

Daily Regimen

His daily regimen is something like this: On Monday he runs around the woods and hills of Chapel Hill from 8 to 9 o'clock. He shoots at the rifle range from 11 to 12. He fences from 4 to 5 and he swims in the Bowman Gray Pool from 5 to 6.

On Tuesdays he swims from 8 to 9, runs from 4 to 5 and shoots from 5 to 6.

On Wednesdays he runs from 8 to 9, fences from 4 to 5, and swims from 5 to 6.

Thursdays he swims from 8 to 9, fences from 4 to 5, and swims from 5 to 6.

On Fridays he runs from 8 to 9, rides from 2 to 3, fences from 4 to 5 and swims from 5 to 6.

Saturday he swims from 8 to 9, and rides from 4 to 6.

On Sunday he rides from 10 to 12 and runs from 2 to 3:30.

In his swimming he works out at the Bowman Gray pool, with other UNC swimmers. He fences with Pebley Barrow, who teaches fencing, and with others. He runs informally often with members of Coach Dale Ranson's track team. He rides horses three or four days a week with Bill Gosling, former English steeplechase rider, at a Durham ridng academy. He shoots at targets at the Institute of Government's rifle range, the training quarters of police and highway patrolmen.

Weber considers the steeplechase among the most harrowing of the events. Last summer he fell once, injured his back and was laid up for a while. But he is mended now, and ready to go for a grueling eight weeks of practice at Fort Sam Houston before the final contests in August.

Distances in the Pentathlon consist of 5,000 meters in the steeplechase, 25 jumps. The shooting is .22 caliber pistols, aimed at silhoutted moving targets. The swimming event is 300 meters, and the running is 4,000 meters cross country, with obstacles and sometimes rough terrain.

Jon Weber's backer in the Pentathlon is Brigadier-General (Ret.) John V. Gromback of New York City, a former athlete himself and follower of the sport. Gromback, an insurance man, is the mentor and general supporter of Weber's training and entry in the competition. Gromback said, "You are our brightest Junior hope."

A fine athlete, Weber also is a good student. He consistently makes the dean's list in the University, and majors in history. His minor is in international studies. He may go further into political science studies in Graduate School and follow a diplomatic career.

Weber's friend Gromback writes: "The United States of America has never won a first place in the Modern Pentathlon at any Olympics or World Championships eithe in team or individual since its beginning in 1912 when Gen. "Blood 'n Guts" Patton was our first M.P. Olympics representative, placing sixth.

"Our failure is attributed to the fact that we do not start early enough in the M.P. as do other nations, nor have we been able to interest clubs and colleges in this event. In Sweden, which has produced the greatest number of individual and team winners in this event, boys start in high school, and most competitors are college men who last four to eight years in top competition. Lars Hall won two Olympic gold medals and would have won a third had it not been for a serious accident in riding.

"Here in America, MP candidates are usually selected in the Army, after college, based upon one individual sport. These have to become competent in four other sports and cannot do it at that age. Recently, efforts have been made to find junior prospects in the U. S. The brightest of these is Jon Weber of the University of North Carolina.

"Weber is training hard in riding and in pistol shooting with the Navy ROTC of the University of North Carolina and has shown outstanding aptitude in fencing.

Tennis Team Tops Spartans

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The North Carolina tennis team won its third straight match of the young season and fifteenth straight over two years yesterday afternoon, as the Tar Heels downed Michigan State, 7-2.

Coach Don Skakle's netters were not as sharp as last week, when they easily downed touch Dartmouth twice, but, when pressed, they easily downed tough Dartplay which iced the victory.

Sophomores Ted Hoehn, John "Bitsy" Harrison, and Charlie Shaffer, playing in the third, fourth and fifth singles slots, all won their matches in straight sets.

Hoehn, who mixes his shots with many twists and spins, beat Tom Jamieson, 6-2, 6-3 while Shaffer downed Ron Lickmann by a like score. Harrison was a little harder-pressed but rode his big serve to a 6-4, 6-4 win over Jack Damson.

George Sokol, playing in the number one spot for Skakle, beat Brian Eisner, 6-2, 4-6, 6-2 while Captain Keith Stoneman, in the number two position, was also extended to three sets before winning, 6-1, 5-7, 6-4 over Dick Colby. The victory was Stoneman's 22nd straight over a two-year period.

UNC's Kirby Jones was the only Tar Heel singles loser, as he dropped a 6-4, 6-4 decision to the Spartans' Tom Wierman.

Carolina took two of the three doubles matches, dropping the number one contest in the best match of the day.

Hoehn and Harrison teamed up to beat Michigan State's Jamieson and Damson, 6-1, 4-6, 6-0 while Carlton Garland and Stan Cocke won UNC's other point in doubles with a 6-3, 6-2 verdict over State's Lickmann and Bill Lau

In the feature doubles event, Stoneman and Shaffer dropped a 6-2, 9-7 thriller to Eisner and Colby, who came from a 2-3 deficit to get the win. Carolina goes after win number four this afternoon at 2:00 when the Tar Heels entertain MIT.

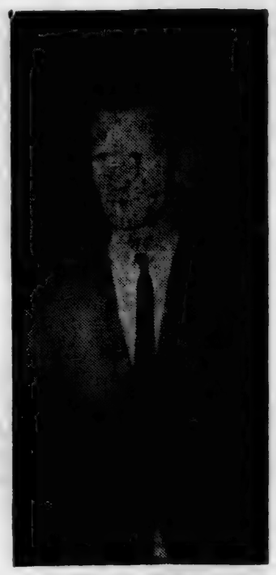
Mathers Leads For Editorship



MIKE MATHERS

Runoff Against Clotfelter-Wrye Appears Likely

Unofficial totals late last night indicated that write-in candidate Mike Mathers would compete with Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye in a runoff campaign next Tuesday for editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

Mathers, who entered the race only yast Friday, showed a total of 1590 unofficial votes. The Clotfelter-Wrye duo was in second with 1125, and Ernest Stepp was third with 1078.

Clotfelter indicated that he would definitely take part in a runoff election if official totals showed him to be second. Stepp, who was out of town, was unavailable for comment.

Elections board Chairman Dave Buxton indicated that the Board would not tally Mathers' vote last night.

UP Nominee Wins By 340 Over Wheless

By HARRY LLOYD

The University Party completed a near sweep in balloting for the top student government offices yesterday by capturing the offices of President, Secretary, and Treasurer and orcing a runoff for Vice President.

University Party presidential nominee Inman Allen piled up a staggering majority over Dwight Wheless in the fraternity voting districts yesterday to take a 340-vote plurality.

Dwight Wheless, the Student Party choice, finished second. Final totals gave Allen 2064, with 1724 for Wheless and 241 for independent candidate Larry Phelps.

Allen thus received a clear majority of 99 votes, to end the one-year reign of the Student Party in campus government.

With the early votes in, Wheless held a slight lead. But when the town voting districts were tallied, Allen captured the top spot. Totals for the Scuttlebutt district gave him a 153-13 lead over Wheless.

Elections board chairman Dave Buxton said that the official winner would be picked in an election set for next Tuesday. McDevitt indicated that he wanted to face Lawler in a runoff for the post.

Judy Clark, the UP candidate for secreary, got the biggest vote of the day. Miss Clark was strong in the men's dorms as well as in the normally strong UP areas to poll a total of 2405. Lindsay Raiford finished 800 votes back with 1606. In the battle of ex-party chairmen, Bill Criswell won a 200-plus vote majority over Jimmy Weeks. Criswell tallied 2076 as to 1859 for Weeks.

In the election for NSA delegates, Bill Harriss and Hank Patterson easily picked off the top two positions. Dick Akers finished third.

Unofficial totals gave UP candidate Mac Armstrong a 2-vote plurality over Bill Straughn.

Independent vice-presidential candidate John Salter polled only 203 votes, but they were enough to force the issue to a second election.

Graham Film Approved By Legislature

By ROBERT STEPHENS

The Student Legislature finance committee voted yesterday afternoon to introduce a bill in the legislature appropriating $2500 for a TV film biography of Dr. Frank Graham's life.

The film is to be a ten part series, mostly depicting Dr. Graham talking with friends from various parts of his life. WUNC-TV will be in charge of the film, but Student Government will have priority in its use.

The bill points out that few men have contributed as much to UNC and the state as Dr. Graham and that Student Government owes its existence in its present form to the former UNC president.

The committee voted $750 to help the senior class buy a gift for the University.

The committee also voted $25 to start a news sheet for the dormitory girls.

Quarterly May Sell Out Soon

Jerome Stern, Carolina Quarterly editor, announced yesterday that the response to the second issue of the Quarterly has been "phenomenal."

"We expect to break all sales records," he said. "There is a definite revival of interest in the Quarterly. And people are showing their interest in the best possible way—by buying copies of the Quarterly."

Sommer Fund Established By Friends

As a tribute to the late Dr. Clemens Sommer's service to the Art Department and the University of North Carolina, a fund has been established in his honor to endow a prize or scholarship for a student of art history.

Dr. Sommer, who was recently killed in an automobile accident, had been a member of the faculty of the Art Department since 1939. He was largely responsible for the sound and scholarly foundation of the study of the history of art at Chapel Hill.

Conscious of Dr. Sommer's important contributions to the Department and the University, some of his colleagues, friends and students have created this fund which will serve as a visible and continuing memorial.

Those wishing to contribute may mail their checks to the treasurer of the fund, John M. Schnorrenberg, Ackland Art Center, Chapel Hill, North Carolina. Checks should be made payable to the "University of North Carolina" and should be marked "Sommer Fund."

Scenes somewhat similar to the one above were duplicated at 35 other places on campus yesterday. The above balloting is in McIver Dorm, where Nancy Barr is tending the vote box. The good weather and hot interest resulted in a near record turnout for a Student Government election.

Glenn Smiles On Exchange With Soviets

HOUSTON, Tex. (UPI)—Astronaut John Glenn said Tuesday a briefing on the next phase of the U.S. space program that he would like to swap spaceman's shop talk with the two Russians who preceded him in orbital flight.

Speaking to newsmen during a 24-hour briefing on the "Gemini" program to put two men in orbit for a rendezvous with an unmanned capsule, the Marine lieutenant colonel said more details of his epochal space flight would be released at a technical conference in Washington April 6.

The conference will give further details on his speeds in orbital flight and will "draw some conclusions" about the flight, he said. He pointed out that all American space flights have been made with no secrecy.

"We had nothing to hide and we conducted the space flights with all the world watching us," he said.

The orbital flights of Soviet cosmonauts Yuri Gagarin and Gherman Titov were made in secret, with no advance notice. Soviet scientists have given few details of what they learned.

Baxter Gives Weil Lecture In Hill Hall Tomorrow At 8

Dr. James Phinney Baxter III, senior fellow with the Council on Foreign Relations, Inc., New York, will give the 1962 Weil Lecture on citizenship at Hill Hall Thursday at 8 p.m.

Dr. Baxter's address is entitled "Citizenship in the Atomic Age."

DR. JAMES P. BAXTER

Last year, Dr. Baxter retired from his post as president of Williams College, a position which he had held since 1937. Before becoming president of Williams, he was a professor of history and master of Adams House at Harvard University. During most of the years of his presidency, he taught American diplomatic history and Naval history or the history of the balance of power.

Pulitzer Prize

In 1947 ,Dr. Baxter was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in history for his book, "Scientists Against Time." This book was on the wartime agency, the Office of Scientific Research and Development, of which Dr. Baxter was the historian. From 1941-43, Dr. Baxter was a branch head and then deputy director of the Office of Strategic Services.

A native of ortland, Maine, Dr. Baxter attended Williams College where he received B.A. and M.A. degrees. He also attended Harvard University where he received a M.A. and a Ph.D. degree.

Dr. Baxter has received the Presidential Certificates of Merit and a number of honorary degrees.

Lecturer on National Policy

In 1932, he began lecturing on the relations of force and national policy at the Naval War College. He has lectured on that problem and on its scientific aspects at the National War College, the Army War College, the Air War College, the Marine War College, the Industrial College of the Armed Forces and the Canadian Defense College.

Dr. Baxter is currently the chairman of the advisory committee on the history of the Atomic Energy Commission and a member of the advisory committee on the history of the United States Navy. He is an overseer of Harvard College and an educational advisor to the Academic Board of the United States Military Academy.

The public is invited to attend the Weil Lecture.

Loaded Wallet Held Reward For Earl Wynn

Sometimes a professor has a more profitable experience outside class than inside.

That happened this week when professor of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures Earl Wynn was in Atlanta to arrange for a gift of equipment to the University.

Having succeeded in this, Wynn was walking down the street to his hotel when he saw a suit on sale in a store-window. The suit,, reduced from $65.00 to $35.00, seemed a real bargain to Wynn, who had been thinking about getting himself a new Easter outfit anyway. The only trouble was he didn't have any money. He thought to call his wife to ask if they could afford to withdraw a sufficient amount from their checking account.

Then he saw a wallet lying in the gutter of the street. He picked it up. He looked inside.

There were three 1,000 dollar bills, and sheafs of 100's, 50's, 20's 10's and 1's. His immediate impulse was to look around to see if anyone had seen him pick it up. No one had. But being a good Presbyterian, he realized he couldn't keep it. He didn't know what to do. He started down the street, looking for a telephone to call the police.

He next saw a small, goateed man, bearing down on him.

Physicist Jay Orear Gives Answer To Teller For Peace Study Group

The split within the scientific world which has Edward Teller, the father of the H-bomb, on one side of the fence and scientists and thinkers such as Linus Pauling, Hans Beth and Bertrand Russell on the other, were discussed in a public lecture here Tuesday night when physicist and author Jay Orear of Cornell University spoke on "The Scientist Answers Edward Teller."

Dr. Orear, as chairman of the Disarmament Committee of the Federation of American Scientists, stood opposed to Teller's views in such broad matters as the H-bomb, radioactivity, fallout, disarmament, research projects and the more philosophical problem of scientific responsibility to humanity.

The lecture was conducted in Carroll Hall, under sponsorship of "Reflections Magazine," the Chapel Hill Peace Study Committee, the Carolina Forum and other organizations.

"Search For An Ethic"

Robert V. N. Brown, the "Reflections" editor, in an attempt to clarify the issues with which Orear and others are opposed to Teller, said that the "revolution within science began after the bomb (and somewhat before) was dropped on Hiroshima. If we looked for a name to give this 'revolution' we might, corny as it sounds, label it 'The Search for A Scientific Ethic.' What has been brought into the open as a result of the bomb is the problem of the scientist's responsibility both to humanity and his profession. The question is: Which is to take precedence?

"The division among contemporary scientists is not that some are for 'responsibility' and others against it, but HOW to achieve it. It is with the individual method that the breach occurs."

Father Of H-Bomb

As concerns Teller's position, Brown explains that "as father of the H-bomb he has a special claim on scientists. His brilliant theory," Brown says, "brought the bomb into existence. And it was he who convinced a reluctant government, and to a large degree a reluctant science, to proceed with scientific investigations under his guidance in order to continue the development of nuclear weapons systems."

Brown states Teller's views as being the following: (1) Against any disarmament moves on the grounds that Russia "is dedicated to the single goal of world domination" and, hence, is not to be trusted; (2) It is impossible to police or enforce a nuclear test-ban treaty; (3) Russia's weapons systems are superior to ours as a result of their research during the thee year moratorium; (4) The U.S. is not properly armed in deterent or second-strike power; (5) The U.S. must continue testing of bombs and (6) resume nuclear experiments.

Fallout Beneficial?

Among other views which Teller supports, Brown listed Teller's support of the position that nuclear weapons should be used in a "limited" war, his arguments for a "radical" system of Civil Defense to include underground schools, massive shelter programs, and his argument that the "fallout scare" is a farce. According to Brown, Teller admits that fallout will affect heredity but he raises the question of why this could not be beneficial.

Teller claims that there is such a thing as a "cean" bomb, Brown says.

Criticisms Of Teller

Critics of Teller are opposed on almost all of these points. Brown states that "although some are in agreement with the desirability of more tests, essentially no other major physicist supports his position. A chief point of their differences embraces the fallout question, the contention being that it is not a hoax. They see it, Brown says, as a danger and are reluctant to test but will on the grounds that more 'pure scientific' information, which will be of benefit to man, awaits them if they do.

Brown is of the opinion that "only technicians, the military, policy planners, and industry wholeheartedly agree with Teller's view."

Orear, who has taught at the University of Chicago, and Columbia before coming to Cornell, has published articles which discussed these problems in sufch journals as the "Bulletin of the Atomic Scientist," "The New Republic," and "The Satuday Review."

Farce

Even though returns are still unofficial at this writing, there is little doubt that voting for the three candidates for DTH editor will be so split that a run-off election between the top two candidates will be necessary to declare a winner. At this point, write-in candidate Mike Mathers is running well ahead of the other two candidates. Barring an almost phenomenal change of trend, Mathers should easily gain enough votes to be a candidate in the run-off.

Carolina politics being what they are, this situation poses some problems. Mathers still is not an official candidate. In order to get his name on a run-off ballot, he would have to be one.

In other words, even if Mathers receives enough votes to become a run-off candidate, the Elections Laws could keep his name off the run-off ballot.

He seems to have pulled off the minor miracle of running a winning write-in campaign, and doing it in the short space of theree days. If, even after this, he is not allowed to place his name on the run-off ballot, the entire system of campus elections is reduced to a farce.

Mathers had all the odds against him. He entered the race with all the chances of winning of a hobby-horse in the Kentucy Derby. He managed to win anyway.

If his name is kept off a run-off ballot, Carolina student government had just as well roll over into its grave.

It's dead.

Press Freedom

"New Horizons for Youth," a New York publication whose credo states that it "will examine and advance the democratic labor and socialist tradition of our country, including scientific socialist ideas," reported recently that its publishers have been subpoened to appear before the McCarran Act Grand Jury in Washington today.

* * *

The editors of the magazine say that the reason for the subpoena is a section under the Mccarren Act that requires any publication published "by or on behalf of the Communist Party" must brand their publication as such with the words "Disseminated by the Communist Party, U. S. A., a communist action organization."

* * *

We personally know nothing of the nature of the magazine under question, but we gather that it is firmly dedicated to socialism, civil rights and liberties and peace. The editors of the magazine have agreed to appear before the group of inquisitors and submit their records.

* * *

If any publication can be shown to have connections with the Communist Party, U. S. A., and fails to carry the label, it is subject to a $10,000 fine and/or 5 years in jail for its publishers for every single violation—that is, for every issue not carrying the label.

* * *

Among the types of evidence that may be used to prove the Communist control charge are similarity of viewpoint, the presence of one or more Communists in positions of influence, and evidence of financial support by the Party.

* * *

We have no idea whether the magazine in question is communist-linked or not. This, as a matter of then there is no reason for fear. fact, should make no difference. The question is whether any publication should be judged by its source, or simply by what it says. If this magazine, or any publication, carries nothing that directly advocates violent overthrow, then it should not be tampered with by the government.

* * *

Thomas Jefferson once wrote something to the effect that if the press is free, and men can read, Ideas, if they are freely and openly expressed can stand or fail on their own merits. No labels need be attached.

* * *

The government, rather than garroting publications which espouse controversial views, should encourage them. They are the pulse of freedom.

* * *

The McCarran Act as a whole is an unappealing bit of legislation; the section concerning publications is detestable. Communists should be heard; fascists should be heard; Nazis should be heard; anarchists, Fabians, Marxists, Socialists—the whole gamut of political opinion from ultra-right to ultra-left should be heard.

* * *

Democracy, in the free market of ideas will survive. If it does not, then let it die. Protecting it by striking at its heart, a free and outspoken press, destroys it from within.

"I'm Workin' This Side Of The Street, Buddy!"

Down With Liberals!

To All conservatives at UNC:

Young Americans for Freedom will hold a meeting this coming Wednesday, March 29, at 7:30 p.m., in Room 201 of the Law Shool. It is vitally important that every person on this campus who considers himself a conservative attend. This is the time to separate the true conservatives from the "conversationalists," the latter being those people who are constantly complaining about socialism and liberalism, but are too lazy, or too cowardly, to do anything about it.

Y.A.F., since its organization in September 1960, has grown to the point where it now has over 100 chapters, from coast to coast, and a membership of nearly forty thousand. Its chapters have played a substantial part in the election of candidates to public office in such states as Ohio, Indiana, Texas, and South Carolina. Y.A.F.'s "Rally for World Freedom," held on March 7, packed 18,000 people into Madison Square Garden, in New York. Sen. Barry Goldwater has called the phenomenal growth of Y.A.F. the "outstanding sign of hope for those who wish to see America return to the principles which made her great."

Unfortunately, the Y.A.F. chapter here at Carolina has not, up to now, come close to keeping up with other chapters around the country in activity or growth. The reason for this state of affairs is best known to Mr. Mike Putzel, self-appointed "President" of the chapter, who has recently shown his true colors by his endorsement of Jim Clotfelter for editor of the Daily Tar Heel. (I will here state the obvious, and say that Mr. Putzel's endorsement of Clotfelter is emphatically repudiated by Y.A.F.)

It is my desire and intention, however, that starting with the Wednesday meeting, the U.N.C. chapter of Y.A.F. will take its place as an active and effective force for conservatism, not only on this campus, but in the politics of North Carolina. To this end I have arranged for speeches to Y.A.F. meetings here by the conservative candidates for Congress in the 6th Congressional District. I hope that Y.A.F. can play a part in retiring the liberal incumbent of that office to private life, and replacing him with a conservative, either Republican or Democrat.

Again, I wish to emphasize that every conservative at Carolina who is serious about working for the attainment of conservative principles should come to the Y.A.F. meeting Wednesday and join us in our fight to end liberal domination of the nation, the state, and the campus. If you are not willing to fight and work for your principles, then, when the Kennedys and Sanfords run our nation and state even further into the ground, you will have no one to blame but yourself.

Letters To The Editor

'I Saw Democracy In Action'

To the Editor:

Today I saw democracy in action on this campus. A quiz had been scheduled for the night of Senator Gale McGee's address for the Carolina Symposium. The Instructor offered to reschedule the quiz one hour earlier in order that the students would be finished in time to hear that address. This proposition was offered to the class, who were to register their approval or disapproval in the form of a vote. There were 100 students in the class. The vote was 38 to 36 against. The remainder of the class did not feel concerned enough to even raise their hands at all. One of those who "didn't care" is running for a seat on the Legislature Tuesday. How often has one hour out of eight days made a letter grade difference in a course? If half the students "don't care," does Carolina really deserve the opportunity of participation in a symposium? . . . or does Carolina deserve those students? They'll be voting in '64!

Al Roper

To the Editor:

The Order of the Grail annually sponsors the Grail Mural Sports Jamboree for the purpose of bettering relations between fraternities and independent organizations. This year, however, it seems that at least three independent organizations, including, the NROTC, did not care about bettering their relations with fraternities as evidenced by the failure of these organizations to send their teams to the jamboree after signing up to participate.

Due to this inconsiderate action, several fraternity teams, including the 1961 Grail Mural champion, Phi Kappa Sigma, were denied the privelege of participating in the jamboree due to the lack of a partner.

In seeking a solution to this problem, there are several questions that need to be answered:

1. Are the NROTC unit and the other independent organizations involved turning out men who fail to meet their responsibilities?

2. Why was Phi Kappa Sigma Fraternity informed by Tommy Johnson, of the Intramural Department, that, "you are responsible for organizing your partner's team?"

3. Can such actions be tolerated without jeopardizing the future of the Grail Mural Sports Jamboree and all that the Order of the Grail stands for?

Lambda Chapter of Phi Kappa Sigma

To the Editor:

"Mrs. Connor, you wouldn't be happy if you didn't have something to fuss about," said a student to me the other day. He is so right. I wouldn't be happy if I over-looked certain things, but just the same, I would be glad if I didn't have to fuss.

The habit of dropping the empty trays on my table has improved somewhat, so has the habit of pulling a chair from my table without a by-your-leave, but it still goes on. Nearly everyday I have to jack up somebody and head them off. I asked one student the other day if I hadn't gotten it in their heads that they don't put the trays on my table. He said, "No, mam."

Yesterday, I went in the reading room on the first floor of the library to finish a book that was due upstairs. The student across the table from me stretched his legs and kept touching my feet. I stood it for a few minutes then I said; "You keep your feet on your side of the table!"

Pretty soon a student came in, snatched a chair from the table behind me, slammed it against the back of my chair. He didn't apologize or move his chair, but took his seat, so I promptly bumped him on his back with my fist, and told him to move his chair. He then said he was sorry. Who do they think they are! If they haven't got any manners, haven't got any sense when they come here, I intend to see that they have some when they leave.

Most of the students are sweet, lovely young folks. But it is shocking sometimes to run into a few thoughtless, inconsiderate ones who need someone to teach them a few things.

Carolina Quarterly Has Quality, Impact

By LEWIS BUNYATT

The second number of this year's "Quarterly" contains an extremely interesting selection of campus writing. Five poets and one short-story writer appear in the company of fourteen other poets, four pieces of fiction, and one article.

Molly Rains, a freshman, has a short piece, "A Child's Kind," in which she concerns herself with the impact of two people upon a young girl as a result of the inevitable dissolution of the childhood social fabric.

Each of the characters had become accustomed to regarding the others as some sort of eternally blissful comrades. The writer draws her situation and characters with fine perception, creating a natural framework within which she works with skill.

Sophomore Peter David Krones writes a well-constructed descriptive incident in which, for an instant, an element of the totally normal world —"wet tatters of newspapers"—becomes intensely symbolic of the way of life in which the observer finds himself.

Myles Eric Ludwig, also a sophomore, constructs an interesting essay of conventional values as reflected in nursery-rhyme ways of accounting for the world, in religion ("god & co.), and the sex game ("quoits of coitus"). Against this world he sets the possibility of direct confrontation, and the warning about its validity—"but don't let go."

Leon Rooke, UNC News Bureau reporter, has a two-part poem "Brown" in which, in a parallel fashion, he describes this enigmatic lady's two (or one?) arrivals at "Point Harbor." The tone and word choice gives a finely drawn viewpoint that is at the same time naive, wondrous, and deeply understanding of the woman's plight.

Richard Rickert, a philosophy professor at Washington College, describes the rather bizarre end of a raccoon. In a well-integrated mixture of the microcosmic death of the animal and a macrocosmic view of nature's unforgiving hierarchy, the poet brings the raccoon to "no eternity at all" and concludes with a twist of conventional worship and highway inconsequence.

Dudley Carroll, a freshman, has a long (87 lines) narrative of a "Girl in Long Hair." Here the poet sets up a powerfully emotional interaction of two time schemes: the day-to-day interminability of natives playing the ocean, and the eternal moments of love abstracted, yet inextricably and unavoidably bathed in the same present of plodding occupations. By casting this poem into a background of pagan worship, Carroll succeeds in playing off the time schemes, varying them, and re-accentuating their interdependence with a religious sort of dignity. The end result is an exciting statement of idealism and eternal dignity as incontrovertibly opposed to, and yet dependent upon, the interminable infinity of the present.

If these writers' works are at all suggestive of what Chapel Hill people can do, then it is only a pity for the whole community that more of these writers do not unite into a body of contributors sufficient to allow the "Quarterly" to turn its total attention to the campus without sacrificing its traditional quality and place as a small magazine. To this reader, the material present in this issue definitely suggests that such a group of contributors is aavilable.

Fuss About Something

We have been bombarded recently with campaign promises from SP, UP and Independent candidates such as better representation in NSA meetings, sophomore dances, social room improvement, and student-faculty communication, etc., all of which we consider to be less important than something that the entire student body and faculty really needs, could use, and we hope, wants; reading rooms and study halls. This does not mean opening charming Saunders Hall for all night study or keeping the Rendezvous Room (sans juke box) open until 5 in the morning. This means well-lit rooms, with an acoustical hum or soft almost inaudible music to subordinate the necessary noises of study, and comfortable squeak-less chairs. A new library could contain these vital rooms, but none of these "gladdaseeya" campaigners have mentioned interest in such a project. We realize that student government cannot accomplish this by itself, but acting as the voice of the campus, as a lobby group to the administration, it could speed these rooms to fruition. Everyone has his own ideas about studying and where to study; we feel that such rooms would serve all the various tastes of the studentry and would definitely lessen the fatigue of studying. Who knows, some people might discover studying and like it.

'View From The Bridge' Is Tense, Powerful Picture

By CHRIS FARRAN

Arthur Miller is a much more talented author than most people give him credit for being. A great deal of his talent and the worth of scriptwriter Norman Rosten shine through in the screen version of "A View From The Bridge," now playing at the Varsity.

The viewer is first impressed with the starkness of the dialogue and the reportorial objectivity of the camera—the photography itself is not unimaginative, it simply documents the flat grey life among the Brooklyn wate-front.

Miller's very believable dialogue is augmented by a great cast: actors, not just names. And because the plot itself is a very complicated one, it is to the actors' ultimate credit that there are really no stereotypes; all parts are done with restraint and credibility.

Eduardo Cambodi lives with his wife Beatrice and his neice Catherine; because both of Catherine's parents are dead, he feels greatly responsible for her—yet he will not admit that his feeling of responsibility lies only on the surface of a deeper and more dangerous love. Eduardo's wife realizes that as Catherine grows and matures, Eduardo's love for her expands also, yet she cannot make either of them see the truth.

Enter two of Beatrice's cousins, coming into the U. S. illegally from Sicily. Marco wants to live and work in the U. S. only in order to make enough money to support his wife and children, whom he has left in Italy. Rudolfo wants only the money, and his carefree youth attracts him immediately to Catherine.

Eduardo fights their love with an insane jealousy, and eventually tries to thwart their impending marriage by reporting the two cousins to the Immigration authorities.

Although the plot concerns him less, Raymond Pellegrin as Marco is the dominating one of the two cousins. The immense loneliness of his task and the tension among the others eventually drives him against Eduardo, in a street fight that ends with Eduardo's suicide. Eduardo had felt himself accused by his wife, abandoned by his neice, and betrayed by her two cousins, whom he had originally tried to aid.

The most impressive characterizations are done by Raf Vallone as Eduardo and Maureen Stapleton as his wife. Because of the tension between these two over Catherine, and Eduardo's jealousy, theirs is a tremendously complicated job. Somehow they make their emotions clear to the viewer—and the emotions and their expression is natural and believable.

The picture's greatest asset is a fine cast bringing out a subtle and meaningful story. "A View From The Bridge" could not be the powerful picture it is if either were lacking.

Freshmen Hold Dance For WC Saturday At 8

The freshman class swings into high gear socially Saturday night as it plays host to 200 girls from W.C. at a dance beginning at 8 p.m. in Woollen Gym.

Highlighting this spring function will be the Pedros, a popular group from Monroe. Admission will be $1 for boys and music will be blaring until midnight.

"The dance is not necessarily excluding upperclassmen but it will be catering to freshmen," commented publicity chairman Ellen Solomon.

Although there is no specific twist contest scheduled there will be loads of twisting and refreshments will be served.

Schary Enjoyed Visit With UNC Dramatists

By GARRY BLANCHARD

Playwright Dore Schary closed out his week as artist-in-residence of the University's Dramatic Arts Department saying he had seen "the lovely light of ambition" in his students' eyes.

Speaking at a press conference here Friday afternoon, the 56-year-old, former head of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios said he had found his students "to be not quite as obsessed as we are sometimes led to believe. Their questions have been very good, very sharp . . . and I think searching."

Schary said he heartily recommends visits like his to other artists.

They provide the opportunity for "a review of your own convictions about your work," he said, and a chance "to get away from your home operation and reassure yourself that the rest of the world is living and breathing; that there are people who get along without worrying about what the critics are going to say about your work.

"Most important, if you have some feeling about your work, you feel that if you can touch one or two people and reach them with some sense of drive, perhaps that's worthwhile.

"I have loved the experience. I think I have learned some things. I hope the students have."

Turning to other topics, Schary criticized most television entertainment as a "tremendous repetition of murder, rape and bad comedy," but warmly praised TV's efforts in the field of public events.

He suggested a show of public indignation in the form of letters to sponsors as one way of improving television. Another way, he said, is for sponsors to stop concentrating on mass audiences and to aim at discriminating groups of viewers.

He said television, like any other mass audience media, has had to give up "one of the essential rights of dramatic media—the right to offend somebody."

Science is at the root of much of the modern dilemma, he said, which takes the form of "a general sense of depression." He cited in particular the vastly increased leisure time science has provided and the threat of nuclear war it has made possible.

He said this sense of depression is "reflected in the present-day theater. Fear and instability are characteristic of our time," he said. "Young people have grown up in an atmosphere of tension and trouble under "the shadow of the atomic cloud."

The long-time M-G-M head has produced numerous Broadway shows. He directed the recent "Majority of One" and "The Unsinkable Molly Brown," and has written many plays including "Sunrise at Campobello." He received the Academy Award for an early motion picture, "Boys Town."

Schary's visit was sponsored through a recently established fund given the Carolina Playmakers by an anonymous alumnus.

Soloists May Audition For Symphony

Preliminary auditions for future junior soloists with the North Carolina Symphony Orchesta will be held in Hill Hall on May 28, it was announced yestreday by Mrs. Fred B. McCall, director of the children's concert division of the state symphony society.

The preliminary tryouts are being arranged sufficiently in advance of the forthcoming symphony season to insure that candidates up through the age of seventeen may prepare for and be encouraged to participate in the final auditions scheduled for the early fall.

Winner Will Tour In '63

From the successful preliminary candidates adjudged by a competent Auditions Committee of well-known musical authorities will be chosen several "finalists" to compete in the fall auditions. Winners of the finals of the junior auditions will be awaded public appearances with the North Carolina Symphony during its 1963 statewide tour commencing next January.

Preliminary competitions will cover auditions in piano, flute, clarinet, bassoon, French horn and violin, although talented students of other instruments are welcome to apply. A list of recommended works of representative composers will be furnished each applicant in order that preparation for the auditions can begin immediately.

Former Winners

Two young pianists, H. A. Dameron III, of Greensboro, and Danny Zipoli, formerly of Fayetteville, and now residing with his parents in Gainesville, Georgia, won the 1961 junior auditions and will be heard with the Symphony in concerts next month.

Applicants should write for information and appointment times for the May 28 auditions to Mrs. McCall, Children's Concert Division, N.C. Symphony, Box 843, Chapel Hill, N. C.

'Easter, The Awakening' Depicts Biblical Story Of Resurrection

"Easter, the Awakening," commemorating the triumph of life over death, has opened at the Morehead Planetarium. It will be given daily at 8:30 through April 30.

As in the world's churches at this season, the beautiful Biblical story of Easter and the Resurrection will be told in the Planetarium, and will be complemented by an inspiring pageant of lights and music.

The passages from the Scriptures conform to the visual pageant of the betrayal, Crucifixion and Resurrection of Christ. The narration will be done by Earl Wynn, chairman of the UNC Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures.

The first portion of the program is devoted to an explanation of why Easter comes so late this year and why the date wanders from year to year. The second portion is the traditional pageant, taken from the New Testament.

The events in both parts of the program are celestial and terrestial and will be explained and profusely illustrated in both black and white and natural color.

In addition to the nightly performances at 8:30 o'clock, "Easter, the Awakening" will be presented at matinees on Saturdays at 11 a.m., 1, 3, and 4 p.m. and on Sundays at 2, 3, and 4 p.m.

Shows for school children will be given daily at 11 a.m., 1, and 4 p.m., to which the public will be admitted after all children with reservations have been seated.

Special performances for 75 or more persons will be given at any hour on request.

Food Price Increase Hikes Living Cost To New Peak

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Fed by sharp food price increases, the cost of living climbed last month to a record high that wrecked six months of price stability, the Labor Department reported Tuesday.

The department's index of some 300 consumer items rose three-tenths of one per cent, a sizable jump and the largest since last July. Prices were 4.8 per cent higher than in the 1957-59 base period.

The department's report came amid these other less-than-bright economic developments:

—Commerce Secretary Luther H. Hodges acknowledged that the economy had failed to live up to administration forecasts. He also said the conditon probably would extend through June. Total business activity—the gross national product—rose modestly in the first three months of the year to an annual rate of $548 billion. But the administration had predicted a rate of $565 to $570 billion by mid-year.

—It was learned that Labor Secretary Arthur J. Goldberg has been sounding out congressional leaders on a proposed renewal of the program under which unemployed people get extended federal state benefits. The present program starts expiring Sunday.

Walton Takes Pizza Crown By Eating 6

E. J. (Joe) Walton was crowned King Pizza last Wednesday night after putting away six pizzas to outlast 21 other contestants in La Pizza's annual Pizza King contest.

The object of the contest was to see who could eat the most pizzas in one hour.

With 20 minutes left in the contest only six contestants remained: Glenn Edwards, E. J. Walton, Mickey Nelson, Jack McDonald, Guy Snow, Frank Baker.

With 11 minutes to go Baker dropped out, and with six to go Edwards decided to drop out after downing three pizzas. Jack McDonald dropped out at the five minute mark.

A last minute attempt by Guy Snow fell short and Walton was declared the winner. Walton consumed six pizzas, Snow downed five and three quarters for second place, and Mickey Nelson finished third with five and a half.

Other contestants were Michael Albright, Buddy McDonald, Richard Flemming, Larry Page, Dean Gurley, Ralph Walton, Robert Northup, Marvin Schiller, Sam Leflin, David Shaw, Phil King, Evan Wood, Don Fonirlle, O. W. Holmen and Gary Lyerly.

"Did you find a wallet" the man asked.

"Why—yes!"

"Fine. It's mine."

Wynn looked at him suspiciously. He asked him his name. The man told him. It corresponded with the name in the wallet.

He asked him his address. Again it corresponded. He asked other pertinent questions but finally was obliged to turn the wallet over to the man.

Immediately, the man very crisply flicked a fifty, one twenty, two tens and a five from the wallet, slopped them in Wynn's hand, turned, and strutted up the street.

Wynn went back to the shop, got the suit he had been looking at, bought his wife a dress, and walked out of the shop, broke again.

Undefeated Netters Thump MIT By 8-1

By LOUIS LEGUM

The weather was a bit warmer yesterday, and Coach Don Skakle's netters responded splendidly with a victory over a touring MIT team, 8-1. The win marked the fourth of the season for the undefeated Tar Heels, and extended their record to 16 consecutive triumphs in a two-year period.

Skakle, juggling his sophomore prodigies, watched his tennis team bounce back from a sluggish performance against Michigan State Monday afternoon. Carolina took full command of the courts with MIT, as the netmen polished off four of the six singles matches in less than sixty minutes.

At number one, George Sokol overwhelmed MIT's Bent Aasnaes with his polished ground game, 6-1, 6-2. The little blonde-haired soph from Merion, Pa., was simply too much for his opponent, using his powerful forehand shot with particular effectiveness.

Ted Hoehn, who has been playing very well since the season began, matched teammate Sokol by defeating Nick Charney by the same score, 6-1, 6-2. Hoehn seemed to place many of his shots with the exacting care of an artillery gunner, mixing up an assortment of lobs, drop volleys, and overheads.

Captain Keith Stoneman, the only junior in yesterday's lineup, was the first player off the court with a devastating 6-1, 6-0 victory over Jerry Adams, moving to the net with ease, Stoneman had no trouble in extending his two-season win streak to 23.

Ponderous Bitsy Harrison was forced into three sets before he conquered Charles Heinrich, 6-2, 4-6, 6-2. The 6-5 star flashed enough of his sometimes brilliant game to win. However, Charlie Shaffer, slowly rounding into top form, crushed Terry Chatwin, 6-2, 6-1.

It was a different story in the sixth singles match. MIT's Marty Ormond outwaited inexperienced Sam Applegate, 4-6, 6-3, 7-5, and thus provided the only point of the day for the visitors from Massachusetts.

In the doubles, Coach Skakle paired three new combinations and achieved excellent results. Hoehn and Stoneman worked very well together with crisp volleying and crowd-pleasing line shots to defeat Aesnaes and Charney, 6-0, 6-2. Shaffer and Harrison were just as effective, co-ordinating their big games to overpower Heinrich and Giovanni Franzi by a 6-2, 6-3 score.

The last match was an extremely close one. Carolina's George Zimmerman and Rich Henderson finally settled down in the third set to win 6-4, 6-8, 6-4 over Chatwin and Bob Blumberg.

Coach Skakle commented after the match that his team played very good and "seems to be reaching its potential at last. But we have tough engagements with Harvard and Williams next week that we have to worry about."

UNC Baseballers Meet Yale At 3

North Carolina's baseball team will once more attempt to open its home season against Yale this afternoon at 3 in Emerson Stadium, weather permitting.

Two of Coach Walt Rabb's team's first five games have been cancelled because of rain and wet grounds. The scheduled game with Vanderbilt last week at Gainsville, Fla, was rained out and the scheduled home opener with Ithaca Monday was cancelled because of wet grounds.

Yale is currently on a southern swing in the state. They defeated Duke last Friday, fell to Wake Forest Monday, and met N. C. State yesterday.

The Tar Heels ran up a 2-1 mark during their annual trip to Florida. They opened the season sucessfully by outslugging Florida's Gators, 13-9, but the home team reversed the tables the next day and trimmed the visiting "Northerners," 3-1.

Heyward Hull's home run in the top of the tenth inning was the big blow as UNC won an extra inning encounter, 2-1, from Georgia Southern on Saturday.

Bob Wacker or Dave Murr will probably start today's game on the mound with soph Bernie Isgett benind the plate. Other probable starters are Len Dellolio, first bast, Paul Swing, second base, Larry Neal, third base, and Jim Speight, another soph at shortstop. Speight was one of the leading hitters on the Florida trip.

In the outfield Russ Hollers will probably be in left field, Heyward Hull in center and Buddy Tilden or Dee Frady in right.

UNC Golfers Top Tigers Monday, 28-8

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

UNC's golf team registered its fourth straight victory of the young spring Monday afternoon as the Tar Heels polished off Princeton 28-8.

Coach Ed Kenney's linksmen won six of the eight individual matches and tied in another while keeping their undefeated dual-meet string intact. The Tar Heels' only loss has come in the Florida Invitational Tournament where they placed second to powerful Houston.

In the number one foursome of the day, UNC Captain Pete Green and Jay Harris defeated the Tigers' Press Seckel and Dick Roman by identical 2-1 counts. Green shot a 74 while Harris came in with a 76.

Sophomores Harvie Hill and Abe Andes fired 77 and 79 respectively in downing Ted DeVeffelito and Dick Griffith by like 3-0 scores while George Murphy with a 75 turned back Princeton's Dan Browne by 3-0 also.

The Ivy League school's only victory went to Frank Petito, who beat Jere Ayers, 2½-½. For Ayers, it was the first loss of the spring.

In best ball activity, Carolina again dominated the play as the Tar Heels triumphed, 10-2. UNC met powerful Purdue yesterday afternoon and faces the Boilermakers again today at 1:30.

By ED DUPREE

Purdue's defending national champions handed UNC's golfers their first dual loss of the season Tuesday afternoon on Finley Golf Course, 21½ to 14½.

The Big Ten linksemen picked up nine points in the last foursome to wrap up the victory. Steve Wilkinson of the Boilermakers was medalist with a three-under par 69.

UNC's Pete Green was the low for the Tar Heels with a 71, while Mike Martin of Purdue finished with 72, par for the Finley course.

Green, UNC's All-American golfer, and Jay Harris both defeated their Purdue opponents in the first foursome. Green edged Jerry Jackson 2½-1½ and Harris beat Bill Templin, 2½-½. Best ball for the foursome went to UNC, 3-0.

In the second foursome, the Purdue boys defeated Harvie Hill, 2-1, and Joe Kack defeated Abe Andes, 2½-½.

Medalist Wilkinson defeated UNC's Mike Dore in the third foursome and George Murphy of Carolina defeated Jim Farlander 2½-½. Best ball went to Purdue, 3-0.

In the final foursome Mike Martin took UNC's Sam McNairy, 3-0, and Chuck Hellman of the defending champs defeated sophomore Tom Gardner, 3-0. Princeton again took best ball, 3-0.

The loss gives Coach Ed Kenney's forces a 4-1 dual meet record. They hold convincing wins over Dartmouth, twice, Michigan State, and Princeton.

In the Florida Intercollegiate Golf Tournament at Ocala the Tar Heels finished second to strong Houston to open their season.

The next match for the Carolina golfers isn't until next Thursday when they play host to Ohio University. The first ACC match is scheduled for April 16 at Raleigh against the N. C. State linksmen.

Maryland Captures Carmichael C. Lead

Maryland's Terrapins captured three of the four winter season sports championships in the Atlantic Coast Conference and forged into a narrow lead in the three-way battle in the first annual ACC competition for the Carmichael Cup for excellence in all athletics.

Maryland added 26½ points in the winter activities to take the lead with 46 points since last September. North Carolina, finishing as runner-up in three winter sports, moved into second place with 44½ points, and Duke's Blue Devils, who led after the fall season, held third place with 41½ points.

The Carmichael Cup, offered as a memorial to the late William Donald Carmichael Jr. of the University of North Carolina, goes to the college which leads in this all-sports power rating in conference championship athletics, with the points based on eight for first, seven for second and so on down the line.

ACC Commissioner Jim Weaver, in making the announcement Monday, said in three consecutive weekends the Terrapins won as many titles. This included Coach Bill Campbell's swimming squad, Coach Sully Krouse's wrestlers, and Coach Jim Kehoe's indoor track team. Carolina finished second in all three sports.

Wake Forest took the basketball honors, thus enabling Coach Horace (Bones) McKinney's team to move a point ahead of South Carolina for seventh place. Wake Forest has 18½ points and South Carolina, 17½. North Carolina State remained in fourth place with 26½, followed by Clemson, 25½, and Virginia, 23.

This sets up a close battle for the five spring sports, which already are underway. They are baseball, tennis, golf, lacrosse, and outdoor track.

SAE, Winston, Phi Delts, Peacocks Pace Intramurals

By JOHN MONTAGUE

With the winter sports point totals now in, SAE, Winston, the Peacocks and Phi Delt White maintained top positions in their respective divison's intramurals point competition.

SAE, in the Blue Frat Division, had its lead cut considerably by Phi Delta Theta, which jumped past the DKE's into second place as a result of its basketball championship. Delta Sig and Sigma Nu also moved up the ladder, pushing PiKA and Chi Phi out of 5th and 6th and into 7th and 8th respectively. ATO held its 4th place spot, gaining slightly on the DKE's but still far removed from third.

Winston saw its dorm lead increased as NROTC fell out of the runner-up spot and Joyner jumped into the top contender role. Winston, which had led the Navy by only 9.23 points, now is in front of Joyner by 38.09 points. Mangum and Alexander held onto their 4th and 5th rankings, with 6th place Town Touts coming on fast as a result of their cage championship.

The Peacocks won the Grad Basketball Championship and continue to dominate that loop, with the second-place Law School now over 200 points behind. The Med School, Physics Grads and Dental School rounded out the top five, with the Dentists gaining rapidly on the 4th place Physicsts.

The Phi Delts upped their lead over DKE in the Frat White League due largely to their roundball championship. ATO, another White basketball power, vaulted from 5th to 3rd, Delta Sig and Sigma Nu each moving down one notch.

The leaders in each division (point totals in parentheses) are:

FRATERNITY BLUE (top 10): 1. SAE (623.73); 2. Phi Delta Theta (597.85); 3. DKE (581.59); 4. ATO (485.40); 5. Delta Sig (446.68); 6. Sigma Nu (428.81); 7. PiKA (396.95); 8. Chi Phi (380.18); 9. DU (372.10); 10. TEP (361.46).

The point totals just released include six of the 11 point-system activities. These are: tag football, volleyball, track, wrestling, handball and basketball. Two spring activities which come under the point category, table tennis and badminton, are already underway. Three other spring sports, softball, tennis and horseshoes, will get underway in April, completing the point-system slate of activities.

Last year's winners were: Zeta Psi in the Frat Blue, ATO in the Frat White, Alexander in the Dorm Division and the Peacocks in the Grad League.

Freshmen Beat Wilmington In Baseball Opener, 10-8

By HARRY TOCCE

A fine three innings of relief pitching by Bill Danneman kept the Wilmington Junior College Seahawks in check here yesterday and enabled Bruce Crump's Tar Baby baseball squad to capture a 10-8 come-from-behind victory.

Danneman entered the game in the seventh inning in relief of starter Jerry Davis with Carolina trailing 7-6 and allowed only one run. That was a well-drilled four-bagger by Wilmington's Ronnie Smith.

The Tar Babies, behind 5 to 0 in the third inning, overcame the deficit with five big markers in their half of the third. Bobby Reafan's infield single, which brought home two runs, was the highlight of the rally.

For a moment, Dick Flemming appeared to be the goat of the game when his three errors in the Seahawk fourth inning were instrumental in two Wilmington runs.

But revenge was sweet for Flemming when he laced a booming double to deep center field in the home fourth which pushed across a run to make the score 7-6.

Three costly Seahawk errors allowed the Tar Babies to take final command in the home sixth. Two errors and a walk loaded the bases, and Dick Prindle reached base on a muffel fly ball to right then allowed two runs home. A sacrifice fly and a single by Jerry Clark brought the third and fourth runs across.

Wilmington relief pitcher Ken McDowell, who entered the game in the sixth inning, was the victim of his mates' faulty play and received the defeat.

The Seahawks gained their early lead by garnering five big tallies in the third inning. Four singles, a walk, and a double brought the deluge of runs against Carolina starter Davis.

Prindle, from Atlanta, entertained the suntan-seeking crowd at Emerson Stadium with several flashes of mid-season form at second base.

Republicans Seeking To Kill Tax Relief

WASHINGTON UPI — House Republicans, in a surprise move, announced Wednesday that they will seek to knock out the entire $1.2 billion in tax relief for business contained in an administration tax bill headed for a final floor vote Thursday.

The decision caught administration forces off balance and raised grave doubts that the tax revision measure can be passed by the House in a form President Kennedy will accept.

Republican strategists announced their intentions after losing, on a 224-184 roll call vote, in their attempt to open the bill to separate votes on each of three major changes they proposed.

Limited to a single try at amending the measure, they said they would use it in an effort to scuttle the President's proposal to impose withholding taxes on income from interest and dividends.

In its present compromise form, the measure would approximately balance revenues lost from tax relief with new levies under the withholding and other provisions.

Three Students From Mexico Are Here For Visit

Three Mexican students sponsored by the State Department arrived in Chapel Hill yesterday for a visit which is part of a tour designed to give them an acquaintance with American processes in government at the university, municipal, state and national level.

They will stay in Chapel Hill until Sunday and will live in Avery Dorm. They are accompanied on their tour by a State Dept. escort and interpretor, Mr. Francisco Lanza.

The visiting students are Francisco Del Prado, 34, a third year student in Political Science and Public Administration; Roberto Ducoing, 23, second year student in Political Science; and Eduardo Reinhart Thomae, 22, third year student in Political Science and Public Administration. Ducoing is president and Thomae is vice president of the student body at the National University of Mexico.

Yesterday morning the students visited a political science class and held a brief question and answer period, ate luncheon at the Carolina Inn as guests of the University, and took a tour of the campus arranged by ATO fraternity.

Their itinerary for the remainder of the week calls for a visit to the School of Education, a visit to the Planetarium, a trip toi the State Capitol in Raleigh, a tour of student government activities and panel discussion with student government officers at Graham Memorial, and a tour of the Institute of Government. An international dinner, sponsored by the Cosmopolitan Club will be held Saturday night at 6:30 at the Presbyterian Student Center.

Chapel Hill is the last stop on the tour which included visits to Chicago, Pittsburgh, New York and Washington.

Mathers Withdraws From Editorial Race

Clotfelter-Wrye, Stepp In Runoff

By Harry W. Lloyd

Senior Mike Mathers, who took a surprising victory in a hurried write-in campaign for the Daily Tar Heel editorship in Tuesday's elections, announced yesterday that he could not be a candidate in next week's runoff.

In a statement released to the Tar Heel, Mathers said that he had discovered that he would not be able to return to UNC as a special student next fall after graduating with a B.S. in Journalism this spring.

With Mathers out of the race, the ballot for the runoff will match Ernest Stepp against the co-candidates, Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye.

Official returns gave Mathers a total of 1,629 votes, as against 1,171 for Clotfelter-Wrye and 1,151 for Stepp. In winning the election with a write-in campaign, Mathers collected more votes than current editor Wayne King got while running unopposed last year.

Mathers, who had been approved by the Publications Board but had not been recognized by the Elections Board as an official candidate, was planning to appeal to the Constitutional Council for recognition yesterday so that his name would appear on the run off ballot against Clotfelter-Wrye.

However, before he could go before the council, he learned from the Journalism School Dean, Norval Neil Luxon, that school policy prevented his returning next semester as a special student. He would also have been prevented from serving as editor if he were a graduate student.

Because Clotfelter-Wrye did not capture a majority of the votes cast, they could not be the winners without defeating Stepp in a runoff. Election law demands that the candidates for the Big Four offices and Tar Heel editor be elected by a majority.

There will also be a runoff for vice-president between Mike Lawler and Larry McDevitt on Tuesday.

Mathers said that if he won the election, he could only serve until the end of the spring semester, and there would have to be another election next fall to choose his successor. "I couldn't honestly take part in a campaign knowing that I could only serve for 35 days," he said.

Statement By Mike Mathers

The following is the statement released to the Daily Tar Heel by Mike Mathers, who announced that he would not be a candidate in the runoff election for which he qualified:

It would be impossible for me to run in another election this coming Tuesday. The paramount reason for this is that it is a policy of this school not to let a person with a degree reenter school as a special student.

I will graduate in June as I previously mentioned in the campaign. There is a reason for this policy of the Administration. Facilities are scarce enough as it is and should not be used by people who simply like Chapel Hill.

Another fact which would make my running again very difficult for many people is that if the Constitutional Council decided that the particular selection law concerning illegality of write-in candidates were repealed, then the entire election law would be null and void. This is because the Student Legislature voted on them as a whole. If these laws were declared unconstitutional then the entire election would have to be run over again.

When I decided to run, I was blissfully ignorant of the two things mentioned above. I had absolutely no idea of the administration's policy concerning special students until this morning. I knew about the other but did not realize the extenuating circumstances; that is, I did not realize that the entire elections laws would be thrown out if one law was declared unconstitutional.

It would sound very empty, indeed, to say thank you for your support.

What's The Issue?

The day after the election returns are final, the smoke usually clears, campaigns are rehased, mistakes pointed up and the course to a win "next year" clearly marked.

This year, the returns are final, but, if anything, the situation is cloudier than before. Two run-off elections are scheduled for two major offices. A write-in candidate for editor of the Daily Tar Heel took more votes than the candidates on the ballot, then discovered that he would not be allowed to enroll as a special student if he took office. The vice-presidential candidates are to face each other again because an Independent candidate threw the election into a run-off.

* * *

All in all, the election is one for campus political pundits to ponder for some time.

The race for the editorship still has everyone guessing. Write-in candidate Mike Mathers, who managed to capture the imagination of the campus so completely that he swept into first position by a whopping margin, was informed yesterday that his application for enrollment as a special student would be denied.

Ironically, this happened yesterday afternoon, only a short time before Elections Board Chairman Dave Buxton informed the DTH that Mather's name would be placed on the run-off ballot. Previously, there had ben considerable doubt as to whether Mathers could run as an official candidate in the run-off since he had not fulfilled the qualifications for official candidacy in the regular election on Tuesday. Mathers, naturally, has withdrawn from the run-off contest, leaving it open to Wrye-Clotfelter and Stepp.

* * *

The Wrye-Clotfelter combination ran second to Mathers and the team would have faced him in a run-off had Mathers been able to run. Clearly, it was a Mathers election. He ran well consistently over most of the campus, losing badly only in fraternities and a few dorms.

* * *

Which of the other two possibilities will garner most of the Mathers vote in a run-off is a clouded question. The most impressive showing by Mathers was in the women's dormitories. Whether these same dormitories will swing to Wrye-Clotfelter now is not clear. It appears at this point that they will.

The vice-presidential race also turned out to be an unusual one. SP candidate Mike Lawler ran well ahead of the rest of the ticket to pull ahead of McDevitt by a substantial margin. Independent candidate John Salter, however, took just enough votes to deny Lawler a majority.

* * *

Coincidentally, the vice-presidential election results was reflected in the balloting for Student Legislature. Lawler, if the Independent candidate had not thrown the election into a run-off, would have led a predominately SP Legislature.

Most of Lawler's support, naturally, came from non-fraternity areas, with the fraternity vote going for the UP candidates almost to a man in straight party line voting.

* * *

It is interesting to note here that Hank Patterson, easily the most able and experienced legislator running for office, failed to gain a seat in Legislature, even though he served as speaker of Legislature with an excellent record.

* * *

Patterson placed fifth out of a possible six choices. All four candidates who won seats were UP-endorsed. The sixth man, like Patterson, was endorsed by the SP.

Needless to say, Patterson was running in a predominately-fraternity district. For the office of NSA delegate, which is elected campus-wide, Patterson placed second only to Bill Harriss, with both men well out in front of the other contenders.

* * *

The obvious conclusion is that the fraternities refused to vote for the SP candidates, regardless of their qualifications. This kind of voting is present also on the other side of the fence, but is most pronounced in the fraternity voting. The Student Party candidates came out of the fraternity districts with pitiful small margins in almost every case.

* * *

Wheless took only 13 votes in TM III, an exclusively fraternity district, as compared to some 250 for the UP's Allen. So it went, right down the slate. An all-Greek UP slate against an all-dormitory SP slate—the fraternities could have voted as easily without seeing the candidates, or hearing one word spoken.

Perhaps the dormitory voters should take this into consideration the next time the UP starts a campaign to make the "UP the party of the issue."

* * *

Let's face it. This kind of political double-talk is ridiculous and unrealistic. Fraternities wouldn't elect an SP-endorsed dormitory man if he paid them.

Wuamett Slashes Frats, Sororities

It seems that there is some sort of vile and vitriolic plot on campus—commonly called the 80 per cent rule—that threatens to "rid the campus of fraternities."

It also seems, according to Ken Toppell in Tuesday's DTH, that this rule has placed fraternities in a separate category; fraternity members are now designated differently than other students.

That's tough, Mr. Toppell, that's real tough.

You see, I always thought fraternity (and sorority) members were sorta different regardless of this silly new rule.

After all, they are a pretty select group, aren't they?

The sort of group, that is, that white folks can associate with.

But that's not really the issue you wrote about, Mr. Toppell. You were writing about grades and the 80 per cent rule. You were asking, I believe, why fraternity men must have higher grades than the campus average, and higher than that required to participate in athelties in order to enjoy the "privilege of living together" in a fraternity.

But surely, Mr. Toppell, this select group should be able to maintain a grade average above that required for "jocks" and "dorm rats." Perhaps if the IFC had realized this fact they would have made their own rules before the administration forced its regulations upon fraternities.

But of course you would argue that the fraternity grade average age is above that of the rest of the campus, I don't suppose bull pledges and brothers who are "asked" to go inactive would have anything to do with this, would it.

And then you ask, Mr. Toppell, if fraternity membership is so burdensome an extracurricular activity that a "stranglehold" must be placed upon fraternities.

Just how burdensome is fraternity membership? Aren't there required pledge meetings at which such important things must be memorized like the brothers' hometowns, majors, songs, girlfriedds' names; names of the national officers of the fraterity, the meaning of the chapter flower, and the Greek alphebet (an academic activity, no doubt).

And aren't there such things as pledge duty nights, required participation in at least two other extracurriculars, pledge projects, and even a little hazing thrown in for good measure.

And finally the question, "are fraternities so hedonistic in nature that they must be curtailed and harrassed?"

Yes, they are. And I challenge you Mr. Toppell, to prove otherwise.

No, Mr. Toppell, the 80 per cent rule did not create the schism. You and your "sharp guy" predecessors did. The 80 per cent rule, unjust as it is, is simply and acknowledgement of this schism by the administration.

Concentration Brings In The Higher Grades

If you're a slow reader, there must be a reason. Perhaps you're a deep thinker. More likely, you're a deep sleeper who doesn't really concentrate on what you're reading. You doze between lines when you should be devouring pages.

It takes about one-third of your thinking power to read the words of a book or an article.

What do you do with the other two-thirds of that power?

Here are some typical answers from the slow readers who were asked: "What do you think about when you read?"

I always have music on the FM when I read.

I look for mistakes in grammar or spelling.

I argue with the author and wish I could tell him what I think about his subject.

I think about what I might have said, had I been writing the article.

If it's a story I sometimes think about something that happened to me. Before long I'm not even reading.

Read With Purpose

Now let's consider how you should use your spare thinking power when you read.

You should be using that spare power to read with a purpose. Read to find out something.

When you pick up a whodunit, you don't often concern yourself with the author's style or necessarily with the number of murders. What you want to know is: "Who was the murderer—the butler, the chauffeur, the upstairs maid or the disinherited son-in-law?" You probably read such a story very rapidly, noting the clues as you see them and hoping that you'll find who is the Bad Guy before the author tells you.

This does not constitute an endorsement of whodunits. But this is an example of purposeful reading—reading to find out something.

Study-reading demands a plan which will help you read for understanding. Here are the steps of such a plan:

1. Before you start to read, check through the book's table of contents; look at the chapter headings; scan the chapter summaries. You can tell from these some of the things the author will be discussing.

2. With these ideas in mind, read each chapter rapidly, searching for key expressions and a general understanding of what has been said in the chapter.

3. At the conclusion of each section, ask yourself: "What did the author say? "How does this fit into the general patterns of the book?"

4. You can't answer these questions? Then your trouble is in the way you are reading. You are probably reading too slowly. Too slowly? That's right. You're reading with such slowness that your mind has a lot of time to wander. Read faster faster. Increase your reading speed until you're reading so fact you're thinking of nothing but what you're reading.

Banking Your Knowledge

5. Now re-read. This time look for specific examples. Look for precise meanings. Each example ought to be connected in your mind with some key idea about which you're reading. This will help impress the key ideas in your memory.

These key ideas will become storage bins in your memory for groups of facts and illustrations.

In your review, return again and again to these key ideas and their related facts. In so doing, you will be building up a storehouse of information.

This storehouse will become your rounded-out understanding of what you have read.

The German Problem Today

No country has ever worked harder to blot out an undesirable record than postwar Germany. In West Germany today you can be arrested and imprisoned for anti-Semitic talk. This law binds under heavy penalties, and whether we approve of it or not, we must admit that it's understandable.

After the cataclysm of 1945, the Germans decided that if there was one thing they could do without it was any more war. Rampant militarism gave way—again understandably—to rampant pacifism. In 1953, when the West Germans were ordered to rearm, the entire nation rang with screams of "Ohne mich!" (Without me). In some districts the new soldiers were mobbed, even stoned; the heroes of World War II were savagely execrated. And the service code of the West German army, so I am told, carries a proviso that no soldier has to obey any order that offends his moral judgment.

This whirligig dashing from one extreme to another has led John Dornberg, a German Jewish author, to speak of his homeland as "schizophrenic Germany." And surely the country has been twisted and warped a good deal since 1945. World War II ended with Germany so badly shattered that foreign economists talked about a fifty-year period of recovery. By 1960 the West German recovery was complete; by now its prosperity is burgeoning so rapidly that it seems to be the primary force in the movement toward European unity.

So impressive a reverse can only be taken as a tribute to German resilience. But the sudden shifts and changes have been deeply unsettling, and today the West Germans feel nervous, irresolute, and profoundly uneasy. They dislike the need to rearm, but plainly they can't avoid it. If recent history is any guide, the pacifistic mood will dissipate and soon we'll be back to normal—with Germany fully armed, theoretically committed to the west, and possibly leaning east. And we shouldn't expect too much from the lackluster Konrad Adenauer, who missed an excellent chance to retire last year.

Don't brush off the possibility that Germany may again bargain with Russia. The German people would give almost anything to be reunited—which Russia alone can provide. Suffering in the Vopos' territory is acute, and hundreds of East German police have fled the workers' paradise since the concrete wall spiraled up last August. Walter Ulbricht, the malodorous jakal-premier of the East, may be the most hated man in the world today. Yet, for all this, East Germany has better living standards than any other Russian satellite, better, in fact, than Russia herself. Nothing more vividly demonstrates Khrushchev's grotesque failure to make the Marxist state anything but a drab, unmotivated labor camp.

Khrushchev, no doubt, feels bitter about the painfully obvious failure of so-called "socialism" in the German province, and I personally figure that the tenacity of Berlin, under the leadership of gutsy Mayor Willy Brandt, galls him even more. When the wall was erected, some observers ruefully predicted that Berlin would wither on the vine and fall prey to Red absorption. It hasn't happened and it isn't about to. Some people, it is true, have deserted Berlin and fled to West Germany, but just as many others have migrated to the city to replace them. Krhushchev, shoe in hand, can threaten and bluster and make angry speeches, scatter chaff in the airways, harass our transports with fighter planes, and maybe even goad us into shooting down some Red aircraft. But he can't take Berlin, and well he knows it.

Twice this century, we have witnessed the revolting spectacle of Germans and Americans killing each other in all-out war. Nobody expects a repetition of this, though some people, calling themselves liberals, may think it sounds smart to say, "I'm afraid of a rearmed Germany." Afraid or not, what we have now is a rearmed Germany, one which will soon grow powerful enough to solidify western Europe around it by peaceful means. In all probability, this new ally will stick with us, and in that event should prove of tremendous value. Soon we'll know.

Ruffin Dorm Thanks Long

To the Editor:

On behalf of the residents of Ruffin Dormitory, we wish to express our thanks to Dean Long for pre-empting the plan to change Ruffin into a freshman dormitory and for allowing us to become the model dorm originally proposed by the Student Legislature.

We particularly want to thank Jim Gaulden, John Gould, and the members of the Interdormitory Council all of whom were instrumental in bringing about the change in plans and without whose help our efforts would not have been effective.

We believe that the residents of Ruffin can demonstrate the efficacy of a new concept of dormitory life at Carolina. All of our boys are enthusiastic and delighted with our place in making dormitory life more conducive to well-rounded students.

Students Who Were Host To Russians Criticize Press' Handling Of Story

Four Carolina students who were hosts to visiting Russians last week in Chapel Hill were critical of the press for playing up the incident about one Russian objecting to fried chicken while omitting much that was good in the exchange of views during the stay of the Russians in Chapel Hill.

Three of the Russians were accommodated at the 126 North Street apartment of four UNC seniors, Wade Hargrove of Clinton, Bill Duke and Pat Morgan of Raleigh, and Bill Shipp of Clinton.

The four said: We do not question the accuracy of the original story. But it reflects the conduct of only one Russian with TOTAL disregard for the behavior of the other ten. Does this not distort the true picture of the Russian visit?"

Hargrove, spokesman for the four students, said it is true that the Russian leader who stayed at the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity objected to the chicken being served, objected to the too-full plate, to the lack of towels and the like.

"But," said Hargrove, "What if a Russian chose not to eat chicken three times in 24 hours!! Is this REALLY news? Who likes chicken that well anyway? I think most people who were with the Russians throughout the week would have considered the incident VERY insignificant and isolated in relation to other aspects of the visit. Just think, it's usually Americans who accuse Russians of having 'negative' attitudes."

Favorable Aspects

The press might have well emphasized some of the favorable aspects of the visit, said Hargrove. The three who stayed in their apartment were "congenial, considerate, and polite," he said. "They conducted themselves in as respectable a manner as any guests, native or foreign, that I have ever had in my home."

The four students further declared that they are not speaking for the sponsors of the visit of the Russians, but only for themselves, as the hosts of three of the Russians who stayed at their home on North Street.

Salient quotations from the objections voiced by UNC seniors Hargrove, Duke, Shipp and Morgan follow:

"Of all the events which took place while the Russians were in Chapel Hill, why did the press select this one to publicize? Was it an attempt to stir up controversy, increase friction, emphasize the negative and sensational and thereby increase the sale of newspapers and arouse unfavorable public reaction to the visiting Russians? Certainly, the incident took place, and the press has an inherent responsibility to print the news as it happens . . ."

"We discussed at length politics, science, space, the arts, philosophy, religion, sports, education, business, agriculture, law, sex, women, cigarettes, Russian Vodka and American Bourbon . . ."

"A capitalist and a communist discussing politics is like a Southern Baptist and a Catholic discussing religion. It's frustrating. At the conclusion of such a discussion, one of the Russians commented: (with Frank Sinatra singing "I've Got the World On a String" in the background). "You believe in your system. We believe in ours. Which system is best? We shall wait for the future and then we shall see . . ."

"The thing I shall remember most about America when I return home is not its big cities, its wealth, and great farms, rather it is the friendly faces and hospitality such as a few people here in North Carolina have shown to us . . ."

"As one of the Russians left Chapel Hill he commented in broken English, "As you say in America, I very very blue to leave . . ."

"We might add, we were not victims of Russian propaganda," said the UNC students.

Lyons Attends Birthday Fete For R. Frost

University Kenan Professor of English C. P. Lyons was among the national figures attending poet Robert Frost's 88th birthday celebration in Washington Monday when Mr. Frost received a special Congressional medal from President Kennedy.

As a close friend of Robert Frost's and because of the poet's long association with the University, Professor Lyons was invited to the Washington ceremony.

It is a traditional custom for Robert Frost to stop by Chapel Hill during the spring and visit with his good friends, Professor and Mrs. Lyons. Poet Frost usually meets with UNC English classes and makes a public address.

This year, Mr. Frost will probably not be coming to Chapel Hill because of an illness. According to Professor Lyons, the University can anticipate his visit at spring time next year.

Professor Lyons reported that Mrs. Luther Hodges was among those present at the meal honoring Mr. Frost, along with such national officials as Interior Secretary Stewart Udall, U. S. Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter, Justice Earl Warren, and U. S. Ambassador to the United Nations Adlai Stevenson.

Jackie Visits British

LONDON (UPI) — Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy had an "exciting" lunch with Queen Elizabeth at Buckingham Palace Wednesday and drew cheers and admiring whistles from London crowds as she made a surprise shopping tour of antique shops.

Vividly attractive for the palace luncheon in a suit of cherry red wool and a mink hat, America's First Lady brightened the capital on a day in which thin sunshine faded into a cheerless drizzle.

A national newspaper, the Evening Standard, published a photograph of her that ran the entire length of the front page. One critic, after watching Mrs. Kennedy on television, said he was almost "ashamed" the British had burned down the White House in 1814.

Rusk Reports To President

WASHINGTON UPI — Secretary of State Dean Rusk reported to President Kennedy and the National Security Council Wednesday on the Geneva conference, presumably delving into the problem of new Berlin talks with Russia.

The conferences came as the government moved forward with Rusk's proposal for a "zonal inspection" system in any disarmament agreement growing out of the current Geneva sessions. A $125,000 contract was awarded a private firm to work on details of the plan.

Rusk, who returned from Geneva Tuesday night, conferred with the President and both then attended a meeting of the Security Council. While subjects under discussion were not announced,

Yale Clubs Tar Heel Nine, 9-6

By ED DUPREE
DTH Sports Editor

North Carolina's baseball team outhit Yale's visiting Bulldogs, 11-7, yesterday, but 11 walks helped the Ivy Leaguers outscore the Tar Heels, 9-6. The loss was the first home game for Coach Walt Rabb's men and evened their record at 2-2.

UNC's Paul Swing was the big man at the plate, collecting four hits in five times at bat. "P. W." also stole a base and scored two of the Tar Heels runs.

A five-run eighth inning broke up a 4-4 ball game and handed the win to the Bulldogs who are on a southern tour in the state. The disastrous eighth opened when Rudy Carpenter, son of Bob Carpenter, the owner of the Philadelphia Phillies, was hit by reliever Bobby Cox's pitch. Carpenter was forced at second on a grounder hit by Mike Halloran, but a throwing error committed by Tar Heel shortstop Jim Speight put Halloran on second.

Chris Clark singled and advanced Halloran to third. UNC second baseman Swing then made a sparkling play on Ed Kaake's grounder, but threw the ball away trying to force Clark at second. Halloran scored and Clark went to third. Bruce Warner drew a free pass and a walk to Tom Petke forced in the second run.

The big blow of the inning was a two-run double by Tim O'Connell, pinch hitting for Chuck Burr. Larry Jenkins had relieved Cox with a 3-1 count on Burr, but Yale coach Ethan Allen sent O'Connell to the plate and he responded with a base knock through the middle of the diamond.

Jenkins walked Jerry Slack and sophomore Andy Billesdon came on to pitch for UNC. The final Yale run of the afternoon crossed the plate when Billesdon walked Carpenter with the bases loaded.

Carpenter with two for two, two walks, and the free pass when he was hit on the elbow by Cox was the leading Yale hitter. His hits were a run-producing double in the third frame and a booming homer to left center in the fifth.

Tar Heel third baseman Larry "Charlie Brown" Neal led off the seventh inning with a home run which cleared the left field fence a few yards inside the foul line. His belt tied the score at 4-4 before the roof caved in on Rabb's men.

Bob Wacker's wildness gave the Eli a 2-0 lead in the opening inning. A single by Halloran was sandwiched between four walks, the last one being a free pass to Kaake with the bases loaded.

Carpenter's double in the third made it 3-0, and his four-bagger in the fifth pushed it to a four-run lead.

Held to two hits by Yale Starter Bob Kelly, the homestanders woke up in the fifth and narrowed the score to 4-3. A walk to UNC catcher Wendell Brande and Swing's ground rule double to deep center was followed by Buddy Tilden's single which scored both runners. Heyward Hull's single sent Tilden Home.

Behind 9-4 the Heels made an effort in the eighth, but their rally fell short by three runs. Jim Speight's sacrifice fly scoring Swing and Hull's triple to center scoring Tilden were the big blows.

Cox was the losing pitcher, making his record now 1-1. Reliever Tom Petke gained the win for the visitors.

Halloran had two hits for Yale, Neal and Hull collected a pair each for UNC.

The UNC baseballers rest today and then meet Virginia Tech of the Southern Conference in a pair of contests on Friday and Saturday. Game time at Emerson Stadium will be 3 p.m.

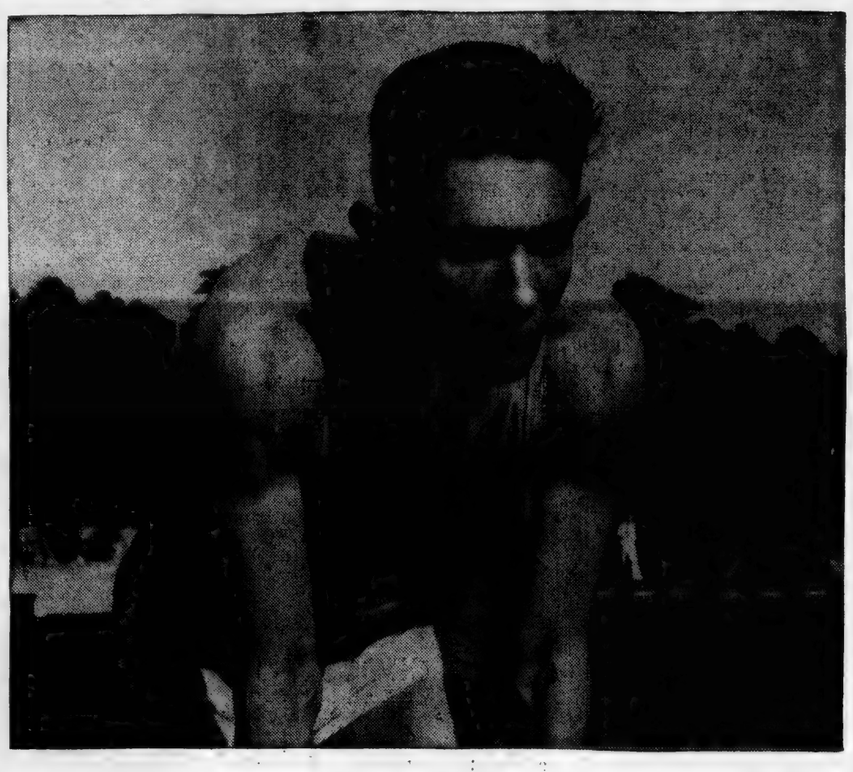
Daily Tar Heel Athlete Of The Week



Bob Hart

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Bob Hart is a young man who gets places in a hurry. The 5-9, 150-pound junior, chosen yesterday as the seventh DTH Athlete of the Week, put on a tremendous individual show last Saturday in leading North Carolina's track team to a 99-37 romp over Clemson.

Hart took both the 220 and 440-yard races and anchored the winning 440 and mile-relay teams in the performance that earned him this week's honor.

Before moving to High Point, N. C., his present home, Bob Hart lived and attended school in Fayetteville. As a junior at Fayetteville High School, Hart was first introduced to foot racing by a former Carolina ACC half-mile champ, Boyd Newnam. Newnam, a chemistry teacher at the school, taught Bob the first fundamentals of the 220 and 440 and Hart immediately caught the "fever" for running.

"Actually, I like tennis and of course it's a little more fun than track," Hart says, "but once you get running in your blood, it's there to stay."

Running was indeed "there to stay" for Bob Hart. On entering Carolina in the fall of 1959, the youngster was taken in hand by track coaches Dale Ranson aAnd Joe Hilton and further instructed in the art of running.

Last year, Bob made his presence felt on Ranson's varsity squad but mainly as a sprinter in the 100 and 220. Then, at the end of the spring, competing in the Carolina's AAU, Hart ran the first individual 440 of his college career. Though finishing third, the sandy-haired runner set a school record of 47.7 seconds.

Hart's best time for the shorter 220 was recorded in the Clemson meet when he covered the distance in 21.5. This is just five tenths of a second slower than the UNC record and Bob hopes he can match that next year.

"I don't think I can hit twenty-one flat this year in the 220 but I like to set goals for myself and this spring I want to break 47 seconds in the 440."

This would be a truly remarkable feat for a boy with only two years real experience. Ranson, who has been handling track here for over twenty years, has this to say about his star pupil.

"It's hard to tell whether Bobby is better at the 600 or 440. (Hart runs the 600-yard distance in the winter indoor season and three weeks ago, won the ACC Indoor Games 600 with a time of 1:13.) He has had such a short period in which to develop so we don't know where he is strongest. But he has made a vast improvement and has come along like a 'house of fire' in the last year."

Hart himself prefers the 440 since he thinks he does it the best. Bob also would rather run outdoors than in because as he puts it, "The only disadvantage outdoors is occasionally the wind may act up against you."

Hart, a social studies major who plans to go into teaching, credits Wayne Bishop with helping him the most in his training pursuits.

Bishop, Tar Heel track captain in 1959 and now a freshman in the UNC law school, worked with Bob all last year and has instructed Hart in the methods of "repeated short interval" training.

This is the same training procedure that Hungarian Mihaly Igloi prescribes for his Los Angeles Track Club runners, among whom is one Jim Beatty, former UNC great and the only man to run an indoor mile under four minutes.

The procedure consists of many sprints and longer runs interspersed with jogs around the track. Hart practiced this routine all last fall and it has certainly paid off for the articulate-speaking 20-year-old.

When asked how Bob compared with his former Carolina 440 men, coach Ranson didn't hesitate, "He's got the school record. What more can you say?" Not much.

Neyland Dies, Now Legend

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Brig. Gen. Robert Reese Neyland, the all-time Army athlete who turned the University of Tennessee into a training academy for the nation's top football coaches, died in a hospital here Wednesday.

The 70-year-old Texan had been a patient at Ochsner Foundation Hospital since Jan. 14, suffering from a variety of illnesses contracted during a colorful military career. He died at 11:30 a.m. EST a few hours after he lapsed into a coma.

His failing health had forced Neyland to give up the head football coaching job after his big Tennessee team lost to Texas in the 1952 Cotton Bowl. He often joked that even though he may have been America's winningest coach, he had the poorest bowl record in the business.

He became athletic director and later picked Bowden Wyatt, the captain of his 1938 unbeaten, untied Orange Bowl team as head coach. At one time in his career there were 90 Neyland-trained coaches in the business.

"General Neyland now becomes a legend," Wyatt said after hearing of his death. "To those who knew him best, he was a man of great personal dignity and quiet strength whose devotion to duty and dedication to high ideals was a constant inspiration."

Cricket Club Chirps Past State Easily

North Carolina defeated N. C. State, 143-70, in the first cricket match of the 1962 season. Leading the UNC scorers were Graham Milne, from England, with 45 points, and Australian Dave Buckingham with 44.

Englishman Peter Brown and Kashinath Patil of India also reached double figures.

The bowlers responsible for putting State out were Milne—two men out, Somesh Dasgupta—two, K. B. Deshpande—two, Marcus Ollington—two, Buckingham — one, and Frank Fish—one.

Das Gupta is from India, Fish from England, Ollington from Australia, and team captain Wilham Warren from New Zealand, giving the team quite an international flavor.

Matches will be played regularly from now on through the summer between UNC, State, and Duke. Some of the teams will combine and take trips to Washington and Savannah, Ga., to play other cricket teams.

Monogram Club Meets Tonight

Monogram Club President Joe Davies urges all Club members to attend the meeting at 7:30 tonight in the Club Room of Woollen Gym. The meeting is important as tickets to be sold for the Alumni football game on April 7 will be handed out.

Lawler, McDevitt To Debate In Gerrard Hall On Sunday

Mike Lawler, SP candidate for vice-president of the student body in Tuesday's run-off election, challenged his UP opponent Larry McDevitt yesterday to a debate Sunday night in Gerrard Hall at 10:30.

McDevitt accepted the challenge yesterday after asking that the debate be held in Gerrard Hall, rather than in Cobb basement as Lawler had suggested in his challenge.

The debate will consist of opening statements of 4-6 minutes by each candidate, after which each candidate will question the other. The pair will then answer questions from the floor. They will make closing statements of about 4 minutes. The debate is open to the entire campus.

President Should Not Choose

In a statement to the DTH yesterday Lawler said, "A belief that should be dispelled," he said, "is that Inman Allen (UP winner for the presidency) should be able to choose his vice-president simply because of the argument that the administration will need a speaker of legislature of the same party as himself to carry out his program.

"In the present situation, it would actually be better to have an SP vice-president (speaker). This is because Legislature will have 29 SP members and only 19 UP members." Two new Legislators are doubly endorsed.

"Work Through One Man"

"With this strongly SP Legislature the UP president would have to work through only one man in the body, that man being of the party which has the most members.

The debate was set at this time so that it would not conflict with the Carolina Symposium which begins at 8 p.m. that evening.

Patterson Given Fulbright Grant

Professor Tom Patterson of the UNC Drama Department has been awarded a 1962-63 Fulbright Fellowship to teach play-writing in Dong Kook University and to direct plays at the Drama Center in Seoul, Korea.

Dong Kook is a great Buddhist University and the only institution in Asia known to have a department of drama. This department was set up by Gun-Sam Lee, a UNC graduate who took his Master's Degree in the Department of Dramatic Art in 1959. During the two years he was at UNC as a student, Professor Lee worked closely with Patterson in playwriting and in other theater activities.

The Seoul Drama Center is an ultra-modern theater built under the direction of Che-jin Yu, one of Korea's best-known writers. Patterson became acquainted with Mr. Yu when the latter visited Chapel Hill in 1957, while on a tour of the U. S. University theaters.

Impressed By Playmakers

Impressed with the work of the Carolina Playmakers over the years, Yu felt that it would serve as a model for a dramatic organization in Korea. Consequently, he influenced Lee in coming to UNC for his training in theatre work and also persuaded the Rockefeller Foundation to help build a theater in Seoul cementing cultural ties between the United States and Korea.

Patterson, who joined the UNC department in 1950 after a brilliant student career at Yale and Stanford Universities and previous teaching experience at the Universities of Texas and Oklahoma, teaches playwriting at UNC. He has directed such major productions for the Carolina Playmakers as "South Pacific," "Mister Roberts," "Death of a Salesman," "Desire Under the Elms." His outdoor drama "Old Four-Eyes," produced each summer at Medora, N. D. since 1958 by the Theodore Roosevelt National Memorial Park and Badlands Association, has been called by "Time Magazine" one of the five best outdoor dramas in the nation.

He was lately named to the Board of Advisers of the T. R. Memorial Association.

Patterson visited Korea in 1959 as a member of the UNC Woman's College Theatre group which toured 18,000 miles in the Pacific area under the sponsorship of the USO-American Educational Theatre Association.

The Pattersons will leave the U. S. about mid-summer.

Student's Opinion Changes Studied

The extent to which 165 UNC students from abroad have changed their opinion about the United States since coming to America is being compiled and related to sociology and social psychology through a survey being conducted by Mary Ann Lamanna, a graduate student in sociology.

The survey is also concerned with any specific problems, such as housing, grades and language conflict, these students have had while attending UNC and whether or not these students have had an opportunity to see many phases of life in the United States.

Year At Strasbourg

Mrs. Lamanna became interested in the ideas foreign students formed about the country he is visiting after she spent a year studying at the University of Strasbourg in France.

The date for returning the questionnaires is Tuesday, and Mrs. Lamanna has stressed the importance of receiving replies from all students concerned so that the results will be truly representative of all countries and opinions.

Larry McDevitt Makes Statement

The following is a statement by UP vice-president candidate Larry McDevitt who yesterday accepted a debate challenge by his SP opponent Mike Lawler.

"I accept with pleasure Lawler's challenge to a debate. I think we will be able to discuss issues of interest to the student body and I hope the student body will show interest by attending.

"The vice-president's duties are greater than that of speaker of the Legislature," he said. "He must work in close harmony with the president in order to guide the president's programs through the legislature.

"The student body has expressed confidence in Allen by electing him, and his programs should therefore be guided through the legislature."

The chairmen are: Van Oattts, Campus Chest; Mary Brewer Regan and Katherine Parrish, publicity; Bobbie Brownfield, office force; Mimi Farquhar, finance drive; Marie Overby, human relations.

Glenda Lackey, international relations; Judy Alexander, U.N. education; Deal McArthur and Lee Shepherd, foreign students; Neal Hollingsworth, hospital work; Robin Farr and Fran Brock, Dix Hill sanatorium; Jane Womack, Gravely sanatorium.

Heading two new committees for next year will be Alice Anne Ainslie, Butner institution, and Ann Hendrick, Negro "Y" teens.

Appointed to the executive committee of the cabinet was Judy Bryant who will serve as member-at-large.

Playmakers Present 3 One-Acts

Three new one-act plays will be presented free of charge by the Playmakers tonight and Saturday night at 7:30 p.m. in the Playmakers Theatre.

"Indian Summer," by Gail Place, will be the first offering. In the cast are Susie Cordon, Violet Katherine Galvin, Johnnie Sibold and Dwight Hunsucker. It is directed by Larry Randolph.

Douglas Young's "Waiting for Eden" will be the second play. Margaret Cathell and Frank McDonald are cast in the drama, directed by Sandy Moffett.

"What Did You Learn in School Today?" by Wallace Johnson will be the last play on the bill. Appearing in the farce-satire are Myles Ludwig, Ed Cathell, Larry G. Steele, Larry Walz, David Samuel Sheps and Richard Grant. The play is directed by Gordon Clark.

Tryouts Set For 'Faustus'

Tryouts for 27 roles in the Playmakers' outdoor production of Christopher Marlowe's "Doctor Faustus" will be held this Sunday at 3:00 p.m. and Monday at 4:00 and 7:30 p.m. in the Forest Theatre.

Director Tommy Rezzuto, staff director of the Playmakers, announces that there are roles for 20 men and 7 women in this acting version of the Marlowe spectacle. Principal characters in the comedy are Fausts, master of all knowledge; Wagner, his servant; Lucifer, a fallen angel; Mephostophilis, a devil; a Good Angel; an Evil Angel; and Helen of Troy.

Set in 16th century Germany, "Doctor Faustus" deals with a doctor-magician who bargains with the Devil and loses his own soul. Playwright Marlowe was a contemporary of Shakespeare.

Scripts are on reserve in the University library and at 101 Saunders Hall for those who wish to read it prior to trying out. Anyone in the Chapel Hill area is invited to audition.

EXAM Schedule

The time of an examination may not be changed after it has been fixed in the schedule. Quizzes are not to be given in this semester on or after Wednesday, May 16.

Grade Reports will be prepared by the Data Processing Section and forwarded to the departments prior to the examination period. The original copy will be returned to the Offce of Records and Regisration, the second copy (canary), is to be retained by the department, and the third copy (goldenrod) is to be kept by the instructor.

Grade Reports are to be in the department office within 72 hours after the scheduled time of the examination. The department chairman is responsible for recording receipt of each report (the Form RD-1 may be used for this) and forwarding it promptly to the Office of Records and Registration. In unusual cases, if it is clearly needed, an extension of the time limit preferably not to exceed 48 hours, may be approved by the department chairman or the dean of the school concerned. The Office of Records and Registration must be given notice of the delay. (Faculty Council, May 6, 1960.) Machine processing of grades makes it urgent that all grades be turned in on time.

All permits to take examinations to remove grades of "Exc. Abs." or "Cond." must be secured from the Office of Records and Registration prior to the exam. No student may be excused from a scheduled examination except by the University Infirmary in case of illness or by his Dean in case of any other emergency compelling his absence.

AFROTC Proposal Explained

A proposed change in the AFROTC program, which would substitute a two-year officer's education program for the present four-year plan, was explained to University officials this week by Col. William C. Lindley, chairman of the AFROTC Advisory Panel for the Secretary of the Air Force.

UNC is one of 173 institutions which the proposed legislative change will affect. The purpose of Lindley's visit was to acquaint university officials with the necessary information for amending the National Defense Act of 1918.

Primary Officer

Lindley was the guest of Lt. Colonel Gordon D. Kage of the local 590th AFROTC Detachment. He talked with Chancellor Aycock; Dean of the Faculty, James Godfrey; and Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, J. Carlyle Sitterson.

Since the AFROTC is the primary source for Air Force officers, there is an immediate need for increasing enrollment in the educational program. The proposed change would offer a more concentrated effort on the part of juniors and seniors who would be eligible for admission under the two-year plan.

More and Better Students

Commenting on the change, Lt. Colonel Kage said, "We will be able to get more and better qualified students in the new program. This will benefit the cadets in their training, both financially and scholastically."

Grierson Here For Symposium

John Grierson, producer for Scottish Television Ltd. and a featured speaker on the Symposium program Monday night, will arrive here tonight by plane from New York. Grierson and Gilbert Seldes will speak on "Revolutions in the Arts" at 8 p.m. Monday in Memorial Hall.

Grierson is coming to the U.S. primarily to attend the Symposium; his visit is sponsored jointly by the UNC-Chapel Hill Film Society, the Museum of Modern Art in New York, and the Washington, D. C., Film Council.

Grierson is a colorful, dynamic personality whose name has become a legend in the motion picture world during his own lifetime.

Queen Elizabeth last year bestowed the rank of Commander of the British Empire on him for his contribution to cinema and education. His farm home in Wiltshire, England, has been designated a national monument.

Dr. Grierson will spend Saturday and Sunday visiting the campus and enjoying the Symposium until his participation Monday night.

Absentee Ballots

Anyone wishing absentee ballots for the run-off election next Tuesday must sumbit a signed request stating his reason for absence from Chapel Hill on Thursday and his campus address.

The ballots must be picked up in the Student Government office by 5 o'clock on Friday, and must be returned before 5:30 on Tuesday.

Mathers' Campaign: He Entered To Win, Not To Split The Vote

Mike Mather's announcement Wednesday that he has withdrawn from the race for editor of the DTH resulted in a storm of reaction Many of the students who wrote Mather's name on the ballot protested that it was unfair to refuse him admission as a special student.

* * *

Others reacted with an air of resignation to the caprices of the administration. Still others concluded that the whole campaign was a fraud, that Mathers had no real intention of assuming the office if he won it.

* * *

Nothing could be further from the truth. Mathers entered the race with every intention of campaigning hard, winning, and putting out a good newspaper. Had he entered with the intention of splitting the vote and paving the way for a Clotfelter/Wrye victory—as some have charged—he would have gone into the run-off and withdrew at the last moment, leaving only the names of Clotfelter and Wrye on the ballot, insuring them a win.

* * *

This he did not do. The moment Mathers was informed by officials in the administration that he would not be admitted as a special student, he withdrew from the race. The news that he would not be admitted came as a complete surprise not only to the campus, but to Mathers as well. He was not informed that he would not be admitted until Wednesday morning.

* * *

* * *

The entire incident is nothing more than a muddle of misconceptions and errors. The outcome is regrettable, but was not conceived out of any intent other than to give the campus a choice. The choice was for Mathers, but a series of unforeseen events prevented him from participating in a run-off.

* * *

This is through no fault of Mathers, nor through any intent on his part to confuse or mislead the voters. His sincerity in running for the office is unquestionable. He fought hard to win, and quite probably would have had he not been faced with the prospect of serving for only 35 days, a situation that would be neither fair to him nor to the campus.

Poll Tax Opposition

A simplified version of Senator Holland's proposed amendment to the Constitution abolishing the poll tax sailed through the Senate Wednesday and appears to have a good chance for approval by the House and ratification by three fourths of the states. The Senate was wise in yielding to the wishes of Majority Leader Mansfield and others to reduce controversy over the amendment to a minimum. After the Senate had concluded its talkfest and begun to debate the proposed amendment on its merits, the opposition virtually collapsed.

* * *

As the proposed amendment was previously phrased, it forbade the states to deny or abridge the right of any citizen to vote "in any primary or other election for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress" by reason of failure to pay a poll tax. Some critics feared that this reference to "electors" might leave a loophole that would enable the states to continue levying poll taxes by eliminating "electors" from their ballots and substituting the names of the candidates for President and Vice President. That possibility was eliminated by making the amendment applicable to direct election of the President as well as to the choice of electors.

* * *

A more important change was the complete elimination of Section 2 of the resolution. Section 2 had been assailed by various groups because it provided that the proposed amendment would have no effect upon state laws denying the right to vote to paupers and persons supported at public expense or by charitable institutions. This proviso had been deemed necessary because the original amendment would have abolished any property qualification for voting as well as the poll tax, and 12 states have limited the right of paupers to vote in order to discourage vote buying.

* * *

In our opinion, it would have been better to have eliminated all property qualifications for voting—period. But the issue before Congress was simplified by directing the amendment solely against the poll tax. In this form it seems unexceptionable, and since the effort to substitute for it a simple anti-poll-tax statute was again defeated in the Senate, the Holland resolution should have support from every foe of the poll tax.

Satan Balks

K-9 Corps Goes To Pot

OLATHE, K.na (UPI) — The entire Canine Corps of the Johnson County sheriff's office has been fired — all because of a dog named Satan.

Sheriff Ralph Burger said things went reasonably well at the outset, about two years ago, although all the dogs displayed a few problem personality traits, among them a unanimous aversion to drunks.

"The drunk," Burger said, "always wanted to pet the dogs, who were trained to be vicious on command and sometimes didn't wait for the command. Sometimes an officer who was driving had a hard time keeping a friendly prisoner and an unfriendly dog apart."

Satan had a brand of deviltry all his own. Burger said three men were discovered inside a drug store late at night. Ordered into the darkened premises to flush them out, Satan firmly braced his feet in refusal. One officer pulled and another pushed until the reluctant, 125-pounder was maneuvered inside.

Satan was not seen again until after officers had rounded up and handcuffed the three burglers. Then Satan was found sitting outside, licking his chops — coated with chocolate from candy he had stolen from a display counter.

"This," said the sheriff, "was embarrassing." Satan, however, was not fired then.

Dismissal came after he took sides in a family argument in his master's household. Each dog rode, during working hours, with the officer to whom he was assigned, and lived, when off duty, at the officer's house.

Satan had a special fondness for one of his master's children and an unconcealed dislike for the man's wife, the sheriff said. One day when the mother bent over her offspring to adminster a scolding, Satan roared to the child's defense.

"The dog grabbed the startled housewife by the lower stern section and hung on," the sheriff said.

That did it. Satan was sold back to his trainers at Springfield, Mo., and the era of canine police work in this Kansas City suburban area came to an end.

"From now on, we'll try to get along with men," Burger said.

Folk Songsters Not So Folksy

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — A great cold war is simmering behind the smiling faces of the nation's folk song advocates.

They are divided into three hostile factions — the purists, the irreverent and the middle-roaders. The irreverents and the purists are the prime antagonists. The middle-roaders shrug off both.

Most irreverent of the guitar-twanging folk singers are the Smothers Brothers, Tom and Dick, who lampoon the woeful, tragedy-filled songs of our forebears. They even deny the legitimacy of most so-called folk songs.

This does not sit well with the fanatics who listen in worshipful silence as Burl Ives, Josh White, Theo Bickel and Pete Seeger wail their mournful ballads.

"It's become a cult," said Tom Smothers, irreverently.

"They really take these songs seriously," Dick added. "Some of 'em figure folk songs are the most important thing in the world. More important than beatnik poetry."

The Smothers (that's their real name) starred briefly on Steve Allen's defunct television show. They proved their inability to take themselves seriously, much less folk singing.

They describe such groups as the Kingston Trio, the Limelighters and other popular musical organizations as middle-roaders who earn huge sums of money singing "new" folk songs—old tunes with modern lyrics. They neither indulge in satire nor sing as if they were in church. Tom identifies them as impartial money makers.

"The trouble with dedicated purists is that they try to educate, not entertain," Dick said. "Sometimes it takes them an hour to sing their way through 50 verses with a chorus between each verse."

"What a drag," Tom agreed.

"They also love to tune their guitars," Dick went on. "Sometimes you can't tell where the tuning leaves off and the song begins."

Purists, outraged by the Smothers' lighthearted approach to the altar of folk music have pinned a name on them — 'folkniks."

"I kind of like it," said Tom. "It has a certain ring to it."

Tom, 25, and Dick 23, were born in New York City, the sons of a career army officer. Since his death they have supported their mother and two young sisters who live in San Jose, Calif.

In addition to television appearances the brothers rack up as much as $3,500 a week in night clubs apas $3,500 a week in night club ap-San Francisco and Chicago.

'Twould Be Nice If . . .

. . . . The administration would delegate to someone the job of checking the fire extinguishers, now that they've gotten the evacuation procedures set up.

. . . . One could taste the Lenoir Hall lemon meringue pie.

. . . . Put a Bircher and the Communist Lecture Bureau representative on a panel discussion.

. . . . if the DTH could start printing BC in addition to Pogo and Peanuts.

. . . . we could get eating utensils that were clean in Lenoir Hall.

. . . . someone would give the dogs that seem to roam uninhibited around Lenoir a bath—they do smell terribly!

. . . . someone would recommend that ALL doors into and out of a building be kept open at ALL times. On the dining hall and GM, for example, they are not—what if there were a fire and everyone tried to get out one-half of a door?

. . . . someone would again compare the Intimate prices on texts and the Book X prices—I took five books over to the Intimate and was offered $3.50 for all five, the man telling me that three of them were to be replaced next term. I then went to the Book X, where they should know if a book is going to be replaced or not, and received $5.25 for only three of them! (They, too, said that ONE was going to be replaced, but not the other two.) Anybody smell profiteering????

Well, boys, let's see an answer to this!

Urban Power To Increase

By RAYMOND LAHR

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court's haymaker blow at the state legislatures promises to inflate the political power of big cities at a time when the cities already are causing despair in the Republican party

Since the dawn after election day in 1960, the GOP has blamed its loss of the White House on the big city turnout for President Kennedy. It has given much attention to ways of curing its sick party organizations in the cities.

The country districts may be overrepresented in the legislatures and Congress but the big cities have political muscle of their own. It is shown every four years in the nomination and election of candidates for president.

All states cast their entire blocs of electoral votes on a winner-take-all basis. As was shown in 1960, Democratic majorities in big cities can outweigh Republican outstate majorities in such states as New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan and Illinois to elect a Democratic president.

Now comes the Supreme Court decision which in effect promises to increase the urban power in the state legislatures.

However, the news need not be all black for the Republicans. If the cities are underrepresented in the legislature, the suburbs are more so, and the GOP regards the suburbs as its territory despite Democratic gains in these areas in the 1960 presidential election.

In Monday's Supreme Court decision, the majority held that the federal courts could intefvene in a Tennessee legislative apportionment dispute after the legislature had refused to redistrict since 1901. The refusal to redistrict in that state gave rural dwellers a bigger voice in the legislature than those in the growing cities.

Situation Exists Elsewhere

Political scientists have assembled manuals of statistics to show that the same condition exists in many states because the farms are losing population to burgeoning metropolitan areas.

In a 1946 decision, Justice Felix Frankfurter called the redistricting dispute a "political thicket" which the federal courts should never enter.

If, as expected, the new decision invites similar suits against alleged inequities in other states, the courts must find their way out of the thicket. They may need years to escape.

If a state were functioning with an unfair apportionment plan and court action were threatened, the simplest solution would be adoption of a fair plan by the legislature.

The Minnesota legislature redistricted in 1959 under a threat of federal court action. The New Jersey legislature did the same last year with pressure coming from the state Supreme Court.

Could Halt Election

In the Tennessee case, it was suggested that a federal court could enjoin state election officials from holding elections until the legislature redistricted.

But what would happen if a legislature refused to bow to a federal court?

One proposal, which could bring nightmares to politicians, would have all members of a legislature of a state's congressional delegation elected from the state at large instead of by districts.

Another would have the federal courts draw the lines for new legislative or congressional districts. In their opinions Monday, Justice Tom Clark said this could be done; the dissenting Frankfurter said it would be impossible.

Unless legislatures yield quietly, some federal judges may find themselves presiding over political brawls and feeling, perhaps, like preachers caught up in a street fight.

First Free Bus System?

ITHACA, N. Y. (UPI) — This central New York city awaits the green light from federal authorities to put into operation America's first free municipal bus system.

Under the proposed system, tickets and fares would be dispensed with. Arthur Stallman, head of the City Council's Ithaca Transit Committee said, "you could just get on the bus and ride."

Ithaca applied fo ra $120,000 federal grant last fall to finance the program. The request has since been lowered to $104,000.

Funds would come from the Urban Transit Division of the Housing and Home Finance Agency under a $50 million program Congress set up last year to help rehabilitate transportation systems.

The Ithaca plan would be a pilot project to determine proper methods and procedures for bus operations in cities of comparable size.

Putting the free bus operation into effect hinges on federal approval of a workable plan submitted by the city and the signing of a formal contract guaranteeing two-thirds federal participation in all costs.

How does Ithaca's population view the experiment?

A housewife, Mrs. Robert Ready, said: "I think it will get more people to use the buses. People have gotten out of the habit of riding them." But she added many house wives probably would continue using their cars and students would be the main beneficiaries of the program.

Students and faculty at Cornell University and Ithaca College make up about one-third of the city's 30,000 population.

A downtown merchant, Fred Abraham, proprietor of a record store, praised the plan as "the kind of concerted effort which is need to stimulate Ithaca's business."

There are some dissident voices, like Cornell junior William Iming:

"People are still going to drive their cars if they have them," Iming said. He believes the automobile remains the "ultimate convenience."

Another disenchanted observer has been Ithaca's new mayor, John F. Ryan, a Democrat, who strongly opposed the free bus plan during his election campaign.

Faced with a Republican City Council which voted unanimously for free buses, Ryan adopted an official watch and wait attitude.

The plan also has received heavy outside criticism, particularly from Sen. Frank Lausche, D-Ohio, in December, who wrote Federal Urban Transportation Administrator Jackson Kohl:

"Where will this program end? If Ithaca is entitled to free transportation, what about other communities of the country?"

Housing Administrator Robert C. Weaver said the Ithaca program would be merely an experiment.

He said it would be designed to answer such questions as how much does the fare actually influence riding, whether the community receives any significant benefit from free service, who rides the buses and how often, what are its effects on demands, street traffic and police downtown stores, and on parking costs.

"The Housing and Home Finance Agency," he said, "is certainly not planning any permanent subsidies of commuter fares."

Interviews For Orientation Counselors Begin Monday

Program Needs 200 Students

Interviews for 200 orientation counselors for next fall will be held on Monday through Friday of next week in the Woodhous and Grail rooms of Graham Memorial, Orientation Chairman Bob Madry announced yesterday.

Madry said that about 200 counselors will be needed to properly run the program for next year's freshmen and transfers. This will be a record number, a result of the highest enrollment ever expected by the Admissions Office.

Forms Due Sunday

Applications can be picked up at the Scuttlebutt, Graham Memorial, Y-Court, and the desk of the Reserve Reading Room of the library. These should be turned in at the Information desk at Graham Memorial at which time the applicant can sign up for an interview. All applications are due on Sunday.

Madry said that the men chosen as counselors will be trained at three sessions, scheduled for April 9, 26, and May 3. Group dynamics, academics, and an introduction to the Orientation Manual will be taken up at these meetings.

"Rewarding"

"We feel that the position of Orientation counselor can be one of the most rewarding opportunities the Carolina student is offered," Chairman Madry said. "I hope that every interested student will come down for an interview.

Kennedy Would Debate Again In 1964 Presidential Race

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy Thursday apparently disposed of any doubts that he plans to seek a second White House term in 1964.

At one point in his news conference, a reporter pointed out that Kennedy's 1960 Republican opponent, former Vice President Richard M. Nixon, had indicated in his book that Nixon felt he won three of their four 1960 television debates. The President was asked if he thought future debates were advisable.

"I would think that it would be part of the 1964 campaign," he said in jocular fashion.

"I would be glad to debate, even if I did, as the vice president suggested, lose three out of four."

Kennedy told a news conference some weeks ago that he had his own ideas about whether or not Nixon should seek the California governorship. Asked Thursday if he could disclose this judgment, the Chief Executive drew a big laugh when he said:

"I said at the time I would be glad to discuss it with him and he has not yet spoken to me about it. I will be glad to go back to California."

The sign of the amateur

LESSON 5—The importance of head control

We are told that bird watchers, who always take notes while they watch, are able to keep one eye on the bird and one eye on the notebook. Eye dexterity of this type is also a great asset to the girl watcher. It enables him to watch two girls at the same time, even when the girls are sitting on opposite sides of a classroom. The beginner, who must watch the girls one at a time in a situation of this type, must learn to restrict his movements to the eyeballs. The girl watcher never moves his head. Undue head-turning, particularly if it is accompanied by shouts or whistles, is the sign of the amateur. (If you want something to shout about, try a Pall Mall!)

Tar Heels Host Virginia Tech Baseball Team

Emerson Stadium Action Starts At 3

By ED DUPREE

UNC's baseball team hosts Virginia Tech this afternoon at 3 in the first of two contests between the two clubs this weekend. The Gobblers of the Southern Conference meet the Tar Heels again Saturday at the same time.

Coach Walt Rabb's men opened their home season Wednesday with a 9-6 loss to Yale. Their overall record is 2-2.

Virginia Tech won seven and lost six in their conference last season and had a poor 9-15 season mark, but the VPI boys were rated as one of the loop's sleepers at the beginning of this season. Pitcher-first baseman Lee Melear and all-SC second baseman Eddie Hite are the top returnees from the 1961 club. Hite hit .343 and stole 12 bases.

Five Tar Heels carry better than .300 averages into today's game. Heyward Hull, with six hits in 13 trips to the plate, leads the UNC batters with a soaring .462 mark. The junior outfielder has a game-winning homer, a triple, and a double to his credit.

Buddy Tilden, a transfer junior from Wilmington Junior College, moved into the starting lineup in the outfield during the Florida trip last week and is now hitting .400 with four for ten.

Two Carolina infinelders are hitting .333 with five base knocks in 15 times at bat. One of these is Larry Neal who hit in the .300 bracket last season as a shortstop and is now the UNC third baseman. "Charlie Brown" exhibted his power in Wednesday's game when he cleared the left field fence for his first homer of the season.

Sophomore Jim Speight is the other .333 hitter. The Tar Heel shortstop has also driven in four runs to tie Hull for the team RBI leadership.

P. W. Swing, second baseman, is the fifth .300 hitter. His 4-5 against Yale made up for his slump on the southern trip and gives him .313 with five hits in 16 trips.

Len Dellolio, first baseman, has only three hits to his credit for 15 trips, but he hit the ball well three times Wednesday. One of the three was good for a hit, the others were line drives to the left fielder.

Wendell Brande has been the starting Tar Heel backstop, but he injured a finger in the Yale game and sophomore Bernie Isgett may take his place.

Russ Hollers has been slow coming around, but he is one of the most powerful hitters on the club. Either he or John Kouri will probably start in the outfield. If Hollers starts he will be in center with Tilden in left, while Tilden would patrol center if Kouri starts.

Heels Compete In Florida Relays

By HARRY TOCCE

The UNC track squad, hopeful of victories in the sprint and distance medley relays, journeyed to Gainesville, Fla Thursday morning to compete in Saturday's Florida Relays.

"Entering such a relay is a good way to see how the boys will shape up for the rest of the season," said UNC coach Dale Ranson. He stressed that Carolina does not expect to carry home a bundle of medals.

"We are defending champions in the distance medley and should do fairly well in that event as well as the sprint medley," said Ranson.

Teams from the Atlantic Coast, Southern, and Southeastern conference plus independent schools throughout the southeast will be competing in Saturday's relays.

The tentative list for the distance medley is: Bob Hart (440), Scott Brent (880), Jerry Stuver (¾ mile), and Rett Everett (mile).

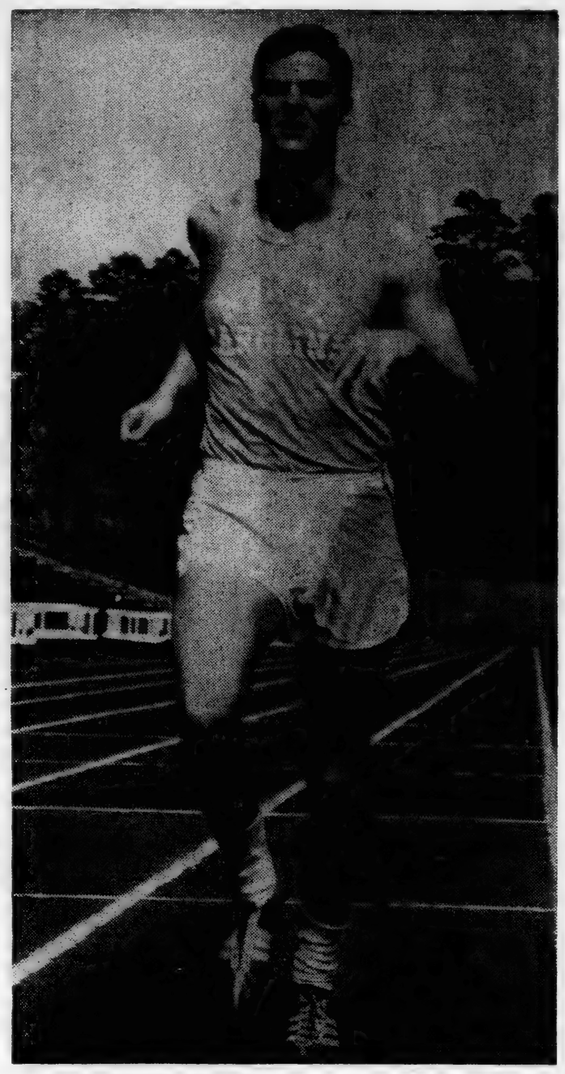
Also, the tentative sprint medley lineup is: Hart (440), Jim Brown (220), John McNinch (220), and Stuver (880).

The lineups will be governed by the order of the events to be run.

Hart, Daily Tar Heel athlete of the week, is scheduled to run in four relays, and Stuver is scheduled for three. Both boys would have to put on a Superman act should these events be run in succession.

Charlie Little, Bob Bennett,, Brent, Hart, and Stuver are five candidates to fill the four slots of the two-mile relay. Ranson will also choose four from a list of John O'Bannon, Heath Whittle, Hart, Brown, and McNinch to run the 440 relay.

Whittle, along with Barrie Tiedemann will give Carolina two 14-foot pole vaulters.



JIM BROWN, UNC high and low hurdler, will run the 220 in the spring medley in tomorrow's Florida relays. Teaming with him will be Bob Hart, 440, John McNinch, 220, and Jerry Stuver, 880. Brown will also run for the Tar Heels in the 440 relay.

Fencers Compete In National Meet

Three UNC fencers will compete in the National Fencing Championships this weekend at Ohio State.

Each of the teams entered in the championships can enter three men, one in the foil competition, one in the sabre, and one in the epee.

UNC's foil entry will be team captain Don Hubbard. Hubbard has the best win record on the team this season.

Jon Weber, a member of the United States Modern Pentathlon team of which fencing is one of the prerequisites, and a candidate for the 1964 Olympics, will be the Tar Heel entry in the epee competition.

Coach Pebley Barrow's entry in the sabre division is Tom Welch, a consistent winner who can use all three weapons well.

THE SHREW

There are monsters of the Loch Ness variety, and there is the short-tailed shrew. A three-quarter ounce terror that can be seen in your own back yard. Rabid metabolism drives him to eat anything smaller than a mink. One naturalist says, "If this animal were the size o fa leopard, mankind would be in danger of rapid extinction.

Thompson Mann In NCAA Swim Meet

By ED DUPREE

Thompson Mann will be UNC's only entry in the national collegiate swimming championships this weekend at Ohio State University in Columbus, Ohio.

Mann will swim his specialties, the 100 and 200-yard backstroke events, in the national championships.

In the Eastern championships two weeks ago at Yale University, the Tar Heel sensation finished second in both events. Princeton's Jed Graef finished ahead of him both times and will be one of his chief obstacles. Graef is also a sophomore.

At Yale Mann broke the Eastern meet record in both events with a 54.3 time in the 100-backstroke and a 2:01.9 in the 200-backstroke.

UNC Coach Pat Earey feels that the Hickory, Va., native can win the 100 and possibly get a national record at Columbus.

Four swimmers will represent N. C. State in the NCAA championships. They are freestyler Smokey Ellis, freestyler Bill McGinty, breaststroker Pete Fogarasy, and butterfly man Ed Spencer. Fogarasy and Spencer were All-Americans in 1961 as sophomores and all four are ACC champions. The All-American duo of Coach Willis Casey took championships in the Easterns.

Ohio State and Michigan head the field of 69 schools entered in the championship meet. Each has taken the national championships ten times since the first team title was inaugurated in 1937. Ohio State is a slight favorite and the Wolverines are the defending titlists.

There are 256 indivdual entrants.

Southern California's Trojans are expected to nab the number three spot. The westerners have captured the national title four times. Yale, with one championship, is the only team outside of the "Big Three" that has taken the title.

Indiana's powerful swimming team, possibly the greatest aggregation of swimmers and divers ever assembled on one college team, would rule as favorites, but the school is on probation for illegal football recruiting and its swimmers will not be eligible to participate.

Murray Rose is the defending individual champion in the 220, 440 and 1500-freestyle events. The 1500-meter Olympics champ is the captain of the Southern Cal team.

Other defending champs returning will be Dave Nelson of Michigan in the 100-yard breaststroke; Denver's Jack Kelson in the individual medley; Minnesota's Steve Jackman in the 100-freestyle, and Ohio State's Lou Vitucci in three-meter diving.

Red-White Game Concludes Spring Practice For State

RALEIGH — Coach Earle Edwards concludes off-season football practice for North Carolina State's Wolfpack with the annual Red and White football game this Saturday at 2:00 p.m. in Riddick Stadium.

"We have had some good practice sessions, despite the weather," said Edwards, "and we had a good chance to watch some of our new personnel, who will have to do a lot of playing for us next fall," he added.

Members of last year's freshman team, up-coming sophomores in the Fall, will be used extensively in the Red and White game and it will give Edwards and Wolfpack fans a good look at some of the newcomers under game conditions.

Edwards will wait until scrimmages later in the week before breaking his squad down into two opposing teams for this annual attraction, sponsored by the North Carolina State Monogram Club.

These scrimmages and the Red and White game will determine, in most cases, how the units will be set up to open practice in September.

"Right now about the only thing certain personnel-wise for this game is that Bill Kriger will direct the White team and Merrick Barnes the Red team at quarterback," said Edwards.

"We will use a lot of the freshmen at halfback and will probably have lettermen Joe Scarpati and Mike Clark on opposing sides," continued the Wolfpack coach.

With All-America Roman Gabriel having graduated from the quarterback spot, the number one spot is up for grabs.

Newcomers who have impressed Edwards and his staff include Ray Barlow of Crewe, Virginia, a quarterback as a freshman but switched to end this spring, and Bill Hall, end from Plymouth.

Steve Parker, tackle from Durham, and guards Bennett Williams of Ahoskie and Don Hamilton of Charlotte, along with the linebacking of Lou DeAngelis, Reading, Pa., drew praise from Edwards for the spring showing.

Last year the Reds came from a 13-0 deficit to win 15-13.

Coaches' Clinic Here Tomorrow

The fourth annual UNC high school baseball coaches' clinic will be held in Emerson Stadium tomorrow at 10 a.m. prior to the game between Carolina and Virginia Tech.

Tar Heel coach Walter Rabb, immediate past president of the National Baseball Coaches Association will direct the clinic and discuss overall play while Flaik (Red) Laird, VPI coach, Junie Floyd, an assistant at State College, and Chuck Hartman, High Point College coach, will be the featured instructors.

Laird will lecture on outfield play with Floyd scheduled to speak on sliding and baserunning and Hartman, on third base play.

U. S. Must Stay Strong Says Baxter

The United States must stay militarily and economically strong, otherwise 185,000,000 Americans could become slaves of Russia, Dr. James Phinney Baxter III declared at the 1962 Weil Lecture Thursday night.

Russian concentration on war instruments "stems from a desire to dominate the world," he said. Americans must be ready for prolonged tension, uncertainty, anxiety, and strain.

Conceding that the United States will not strike first in an atomic war, Dr. Baxter, former President of Williams College, said the safety of the American people depends upon the ability of the United States to strike back swiftly and massively — and thus deter the USSR from launching a missile attack on the United States.

Shelters Are Useful

Fall-out shelters are useful in maintenance of peace, he said, for such protection would reassure neutrals and Allies that we intend to strike back and destroy the enemy at any cost.

The deterrent is the key, not only to keep the Russians from attacking us, but in order to convince the neutral nations of the world that the United States will firmly keep its commitments to 40 nations with whom the U. S. has mutual-protection agreements, he stated.

Prof. Baxter said there is little hope that the atomic bomb will be outlawed. "I have spent several years of my life studying the history of disarmament and it is gloomy reading, indeed, for a lover of peace. It is not too difficult to get the powers to rule out a weapon that holds little hope of a large military payoff, but it is quite another thing to rule out one that does."

Deterrence Defense

If the enemy is to be deterred from an attack on the United States he must realize, in his own mind, that he cannot win, said Dr. Baxter. "The defense policy of the United States rests on deterrence, based on a substantial military superiority over the Russians. Remember that this concept rests on something that takes place in the enemy's mind, not in yours or mine," he said.

He then told the story about the man who was approached by a bristling dog and remarked to a friend who tried to reassure him: "You know that the dog won't bite, and I know that he won't bite, but does the dog know?"

The building of fall-out shelters is a basic part of the U. S. policy of deterrence, said Dr. Baxter. Fall-out shelters will have the influence of showing the Russians we intend to come back after they strike first. "It is our avowed national policy not to strike the first blow in a nuclear war," he said, "and because of this there is a temptation to a potential aggressor to try for a devastating surprise.

"Our defense against sneak attack must include dispersal, radar warning against missiles as well as against manned bombers, hardening of the bases, anti-aircraft defense and anti-missile missiles, and maintenance of a portion of our force airborne around the clock and more of it on the ground alert.

"Here as before the value of deterrent depends on what the enemy thinks about our second-strike capabilty. He must be certain not only that our surviving dogs will bite, but that they will be numerous, mobile and strong enough for their bites to be fatal to him."

Speaking of limited wars that might be inspired to deplete our strength and to "put out brushfires" in several parts of the world, Dr. Baxter spoke of U.S.A. commitments to two score nations. "In the neutral areas of the world doubts have been ex-

The afternoon programs will deal with specific problems on local, national and international levels.

Dr. Crane Brinton, author and Harvard historian, will deliver the opening address to the 1962 Symposium on Sunday evening at 8:00 p.m. in Memorial Hall. His speech, "Some Concepts of Revolution," will deal with the origin and bases of revolutions in our modern Western environment.

McKissick, NAACP lawyer from Durham; Jack Kilpatrick, editor of the "Richmond News Leader," and McNeill Smith, former UNC student and Chairman of the State Advisory Commission on Civil Rights.

In addition to Carolina students and members of the University community, students from 16 different colleges and universities throughout the South and East will attend the programs. These students, over 20 in number, are coming to Carolina as a part of the Intercollegiate Seminars Program and will attend the first three days of the Symposium.

Special classes and closed meetings with university professors and the featured speakers are being arranged for the Seminar students during Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday mornings.

Ribicoff Announces Racial Policy

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Secretary Abraham A. Ribicoff made a surprise announcement Friday that the Kennedy administration plans to take its first direct action against racial segregation in the nation's schools.

In a statement that drew immediate fire from Southern Democrats in Congress, Ribicoff said his Health, Education and Welfare Department will cut off some federal aid next year to certain segregated schools attended by the children of servicemen and government workers livng on federal installations. Integrated schools would be provided for the youngsters.

Ribicoff also said the Justice Department was considering legal action aimed at ending all such "impacted areas" assistance to segregated schools.

The political effect of Ribicoff's statement, which came as a complete surprise to Congress, was expected to be immediate and troublesome for some of President Kennedy's key legislative proposals such as his liberal trade plan and medical care programs.

Depending On South

To win congressional approval, Kennedy is depending heavily on support from Southern Democrats. So far, the Southerners have displayed a willingness to be wooed.

But Sen. Strom Thurmond, D-S. C., said the aid cut-off "constitutes a flagrant act of economic blackmail."

Senior High Concert Is Sunday

Greensboro Senior High School's award-winning 80 - piece orchestra will play here Sunday afternoon in a free concert in Hill Hall at 4.

The program will include classical selections from Beethoven and Saint-Saens, and several more modern compositions. An original composition by John Barnes Chance will be a featured part of the concert.

Chance is a Ford Foundation composer now in residence with the Greensboro High School music department. He has been writing music for the school's musical groups for the past two years.

The orchestra is nationally recognized, having played for the Golden Anniversary Convention of the Music Educators National Conference in St. Louis in 1956. In 1959, the group played before the Southern Division meeting of the Conference in Richmond.

The concert is being sponsored by the Phi Mu Alpha music fraternity.

Clotfelter-Wrye Endorsed For Editor By Mathers

Clotfelter and Wrye will face Ernest Stepp in a run-off election Tuesday. The vice-president of the student body will also be selected Tuesday.

"Only persons with experience working on the Tar Heel are able to handle its problems," said Mathers in his endorsement.

Experience

"Ernest Stepp has not had the necessary experience to run the DTH," he said. "Both Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye have had experience enough to put out a daily paper."

Mathers received the highest vote total as a write-in candidate in last Tuesday's regular election. Clotfelter-Wrye placed second and were scheduled to face Mathers in a run-off, before he withdrew Wednesday.

Since the co-editor candidates failed to receive a majority of the votes cast, they have to face third-highest Stepp.

Statement

Following is the full statement by Mathers:

"Both Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye have had experience enough to put out a daily paper. Because of the nature of this election I am sure that the co-editors will make every effort to publish a quality newspaper.

"Even though I disagree with the political opinons of Jim Clotfelter, it seems reasonable that Chuck Wrye will tend to temper Jim's views. The political opinions of the editors should be considered secondarily to their technical qualifications.

Never Worked

"Ernest Stepp has not had the necessary experience to run the DTH. He admits that he has never worked on this paper. The DTH has special problems found in no other paper. It is a daily paper put out by students who are only able to give part of their day to working on the Tar Heel.

"A million other problems must be handled every day by the editor. Only persons with experience working on the Tar Heel are able to handle its problems.

"These aspects taken into consideration, I endorse Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye for co-editors of the Daily Tar Heel."

Allen Thanks Supporters, Backs Larry McDevitt

Student Body President-elect Inman Allen voiced yesterday his appreciation to the students for their support in the election last Tuesday.

Allen further stated his admiration for the conduct of his opponents during the campaign. "The quality of the campaign remained impressively high throughout the heat of opposition," he said.

Allen expressed his deepest thanks to all those who actively offered their support and efforts. To the many others behind the scenes who contributed to his vote of confidence, Allen acknowledged their importance and promised to work with the student body for the common betterment of the entire campus.

Finally, President-elect Allen urged that the entire student body support his running-mate, Larry McDevitt, in the forthcoming run-off election, Tuesday.

Allen cited their prior work and experience together, their compatible views, and their mutual desire to serve the campus as president and vice-president, respectively. Allen concluded by saying that, "I am confident that Larry McDevitt is the most qualified candidate to serve as Speaker of the Student Legislature and as vice - president of the Student Body."

Graduate Participation

The perennial question of participation in student government activities after graduation from undergraduate school has come up again this year, this time in connection with the candidacies of two students seeking the editorship of the DTH.

There are at present no student government regulations barring or discouraging participation in co-curricular activities by students in graduate school or those enrolled as special students. Student government, in fact, has long encouraged such participation.

Administrative policy regarding the question does not deny graduate or special students from participation; however, such participation is not generally looked upon with favor by the various departments in the graduate school.

This is unfortunate. The added experience and maturity that graduate and special students could lend to student government could strengthen it almost immeasurably. As a rule, participation ceases the moment a student enters graduate school. All the experience and background gained in four years are lost.

True, the primary emphasis for any student at Carolina, or any other institution, should be academic. But the educational process is not confined to the classroom, the library, or the laboratory. The function of a graduate student is not merely to move dusty bones from one grave to another in an academic cloister. Nor is it to forget the academic side and devote full time to the other areas—student government, publications, fraternities, politics, or the thousand and one other areas that complement and round out education.

Students should assume a greater role in guiding their own lives, not only by meeting requirements but by helping to set them; not only by conforming to a standard, but by determining what that standard will be—in academics, in politics, in influence.

The University must exist because of its students. It should be theirs in as great a measure—and even more—than it is the administration's, the state's or the nation's.

The responsibility of the graduate student in making the University of North Carolina that kind of institution—an institution for students and governed largely by students—is greater, because of their experience and ability and their stake in education, than that of the undergraduate.

We need more participation in student government by graduate students, not less. The graduate schools should encourage it as part of the educational process, not discourage it as foreign to it.

Higher Education

Doubtless there are more than phantom uncertainties in the overhaul of the State Board of Higher Education proposed by two committees of the Carlyle Commission, and if so they should be fully sounded out before any change is endorsed or made.

Still, the proposal to enlarge the board is not frivolously made. In the beginning the Board of Higher Education was to be a referee of the "institutional imperialism" (as Major McLendon calls it) which inspires one state-supported college to poach on the assigned tasks of another.

In the mid-Fifties, for example, there was considerable talk of duplicating elsewhere the Ph.D. program in liberal arts which had long existed at Chapel Hill. There may now be, as certain Raleigh interests are saying, a case for duplication of degrees at the undergraduate level—specifically a case for State College's offering B.A. degrees in the liberal arts, along with degrees in engineering and agriculture.

Through all this, two common sense considerations remain: As Dr. O. C. Carmichael said at Friday's Board of Higher Education meeting in Raleigh, where the matter of board enlargement was discussed, it would be a disaster if North Carolina's system of higher education lacked at this crucial time, a guiding hand to make sure that "gaps" are not left "through which the state could dissipate its resources."

The board is needed as a co-ordinator. The question now is whether the present board is an adequate co-ordinator, and apparently many members of the Carlyle Commission are convinced that it is not. The members of the board, all busy men and women, have other obligations and lack time for close day-to-day scrutiny of the state colleges and the Consolidated University. They sometimes find themselves at cross-purposes, if not open disagreement, with the college administrators who have that day-to-day perspective.

The college heads know their problems; and a Board of Higher Education which could thrash out differences within its own membership, then present a united front to the Legislature and the people of the state, would be infinitely more persuasive than the divided counsel that now exists. Maybe there will be "friction" within such a board, as was feared Friday. But better this friction, to be resolved within the board, than friction between the board and the institutions it presides over.

Doubters on the oBard of Higher Education must find better arguments than those presented Friday, if North Carolinians are to be persuaded that the Carlyle Commission committees have not hit on a sound suggestion.

Frat Man Says

'We Are Egotistic'

Dear Mr. Wuamett,

Enough is enough. I've sat around for too many hours reading your type of trite, derogatory, verbal vomit. It may be true that the fraternity system is toppling, that our original purpose is antiquated, and that ethnocentric groups such as ours have no place in your socialistic campus. But, Mr. Waumett, that is OUR problem, not yours. It's none of your business, sir.

We are in-groups. We are egotistic in nature. No amount of raving by you or anyone else who does not belong to our group will have any effect on our actions.

I am a member of the University and at the same time a member of my fraternity. For this reason I feel qualified to express my feelings on the situation.

But you, sir, are NOT a member of a fraternity, and you have no right whatsoever to condone or condemn us. You have every right to speak out on any effects we may produce IN THE UNIVERSITY, but, sir, don't tell us how to run our own business, don't tell us to abolish ourselves, don't tell us how to use our toilet paper.

In short, Mr. Waumett, get lost.

—J. B. Murphy, Jr.

We back Ernie Stepp to the hilt.

The fact that UP backs him does not faze us a bit. The fact that he belongs to a frat doesn't faze us a bit. The fact that Town Men's District III voted 250 UP, 13 SP is, we believe irrelevant to the situation.

Even if Ernie did use fraternity men exclusively to fill his 50 man news staff, we believe it would do no harm at all. Ernie Stepp, for a new and different DTH.

William Dowell
Robert Bullard

During the past election, much was said about the fraternity-dormitory split. Each party blamed this split on each other. Individuals have given its cause to over a dozen different things. Everything from "frat rats," "dorm rats," the administration, the 80% rule, and the DTH has been blamed for the split.

The only thing that has been proved for sure is that a split does exist.

I am a fraternity member, I live in a dorm. All I have heard for the past two years is gripe, gripe, gripe. I'm sick of it.

All anybody has to say is what's wrong. Nobody seems willing to advance a solution for healing this split. I don't have such a solution, but on a campus the size of UNC it looks like someone should be able to come up with an answer.

Let's have a little less griping and a little more work towards bringing the controling groups on this campus closer together.

An Open Letter To The College Grads Of 1962 From Labor Secretary Goldberg

I am pleased to extend my congratulations to the 1962 graduates of our Nation's colleges and universities. Your diploma and the effort you have put into earning it will serve you well in today's world.

The 1962 college graduating class may very well be the largest in history. Preliminary estimates show that approximately 425,000 men and women will receive bachelor's degrees this June and more than 90,000 will earn higher degrees. The total would surpass the previous record set in 1950 when veterans of World War II inflated college enrollments.

Next year, and each succeeding year in this decade, will see a progressively higher number of college graduates, as the population increases of the 1940's begins to be felt on the college level in the 1960's. By 1970 it is expected that more than 700,000 young men and women will be receiving bachelor's degrees.

Many of you will be continuing your education in the fall. This is a wise course of action. As a general rule, higher education pays off in better job opportunities and higher income. But you will also be in a position to make a greater contribution to society. For many years the number of those holding doctoral degrees has been insufficient to meet the demands of industry, government, and education.

For those of you who intend to go into the labor market on a permanent basis, your prospects for finding work are better than they would have been a year ago. Production, earnings and employment have all climbed to new levels in recent months, while unemployment has gone down. The remainder of 1962 promises further improvement in the economy.

The bright economic picture is reflected in the fact that campus job recruiters have been more active this year than last. I am sure that many of you have already been interviewed about employment in some business or government agency.

Demand for Grads Vary

One should not conclude, however, that the supply of graduates is so limited that everyone can choose among several offers. As in the past, the demand for graduates varies according to the field of specialization. Engineering, physics, and mathematics garduates are in strong demand in industry and government and in the schools.

The reasons for this are apparent when we consider that in the past decade many dramatic developments have taken place in science and technology. These, in turn, have put us on the threshold of further new discoveries, as our knowledge of ourselves, the world we live in, and the universe that surrounds us expands at a phenomenal rate.

Currently, about $15 billion a year is being spent on research and development projects in every sector of the economy. This amount is about double what was spent only five years ago.

In this connection, I want to point out that there are many employment opportunities for engineering and science majors in the Federal Government. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration, for example, has immediate need for technical help with our country's lunar and space programs, nuclear propulsion and supersonic transport research, and other aeronautical and space projects.

Urgent Need for Teachers

Many of you, I know, will be joining this search into the unknown in some way. It offers many exciting challenges for the inquiring mind, and many fine opportunities for personal achievement. In a larger sense the progress and survival of our society rests on these efforts.

Demand for college graduates is also high in many other fields. Teaching is the largest of all professions and a most essential one for the continuing growth of our great culture. Shortages of qualified teachers still exist on all levels of education. I hope more of you will come forward to fill this urgent need.

There is also a greater need for health and welfare and social workers to provide assistance for the crippled and the infirm in our society, for many of our older people, as well as our young boys and girls who need recreation facilities.

Employment opportunities are also excellent for business trainees and specialists in many other fields.

In 1962, starting salaries are again at a higher level. According to reports coming to me from throughout the country, starting salaries for men holding the bachelor's degree will average $480 a month, slightly higher than last year. In general, women will receive less. So will liberal arts graduates. But engineers and graduates with advanced degrees can expect, as a rule, to command higher starting salaries.

Money Not the Only Consideration

You would be well advised however, not to make salary considerations the sole standard for choosing a job. You should also be careful about taking a job just because it is readily available. Obviously, if is important that you have an interest in your work and that it is the kind of work you can do well.

If you are still in doubt about your career, you may find it useful to consult the latest edition of the Labor Department's Occupational Outlook Handbook, which should be available in your school library or placement office. This book provides a comprehensive guide to career opportunities in more than 650 occupations and 30 industries. It has the most recent information available on earnings and working conditions, nature of work, and the qualifications needed for employment and advancement. It also analyzes both short-range and long-range job opportunities.

Now if you have already decided on your career, but are having trouble finding a job, let me further suggest that you seek the help of placement specialists on your campus or at your local Federal-State Employment Office. Recruiters from many parts of the country and in many lines of work come to your college placement office looking for candidates.

The United States Employment Service in cooperation with the States, territories, and the District of Columbia maintains more than 1,800 offices throughout the Nation. If the job you want is not available in your own community, your local employment office may be able to find it for you somewhere else. Last year the employment service filled around 200,000 jobs in professional and managerial occupations many of which went to college graduates. Local employment offices have recently reported a high demand for engineers, accountants and auditors, social and welfare workers, teachers, trained nurses, and natural and social scientists.

Following is a more detailed breakdown of jobs for college graduates:

Civil Service

The Nation's largest employer, the Federal Government, each year hires many thousands of college graduates to fill positions in hundreds of different occupations in its 70 departments and agencies.

Government agencies urgently need physicists, chemists, mathematicians, and engineers in all fields including electronics, electrical, aerospace, and mechanical. For these and other hard-to-fill positions in engineering and scientific fields, entrance salaries have recently been raised. Graduates with a bachelor's degree are being hired at $5,335 a year. Graduates with superior scholastic records or those with some work beyond the bachelor's degree receive $6,345 a year. Under some conditions, persons who have acquired a master's degree may start at $8,340, and those who have acquired a Ph.D. degree may start at $8,955; to qualify for these salaries, applicants (1) must have a superior scholastic record, (2) must have obtained their degrees within the last two years, and (3) must be hired for research and development work.

College graduates in liberal arts, business administration, public administration, biological sciences, and social sciences are recruited to fill a great variety of traineee positions leading to careers in management, administrative and professional areas. People interested in receiving training in any one of about 60 career fields should take the Federal-Service Entrance Examination. Nearly 10,000 persons were hired last year from this one examination. Starting salary in most cases at $4,345 a year. However, outstanding graduates with a B.A. degree or those with graduate education may be offered advanced trainee positions at $5,355 a year. Employment opportunities from this examination are good—especially for economists statisticians, writers, revenue officers, and claims examiners. Excellent opportunities also exist in the Federal Government for graduates in accounting. Such jobs, including those of Internal Revenue agent, are covered by separate examinations, not requiring a written test. Information and application forms may be obtained from college placement offices, offices of the Civil Service Commission, or offices of nearby Federal agencies.

Business

Accounting continues to be an excellent source of employment opportunities in private industry, as well as in government. In many parts of the country, the supply of qualified applicants is well below the needs of accounting firms, manufacturers, insurance companies, and other business organizations. Trained accountants are also being sought for work in the electronic data-processing field. Starting salaries range between $450 and $550 a month for men with bachelor's degrees; salaries are somewhat higher for men who rank high in their class and for accountants with graduate degrees. In private accounting and in small firms, starting salaries will generally be lower than in public accounting.

Business administration and liberal arts graduates will find a great many opportunities for employment as sales representatives and sales trainees. Opportunities for management trainee positions, although less numerous, will also be good. Manufacturing firms, insurance companies, banks, and sales organizations are actively recruiting candidates for sales and trainee positions and for postions in transportation and traffic management marketing and merchandising, production planning and control, and related fields. Many positions are available in personnel work and advertising but competition for these jobs will be keen in most sections of the country. Competition will also be keen for the positions available in finance and public relations work. Employment opportunities are good for graduates in some specialties such as hotel and restaurant management.

Starting salaries range between $425 and $500 a month for most business trainee and sales jobs. Men with the master's degree in business administration can expect starting salaries up to $100 a month higher.

Opportunities for clerical and subprofessional jobs with good prospects of promotion will also be available to business administration and liberal arts graduates. Women qualifying for general office or secretarial work will have excellent propects for jobs which may lead to more responsible and better-paying managerial positions. Retailing will also provide managerial jobs for women graduates. The banking industry is becoming an important source of openings for women trained for work in the financial field.

Editor's Note: In a future issue of the DTH, we will complete Secretary Goldberg's Open Letter. He evaluates prospects in the physical sciences, mathematics, biological sciences, earth sciences, teaching, library work, law, journalism, the social sciences and related fields and the health professions.

Three Classes Will Reunite In June

Alumni Reunions at Commencement in June will be featuring 10, 20, 25, and 50-year reunion groups.

Class President J. Archie Myatt of High Point is heading arrangements of the 10-year Class of '52 for a day's program on June 2.

Joining with the 20-year Class of 1942 for a reunion supper gathering, June 2, at Hope Valley Club will be two other "Pearl Harbor" generation classes—those of '41 and '43. George Coxhead of Chapel Hill, Class of 1942, is general chairman of the three-class reunion.

The 22-year reunion class—traditionally a large affair—will be held June 1 and 2. Fred H. Weaver of Chapel Hill is President of the Class. At a recent meeting of the commiteees working on arrangements some 80 class members came to Chapel Hill.

The 50-year Class of 1912 is due for "induction" as "freshmen" into the Old Students Club at a luncheon on June 3. John C. Lockhart of Greensboro is Secretary of '12, and Claude E. Teague of Chapel Hill is Reunion Arrangements Chairman. Some 90 surviving members of '12 have been invited to return.

Other classes scheduled for reunions during Commencement include '17, '22, '27, '32, '47, and '57.

The Alumni Office is again serving as a clearing house of information about class reunions and the overall commencement program.

pressed that we would ever commit our heavy bombers because of our lack of fall-out shelters to protect our civil population," he said.

"Under such circumstances fall-out shelters might save fifty million lives," said Prof. Baxter. "Fallout shelters are not only refuges in a war that we hope will never take place, they would also increase the credibility of our deterrent and thereby contribute to the maintenance of peace."

Strength

The United States must maintain a strong military establishment and to tell the enemy we intend to maintain our superiority in weapons and use them over any possible coalition of hostile enemies, said Baxter. "To follow such a course requires a long purse, an advanced technology and a stubborn resolution to maintain one's lead despite any threat of a scientific breakthrough by one's possible opponents."

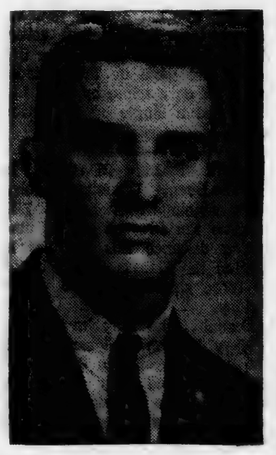
The individual American, he stated, needs to know a great deal more than he did fifty years ago, and to adjust himself to prolonged tensions.

"If we look at earlier periods of our history, when our forefathers lived on an Indian frontier or their descendants battled through four years of the War Between the States, we have no reason to doubt the capacity of American women and men to stand uncertainty, anxiety and strain," he said.

ANGEL COMMANDER—Miss Gail Robinson, a junior at the University of North Carolina, hails from New Bern. Gail is the newly elected Angel Flight commander of the Arnold Air Society's Area B-2. The Arnold Air Society is an extra-curricula organization of the Air Force ROTC and is composed of outstanding AFROTC cadets. The Area B-2 group of the society held its annual conclave at N.C. State College this weekend and elected Gail Commander of the Angel Flight at that time. The Angel Flight is an auxiliary of Arnold Air Society. It is composed of coeds who serve as hostesses at AFROTC social functions. UNC was elected as headquarters for the Angel Flight. Colleges attending the conclave include UNC, East Carolina College, Agricultural and Technical College, Duke, University of Virginia, and N.C. State.

Rearden Named Head Of GMAB

Bob Rearden, a two-year member of the Graham Memorial Board of Directors, has been named President of the Graham Memorial Activities Board for the coming year.



BOB REARDEN

Rearden, a junior from Langdale, Ala., served as vice-president of the Board this year. As President of the Board, he will also serve as chairman of the Board of Directors.

He served as treasurer of the Junior Class this year and as treasurer of the Carolina Forum. He has also been a clerk in the Men's Council.

Outgoing chairman Inman Allen said of Rearden in announcing his selection, "I am sure he will do a very effective job with the two years experience he has received with GMAB. He possesses a great deal of imagination."

Interviews for chairman of GMAB committees are to be held in the very near future. Rearden said, and asked that all interested students contact him.

Cuban Prisoners Refuse Attorney

HAVANA (UPI)—The 1,182 war prisoners on trial for treason have rejected the services of their court-appointed defense attorney and, in effect, challenged the legality of the proceedings against them, it was reported Friday.

Members of the prisoners' families who reported they were in touch with the men said their attitude explained government claims they had all pleaded guilty and waived a defense. The government's allegations had implied perhaps the largest mass confession of guilt since the Soviet purge trials of the early 1930s.

A Havana radio program monitored in Miami, Fla., indicated the government had divided the prisoners into three categories for sentencing. Radio Progrose, a government station, hinted some would be executed, others sentenced to prison at hard labor and the remainder given "politcal indocrination."

Jackie Not To Keep Presents

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Most of the gifts Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy received during her tour of India and Pakistan will be given to museums and zoos, the White House said Tuesday.

Press Secretary Pierre Salinger said an ecepxtion will be made for Sardar, the thoroughbred horse presented to Mrs. Kennedy by Pakistan President Ayub Khan. Mrs. Kennedy, an avid horsewoman, will keep the horse, Salinger said.

Salinger said the bay gelding, whose English name is "Chief," will be flown to this country in a portable stall which was built to return former President Dwight D. Eisenhower's bulls from India. Eisenhower received the bulls as a gift from India.

Salinger said the stall will be put aboard a Military Air Transport Service MATS plane. He said MATS flies two weekly support flights to India and Pakistan.

"These two deadheads come back empty," he said.

Salinger was asked at his news briefing about the avalanche of gifts showered on the first lady during her two-week tour of India and Pakistan.

"The gifts will be handled in the way state girts are historically handled," he said. "Some will go to museums and some will go to zoos."

The gifts Mrs. Kennedy received included a spinning wheel, given by the memorial keeper at the Ghandi tomb; water colors, by New Delhi school children; a teak tray from youths in New Delhi's boys' town; a brass fruit bowl and native costumes for her children; and two tiger cubs, from the Indian government.

In Oakistan, Mrs. Kennedy received a pearl necklace with the strands held together with gold and set with diamonds, rubles and emeralds; a karakul hat, from President Ahub, and a silver dagger, from tribal chieftains.

OAS Carries Out New Attacks

ALGIERS (UPI) — The Secret Army Organization (OAS) carried out a new wave of terrorist attacks against Moslems Friday and rocked the cit ywith plastic bomb explosions again Friday night in protest against formation of the Moslem-dominated Provisional Executive.

The Provisional Executive went into operation Friday in a slap at the OAS which had ended the temporary lull in Algiers Thursday night with 22 bomb explosions. They resumed the bombing Friday night and within an hour starting at 8:18 p.m. 12 blasts rocked the suburbs.

The extremist OAS has boasted repeatedly that representatives of the rebel National Liberation Front (FLN) would never set foot in Algiers, but five of them arrived Friday to complete the lineup of the 12-member Provisional Executive, that will rule Algeria till full independence comes.

17 Persons Killed

The OAS reacted by killing at least 17 persons and wounding 18 in Algiers alone, bringing the casuaity toll since Jan. 1 to 3,326 killed and 7,166 wounded.

Friday night, shortly after the five FLN men arrived at administration headquarters at Rocher Noir, 1 8miles outside Algiers, Moslem Abderrahmane Fares, 51-year-old president of the Provisional Executive, broadcast a message to the people.

Though Fares addressed Europeans in the message as "dear compatriots" and appealed for fraternal relations, the speech was a bitter one to swallow for the 1,000,000 Europeans who face being governed by the Moslem majority.

Fares praised the Moslems for showing the "most beautiful example of civic sense and political maturity." He said he shared their impatience for the "carillon of peace" and urged them to be calm in the face of maneuvers aimed at sabotaging the peace.

Plane Flight Deadline Is Extended

The deadline for signing up for the special group flight to London this summer sponsored by Graham Memorial has been extended to April 27, in order to allow students to complete arrangements over the spring holidays.

This date will be the final deadline and all passages must be paid for in full by this time. Round trip, via DC-8 jet is only $300.00, a substantial saving over the regular tourist fare.

Regular Jet Flight

The flight, which is on a regularly scheduled Alitalia airlines jet, departs New York at 9:15 p.m. on June 11 and arrives in London at 8:35 a.m. Return flight departs London at 1:40 p.m. August 22 and arrives New York City at 4:20 the same afternoon.

After the April 27 deadline, no cancellations can be made, but substitutions (by another eligible UNC student) can be arranged until June 1. Sixteen reservations are now in, four more have declared that they are going and several more have expressed serious interest. Only twenty-five are necessary to obtain the $300.00 special rate.

CRAM COURSE NO. 1:
MODERN EUROPEAN HISTORY

The school year draws rapidly to a close, and it's been a fun year, what with learning the twist, attending public executions, and walking our cheetahs—but are we ready for final exams? Some of us, I fear, are not. Therefore, in these few remaining columns, I propose to forego levity and instead offer a series of cram courses so that we may all be prepared at exam time.

We will start with Modern European History. Strictly defined, Modern European History covers the history of Europe from January 1, 1962, to the present. However, in order to provide employment for more teachers, the course has been moved back to the Age of Pericles, or the Renaissance, as it is jocularly called.

The single most important fact to remember about Modern European History is the emergence of Prussia. As we all know, Prussia was originally called Russia. The "P" was purchased from Persia in 1874 for $24 and Manhattan Island. This later became known as Guy Fawkes Day.

Persia, without a "P" was, of course, called Ersia. This so embarrassed the natives that they changed the name of the country to Iran. This led to a rash of name changing. Mesopotamia became Iraq, Schleswig-Holstein became Saxe-Coburg, Bosnia-Herzegovina became Cleveland. There was even talk in stable old England about changing the name of the country, but it was forgotten when the little princes escaped from the Tower and set fire to Pitt, the Elder.

Meanwhile Johannes Gutenberg was quietly inventing the printing press, for which we may all be grateful, believe you me! Why grateful? I'll tell you why grateful. Because without Gutenberg's invention, there would be no printing on cigarette packs. You would not know when you bought cigarettes whether you were getting good Marlboros or some horrid imitation. You could never be sure that you were buying a full-flavored smoke with a pure white filter, a cigarette that lets you settle back and get comfortable—in short, a Marlboro. It is a prospect to chill the bones and turn the blood to sorghum—so if you are ever in Frank-furt am Main, drop in and say thanks to Mr. Gutenberg. He is elderly—408 years old last birthday—but still quite active in his laboratory. In fact, only last Tuesday he invented the German short-haired pointer.

But I digress. Back to Modern European History. Let us turn now to that ever popular favorite, France.

France, as we all know, is divided into several departments.

He invented the German short-haired pointer

There is the Police Department, the Fire Department, the Gas and Water Department, and the Bureau of Weights and Measures. There is also Madame Pompadour, but that need not concern us because it is a dirty story and is only taught to graduate students.

Finally, let us take up Italy—the newest European nation. Italy did not become a unified state until 1848 when Garibaldi, Cavour, and Victor Emmanuel threw three coins in the Trevi Fountain. This lovely gesture so enchanted all of Europe that William of Orange married Mary Stuart and caused a potato famine in Ireland. This, in turn, resulted in Pitt, the Younger.

All of this may seem a bit complicated, but be of good cheer. Everything was happily resolved at the Congress of Vienna where Metternich traded Parma to Talleyrand for Mad Ludwig of Bavaria. Then everybody waltzed till dawn and then, tired but content, they started the Thirty Years' War. © 1962 Max Shulman

Virginia Tech Edges Tar Heels In 4-3 Thriller

VPI Scores Four In Eighth Frame

By ED DUPREE

A ninth inning UNC rally fell short by one run yesterday and Virginia Tech defeated the Tar Heel baseballers, 4-3. The teams play again today at 3.

The narrow loss marked the second straight for Coach Walt Rabb's men. Just as they did against Yale Wednesday, the Tar Heels outhit the visitors, this time by 10-5.

For the second straight game it was a big eighth inning rally that salted the win away for the winners. The Southern Conference Gobblers overcame a 2-0 Carolina lead by packing four runs into the eighth frame. The Ivy Leaguers from Yale scored five in the eighth to chalk up a 9-6 win Wednesday.

Sophomore right hander Andy Billesdon was the victim of the four-run outburst. Until the eighth inning rolled around, the Lothrup Village, Mich., hurler had tossed a two-hit shutout.

Shortstop Terry Strock ignited the game-winning rally with a single and went to second on Billesdon's wild pitch. The 6-3 UNC moundsman then walked right fielder Dave Blake. It was only the second time in the contest that two runners were on the basepaths at the same time for VPI.

Left Fielder Don Coleman went down swinging, but then a passed ball charged to catcher Bernie Isgett advanced the runners to second and third. The batter, center fielder Bobby Joe Quesinberry, was issued an intentional pass.

The Virginians broke into the scoring column on third baseman DeMoss Price's single to left field. Strock and Blake scored and Quesinberry went to third. Price went to second on the throw to third.

With the score knotted at 2-2, the lanky Billesdon struck out first sacker Wayne Hanks and it seemed that he might get out of the inning with the score tied. But the Gobbler backstop, Larry Lawson, belted a 1-2 pitch into right field and another pair of runs scored to make it 4-2.

At this point Rabb pulled his starter and called on another soph, Bobby Cox. Pitcher Lee Melear, who went all the way to chalk up his second win of the season, grounded out to end the inning.

Len Dellolio, UNC first baseman, led off the bottom of the eighth with a line single to left—his second hit of the day, but Jim Speight, pinch hitting for center fielder Dave Pope, hit into a double play and the Tar Heel threat ended.

Cox retired the visitors in order in the top of the ninth to set up the desperation UNC rally in the bottom of the frame.

Russ Hollers, batting for Cox, went out on a high fly to center. Shortstop Tommy Wright went down swinging for the second time. But Buddy Tilden got his second hit in four trips to the plate and UNC's attempt with two out was under way. Paul Swing followed the left fielder to the plate and singled to center.

Clean-up hitter Larry Neal drove in his second run of the day when he sent a grounder between short and second to score Tilden. Swing was held up at second and Heyward Hull came to the plate.

Hull had reached base twice on errors and grounded two times to Hanks at first base against the pitching of Melear. For the third straight time he grounded to Hanks unassisted to end the game.

The Tar Heels jumped into a 2-0 lead in the opening inning. Cronin Byrd, the starter at shortstop, connected on a Melear curve ball, advanced to second on Swing's infield grounder, and scored on Neal's single to right center.

Hull accounted for the second run of the inning when he hit a high liner to left which bounced off Coleman's glove. The left fielder's miscue permitted Neal to score and Hull to go all the way to third.

For the next six innings Billesdon and Melear locked up in a pitching duel which saw UNC pick up four hits and VPI only one.

In his seven and two-thirds inning stint Billesdon struck out eight, walked six, and yielded only five hits. Reliever Cox retired four men in a row.

The left handed Melear gave up ten hits, but spaced them over seven innings—he yielded only five base knocks in the middle seven frames. He struck out five and walked three.

Strock paced the Gobblers at the plate with two hits in five trips, while three Tar Heels, Tilden, Neal, and Dellolio connected for two hits apiece. Tilden's double was the only extra base hit of the afternoon.

Reds Win Fourth Straight Allison Slugs Three HRs

FORT MYERS, Fla. (UPI)—Roberto Clemente's two-run homer paced the Pittsburgh Pirates in a 10-hit attack Friday to hand the St. Louis Cardinals their third straight defeat, 5-4, despite the slugging of Card rookie Gene Oliver.

Oliver, who batted .302 with 36 homers at Portland last year, slammed four hits, including a triple and a bases-empty home run, for exactly half of the Cardinals' hits.

Clemente, the National League batting champion, broke a 1-1 tie with his homer off losing pitcher Ernie Broglio in the third inning. The Cards tied the game with two in the fourth but the Pirates added one in the fifth and one in the seventh. Broglio gave up six hits, three walks, and two wild pitches in six innings.

Vinegar Bend Mizell allowed three runs and six hits in six innings for the Pirates and was the winner as Larry Foss finished up.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (UPI)—Gus Bell doubled home Richie Ashburn from second base with the winning run in the 10th inning Friday to give the New York Mets a 2-1 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Ashburn opened the 10th for the Mets by being hit by one of losing pitcher Don Ferrarose's pitches. Red Kanehl's infield out advanced Ashburn to second and Bell doubled over the right fielder's head for the winning run.

Art Mahaffey, ace of the Phillies' staff, became the first Phils' pitcher to go nine innings but he left for a pinch hitter with the scored tied at 1-1. Mahaffey allowed seven hits and struck out five.

Bay Daziault and Herb Moford combined for the Met victory with Moford, who has pitched 10 scoreless innings this spring, getting the nod. Daviault pitched the first seven and gave up the Philadelphia run on a triple by John Callison and a single by Tony Gonzalez.

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (UPI)—Bennie Daniels, Washington's winningest pitcher in 1961, became the first to go the nine-inning distance this year as he limited the Kansas City Athletics to three singles in a 3-0 victory Friday.

Daniels, who may be manager Mickey Vernon's choice to pitch the April 9 opener in the nation's capital, issued only two walks and was in no serious trouble despite three infield errors behind him.

Washington got only two hits off Ed Rakow in sir innings, but collected three more, including a triple by Chuck Hinton, in a two-run ninth.

TAMPA, Fla. (UPI)—Two home runs by outfielder Joe Gaines and one each by Wally Post and Don Pavlotich led the Cincinnati Reds to their fourth straight victory Friday, 8-1, over the Detroit Tigers.

Rookie Sam Ellis and veteran Johnny Klippstein combined to pitch a seven-hitter for the Reds. Detroit's only run, in the third inning off Ellis, was unearned.

Post and Gaines, who hit .315 at Indianapolis last year, hit homers back to back in a five-run Cincinnoti rally in the fourth inning. Pavlotich and Gaines homered in the seventh. All four Redleg homers were off veteran Detroit southpaw Don Mossi.

ORLANDO, Fla. (UPI) — Bob Allison hit three home runs Friday but they weren't enough as the Minnesota Twins and Camilie Pascual blew a 4-0 lead and lost to the White Sox, 6-5.

Lions Get Plum In Six-Man Deal

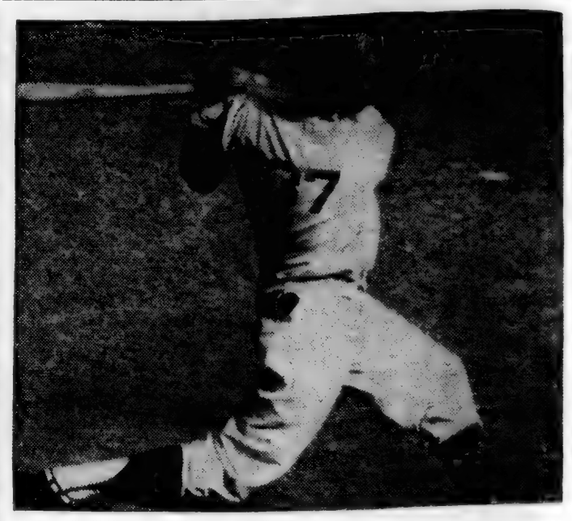
The Detroit Lions moved to bolster their weak offense by acquiring quarterback Milt Plum, the National Football League's top passer the last two years, in a three - for - three trade Thursday with the Cleveland Browns.

The Lions sent quarterback Jim Ninowski, back Hopalong Cassady and defensive end Bill Glass to the Browns for Plum, hard-running Tom Watkins and linebacker Dave Lloyd.

Ninowski, however, said he was very unhappy over being traded and futher stated, "I have no intention of going to Cleveland. I'll quit football if I have to."

George Wilson, Lion coach, said Ninowski's statement would have no effect on the trade. He said, "It's a deal. As far as we're concerned, he's the property of Cleveland."

The Lions had what many considered the best defensive unit in the NFL last year. But their sagging offense killed them in several games—and they finished second in the Western Division to the champion Green Bay Packers.



UNC pitcher Andy Billesdon takes a healthy cut in Friday's Virginia Tech-Carolina baseball game. The two teams play again today at 3.

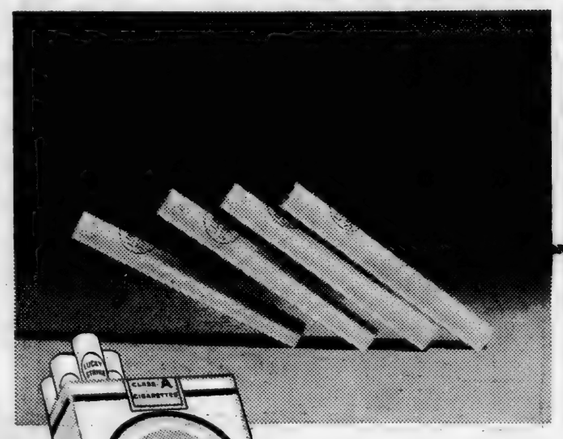
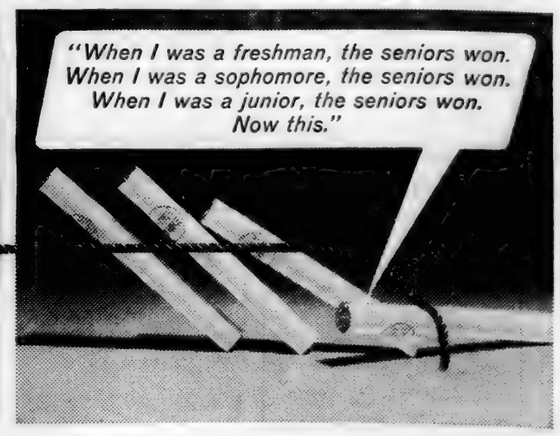
LUCKY STRIKE presents: LUCKY PUFFERS "SPRING MADNESS"





GO NEAR THE WATER. Spring is the time when students start thinking about water fun. We say: Splash up a storm. Have a lark. But please be careful. Each year, a few careless students get water on their Luckies. Imagine their remorse! Carolina Symposium '62 Opens Here Tonight

Grierson, Seldes To Be Featured Tomorrow Night

Critic John Seldes and film producer John Grierson will be the featured speakers at Monday's Symposium in Memorial Hall at 8. The pair will speak on "Revolutions in the Arts."

Their talks will include discussions not only of art per se, but of the general cultural revolution which may be seen in the rapidly changing cultural tastes of today's world. Seldes and Grierson are slated to discuss the whole spectrum of these changes in art.

Only Foreign Speaker

Grierson, who arrived here Friday night, is the only foreign speaker who will appear during the symposium. Grierson is a Scotsman who founded and led the British documentary film movement which caused radical changes in film production throughout the world. Two of his films, "Brandy for the Parson" and "The Brave Don't Cry" have appeared here as free flicks.

Most of Britain's realistic film directors have been members of his film units from one time to another. Out of this association has sprung such films as "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning."

Career Non-Conformist

Gilbert Seldes, arriving here tonight by plane, classifies himself as an entertainment critic and author and his field of interest ranges from motion pictures and televison to the theater and pure literature.

He has been termed by one critic as a "career non-conformist in the world of ideas," and attempts to speak for the underdog, the originator and the rebel. He produced the TV series "Immigrants All-American All" and wrote "The Stammering Century," a study of eccentric religions, political and social groups in the United States.

A Harvard graduate, Seldes is the first director of the Annenberg School of Communications at the University of Pennsylvania.

Intercollegiate Seminar Begins

The Intercollegiate Seminar Program starting today in conjunction with the Symposium will include 24 representatives from 17 different colleges and universities throughout the eastern part of the country.

The students gathering to take part in this discussion group are the intellectual leaders of such schools as Temple, Pembroke, the University of Pennsylvania, Smith College, and Swarthmore, as well as the leading schools in this immediate area.

Extension Of Symposium

The purpose of the Intercollegiate Seminar Program, which was instituted in 1960, is to emphasize and extend the basic purposes of the Carolina Symposium. Via this free discussion of facts and ideas and exchange of opinion, the Symposium is able to present an opportunity for intellectual creativity to an interested, yet heterogeneous group of students.

Morning Seminars

The representatives meet with the featured speakers in seminar from 9-12 Monday through Wednesday mornings, and they will attend the scheduled afternoon and evening presentations.

The visiting seminarists will be housed and fed in various dormitories, sororities, and fraternities during their stay at the University.

Brinton Address Kicks Off 5-Day Revolution Study

In Memorial Hall tonight at 8:00 p.m., the Carolina Symposium will open its five-day series of lectures and panels with a speech by Dr. Crane Brinton, the well-known Harvard historian.

Dr. Brinton, who arrived on campus last night, is speaking on the historical background of revolutions and the evolution of the term revolution as a philosophical concept. His address is entitled "Some Concepts of Revolution."

Popular Harvard Teacher

After a distinguished academic career both in the United States and abroad, Brinton is now one of Harvard's most popular teachers. Because of the witty manner in which Brinton handled philosophy in the early morning hours, his 8:00 class has become known as "Breakfast with Brinton."

He is one of the co-authors of "A History of Civilization," better known to the General College students as "BCW," and has written many other books as well. Some of his most recent works include "The Anatomy of Revolution," "A History of Western Morals," and "The Fate of Man," which came out in 1961.

Misplaced Rationalist

Brinton, who has pictured himself as a misplaced 18th century rationalist, has been termed by one critic as a "child of the Enlightenment." Personally Brinton considers himself to be a quiet man who spends his summers in Vermont pursuing such non-intellectual activities as gardening and reading detective stories.

Monday Dr. Brinton will visit classes, tour the campus, and enjoy a meal at a sorority house. He and his wife will leave Carolina sometime Tuesday for their return trip home.

Race Relations Is Topic Of Discussion

"The Contemporary Revolution in Race Relations" will be discussed Monday afternoon by a three-man panel that will include NAACP lawyer, a segregationist newspaper editor and the chairman of the advisory committee for the North Carolina Civil Rights Commission.

The panel, to be moderated by Dr. Walter Spearman of the school of journalism, will include Floyd B. McKissick, Jack Kilpatrick, and John McNeill Smith.

McKissick, the first Negro graduate of the UNC Law School, has been active in racial matters for the NAACP both in Durham and other parts of the South. He was also a leader in the movement for total integration of Chapel Hill theaters .

McKissick was the attorney in the 1951 suit that resulted in admission of the first Negro undergraduate to UNC. A lawyer in Durham since 1952, he established the first Negro law firm in Durham and is currently the vice-president of the Durham branch of the NAACP.

Jack Kilpatrick, a self - styled Whig, became editor of The Richmond News Leader in 1950. A graduate of the University of Missouri, he was honored by Missouri in 1953 for his work in the campaign for the release from prison of a Negro life-termer who had been mistakenly convicted of murder.

He is the author of three books, "The Sovereign States," "The Lasting South," and "The Smut Peddlers," and has written, "I keep reading about the Negro's 'quest for equality.' It occurs to me he might begin in his own backyard simply by cleaning up the trash and repairing a broken fence."

Smith will not be in unfamiliar environment when he returns to the University for his participation in the Race Panel. A former editor of the Daily Tar Heel, he was also a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Delta Kappa Epsilon, the Order of the Golden Fleece, and the Order of the Grail during his years on the Carolina campus.

Smith, who believes that "every man charged with an offense is entitled to a defense and the best defense his lawyer can give; the more serious the charge, the more serious the need," was selected in 1959 by the Civil Rights Commission to act as chairman of an advisory committee then being formed in North Carolina.

Lawler To Back Dorm Activities

"Student government must take a realistic approach to the dormitory social problems," Mike Lawler said yesterday as he commented on social activities. "Though the all-campus weekend is a fine idea, because of certain aspects of the dorm social problem, it will be necessary to exclude a majority of undergraduate men, especially freshmen and sophomores, unless specific steps are taken to insure a successful all-campus weekend with 'all - campus participation,' said Mike Lawler yesterday.

Lawler, the SP candidate for vice-president in the run-off Tuesday, speaking on the problems of dormitory social life, pointed out that the freshmen and sophomore classes have few girls in them, producing an obvious lopsided ratio.

As a means of creating an atmosphere where more men and women of these classes meet each other, he proposed, more informal activities between the men's and women's dorms such as the successful sock hop program begun at the Nurses' dorm this year.

"Another way would be to have more co-recreational intermurals along the lines of the Grail Mural Jamboree," he said. Lawler also suggested that the men's and women's orientation programs work closer together towards a social advantage.

"I plan to orient the All-Campus Entertainment Committee more along the lines of handling campus entertainment and not just big name entertainment. I think this should be done because there are other agencies, which because of their facilities and contacts can bring us big name entertainment at a more reasonable cost," Lawler continued.

He stated that this would include such ideas as the committee providing a list of all student and non-student combos and offering a service whereby groups could hire combos in "package" deals obtaining the individual concert for less cost.

McDevitt Pushes For Social Life

The following is a statement on campus social activities by Larry McDevitt, UP vice-president candidate in Tuesday's run-off election:

"One of the major problems existing on the university campus today is in the area of social conditions. Although entertainment and social facilities are provided mainly through GMAB, these provisions do not instill a feeling in the minds of the majority of students that they "have a place to go or something to do" on weekends.

"Bus Lines"

"To aid in correcting this, student government should work to the utmost to obtain the basement of Cobb dorm next year as an all-campus social room. It is my hope that weekend combos can be provided as well as regular "bus lines" to carry dates here from Greensboro and Raleigh. This latter proposal would mainly benefit male freshmen and sophomores.

The idea of an off-campus hut for dormitory parties is a proposal that student government and the IDC should effect as soon as the necessary funds may be obtained.

All-Campus Weekend

"The idea of an all-campus weekend has been tossed around for years. Those which have been tried have met with little success, and yet I firmly believe that such weekends are needed and wanted at Carolina.

A project of this nature can be successful only with the cooperation of GMAB, the IFC, the IDC, the Campus Entertainment Committee, student government, and last but not least, the students of this university.

"We have the potential and financial means through cooperation to cause these ideas to become a reality. Student government should assume the initiative in securing such cooperation and establishing the all-campus weekend."

Moviemaker Says He May 'Sue Tar Heel'

By GARRY BLANCHARD

Monday night Symposium speaker John Grierson, 64, said yesterday he thinks he will sue the Daily Tar Heel "for a snappy half a million, and settle for fifty bucks out of court."

The reason, he said is that it printed a publicity release several weeks ago which said he had once been refused a visa to the United States.

"The implication of the statement is that I was persona non grata in this country. It's an interesting point. I was never refused a visa in my life."

The statement was typical of many Grierson made during an informal luncheon with a score of UNC students at a downtown restaurant yesterday afternoon.

His subject matter ranged from English society ("class-ridden") to the late architect Frank Lloyd Wright ("great"). Throughout, he was pungent, and never moreso than when he talked about the motion picture world, where his efforts have made him a living legend.

If someone asked him a question which he thought was stupid, he told them so. But not in a nasty way. More like an impatient professor dealing with an earnest but slightly backward pupil.

Words tumbled out of him in spurts, each spoken in a Scottish accent diluted by many years spent in the United States and elsewhere.

The United States, he said, is "such a funny country. You pick the Christmas Island for your atomic tests. You pick the Bay of Pigs to get defeated by one of the smallest countries in the world. Of all the lochs in Scotland, naturally you pick Holy Loch to send your atomic submarine to."

Student movements are strong in countries where there are no jobs for the newly educated, he said. "It's a different proposition here. You're a healthy society. I don't think you've got a student movement of any kind here whatever."

Grierson said he has talked with Jean-Paul Sartre, "and I found no great difference in our minds, although I'm much more appreciative of America than he is."

Grierson and Gilbert Seldes speak on "Revolutions in the Arts" at 8 p.m. Monday in Memorial Hall.

Monday Event On TV

WUNC-TV, Channel 4, will broadcast the Carolina Symposium program from the University of North Carolina Monday night at 8 o'clock

The topic Monday is "Revolutions in the Arts." Speakers for the evening are Gilbert Seldes, entertainment critic, and John Grierson, leader in Scottish television production.

Pranksters At Wake Forest Steal Bomb Shelter Signs

Shelter Signs Stolen

WINSTON-SALEM—Civil Defense "shelter" signs were removed from the doors and walls of four Wake Forest buildings by either pranksters or potestes last week.

The signs had been posted for about two weeks and a campus wide controversy had followed their erection. The protest centered around a belief that the signs indicated a "fear psychosis" and generally detracted from the appearance of the campus.

The signs, erected as part of a student-faculty Civil Defense program, have been replaced by sploches of paint on doors and windows.

Academic Freedom

URBANA-CHAMPAIGN, Ill.—The distribution of 4000 academic freedom petitions calling for removal of state and University restrictions on "controversial speakers" began last week on the University of Illinois campus.

Illini editor Wade Freeman, chairman of the petition drive, stated that the campaign had gathered support from "both liberal and conservative groups.

"In essence," he stated, "we're asking for the removal of controls which deny students the right to hear any opinion deemed "controversial."

The petition states in part: "We favor the alteration of any University policy or state law that serves the end of regulating or restricting such 'controversial' speakers."

Soda Champion

CHARLOTTESVILLE—A University of Virginia sophomore claimed a world record last week after he drank nine consecutive sodas at a local drug store.

The champ revealed the secret of his success after boasting that he could have drank 18 if the store had not closed.

"Drinking plenty of water" is the secret, he confided, and then admitted that he also smoked a pack of cigarettes during his two-and-a-half hour guzzling bout.

Voting Reward

MORGANTOWN, W. Va. — Good citizenship was rewarded last week at the University of West Virginia's elections. The coed dorm and sorority with the highest percentage of students voting received Sunday night late permission until 1 a.m.

Housing Discrimination

URBANA-CHAMPAIGN, Ill.—The University of Illinois trustees voted last week that single undergraduate students would not be allowed to reside in segregated commercially operated boarding houses after Sept. 1, 1965.

The action is expected to end all housing discrimination on the basis of race, creed and national origin.

The trustees failed to act on a similar proposal affecting fraternities and sororities.

Fraternity Troubles

ANN ARBOR, Mich.—The Sigma Nu national placed its University of Michigan chapter in receivorship last week, thus withdrawing all authority for the local to handle its own affairs.

The action came after the fraternity's failure to comply with a University rule forbidding discrimination clauses in fraternity chapters.

Other reasons cited for the action were scholastic troubles, local finances, poor morale and a lowered reputation on campus.

The local's compliance law troubles stemmed from the failure of the national fraternity to eliminate discriminatory clauses.

Stepp Denies Charge

Ernest Stepp, candidate for editor in Tuesday's run-off election, yesterday denied a statement by Mike Mathers in Saturday's DTH.

Mathers stated that Stepp, "admits that he has never worked on this paper." Stepp said, "I have never admitted this. I have done news and sports stories for the Tar Heel."

Letters Discuss Symposium, Elections, Mike Mathers

To the Campus:

In the forthcoming elections the students have a unique opportunity to elect a vice-president who can promote the most beneficial and practical points of the platform of both his party and the President's party.

By electing Mike Lawler to the vice-presidency, he can combine the most feasible points of the Student Party Platform with the President's program. Through their cooperative effort, we the students can receive the benefits of a dynamic combination that will provide Student Government with leadership that is more concerned with the general campus welfare and improvements than with party politics.

Mike is the man who can accomplish this vital objective.

—Fletch Somers
Former member of the Student Legislature and member-elect of the Men's Council

To the Editor:

Next Tuesday Carolina will choose a new vice-president of the student body. It is fortunate that both candidates are able and have worthwhile programs for Carolina's future.

One of them, however, is particularly well qualified. I speak of Larry McDevitt. Larry has served very capably in the legislature, where he has been a member of the Ways and Means Committee. For this service, his excellent work as co-chairman of the State Affairs Committee, and his many other services to the University, he has been tapped this spring into the Order of the Grail.

As well as his outstanding personal qualifications it is also politically wise to elect Larry McDevitt. The student body has clearly shown that they approve of Inman Allen's program. To guide this program through the legislature, it is essential that we have a man of similar vews serving as vice-president.

Thus, I wholeheartedly endorse the candidacy of Larry McDevitt.

—Bob Spearman
Freshman Class Pres.

To the Editor:

Some one was shouting about making the students at this University take an interest in what is going on in the world around them.

Some one else heard the call to arms and decided to set up an organization called the Carolina Symposium, to find men to come to Chapel Hill and speak to the students about what is going on in the world around them.

The faculty council took notice and asked that no quizes be given during the week that these men were on the campus, in order to stimulate students to go to their lectures and think about their ideas.

Individual faculty members began to take notice, also, and thinking their right to conduct their courses their way was in danger, decided to show to all and sundry that they could give quizes if they wanted to.

WHY?

The object of education is to stimulate the minds of people and to make them aware. It would seem that no one would be more agreeable to this than college professors. The object of the Carolina Symposium is to stimulate the minds of the students at Carolina. It would seem that no one would be more agreeable to this than college professors.

Then why quizes during Symposium week?

Respectfully but bewildered,

—James B. Neal, Jr.

To the Editor:

Now that the Mathers campaign for editor of The Daily Tar Heel and his decision not to participate in a run-off election has gotten into the editorial columns of the Tar Heel where ". . . the caprices of the administration . . ." have been referred to as has the fact that Mathers did not know until I called him into my office on March 28 that he would not be admitted to the School of Journalism as a special student for the '62-63 academic year, I'd like space to cite some facts all of which were available to Mathers had he sought them.

1) Mathers will complete work for an A.B. in Journalism in June if he passes courses in which he is currently enrolled.

2) The School of Journalism does not permit its graduates to enroll as special students, especially when they have taken all courses in their areas of interest which Mathers will have done at the completion of this semester.

3) Mathers announced his candidacy and said he would be a special student in the School of Journalism without consulting Dr. James J. Mullen, his adviser; Professor Kenneth R. Byerly, a member of the Publications Board, or myself, any one of whom would have informed him that he would not be admitted as a special student.

Mathers has done an outstanding job as advertising manager of the Tar Heel. He will do a good job and be a credit to the School of Journalism in the newspaper advertising field.

The staff joins me in wishing him well, but in fairness to all concerned, I think it best to point out that there was no capricious decision and that the refusal to admit graduates as special students is based on sound pedagogical and psychological grounds. There comes a time when students should leave Alma Mater, much as they love her and the campus and village environment.

To the Editor:

In a recent issue of the DTH certain accusations were hurled at Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye, candidates for the co-editorship of the DTH. There are also two sides to every argument, and both sides should be presented for consideration. One side has already been presented—here is the other.

In the first place Chuck Wrye was assistant sports editor of the DTH. In addition to his interest in the intramural activities on campus, which incidentally no other sports writer seems to care about, Chuck wrote sports, news, and editorial articles.

It was claimed that Wrye wandered off one day and was never seen again. The truth of the matter is that Wrye was seriously ill with mononucleosis which required weeks of rest and inactivity.

Jim Clotfelter was the news editor of the DTH. This was verified by present Tar Heel editor, Wayne King. As far as the petition goes it was not altered in the slightest degree after anyone signed it. Furthermore, everyone who signed it was told that it would be used in the campaign, not just before the Publications Board.

It was claimed that Clotfelter ran out on the summer school newspaper to go home a little early. The fact is that he had been appointed months before to be a delegate to the NSA Congress.

Furthermore, the summer school newspaper publishers knew ahead o ftime of this appointment, and that Jim would not be able to edit the last issue of the paper. It was supposed to be left in the hands of the best available person, which it was. So why so much confusion?

Enough of the past. What about the future? The DTH needs Clotfelter and Wrye. Do we want to keep the Tar Heel on the same level that it is now, or do we want to see it regain its rightful place among the best college papers in the country?

In a recent editorial Wayne King discussed the technical and practical abilities of Wrye and Clotfelter, and I feel that these have been sufficiently brought out elsewhere so there is no need to reiterate.

As a focal point against Clotfelter many people say that they don't agree with his views. Which would you rather have as editor of the DTH, someone whose views you may disagree with, or someone who doesn't have any views at all? Jim is not afraid to speak out and should be admired for this trait. To paraphrase an old quote "I may not agree with your opinions, but, by damn, I respect you for having them."

I sincerely hope and trust that all students will review the qualifications of Chuck Wrye and Jim Clotfelter. We need them as the next editors of the DTH.

To the Editor:

The Symposium is all things to all people.! To those travelling by bus from Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Pennsylvania, the Symposium is a rare opportunity for education, stimulation, and discussion. To many who can't spare two hours and a trip to Memorial Hall a few nights this week, the Symposium is an event for the intellectual elite. For some, the Symposium will not exisit. Like the prophet in his own country, the Symposium will encounter in Chapel Hill the greatest apathy, proportionally, in its nationwide advertising public.

The Symposium has been planned, publicized, and paid for. The staff would be most willing to rest, and only a small minority of the audience is coming from outside Chapel Hill for the lectures.

However, the program will appear as announced because it is a service to the students and academic community in which we live .

Please read the program of events once. It was planned for you by a student-faculty committee over a year's time. The men will be qualified and interesting, so attend a lecture or two on subjects of your choice. If you feel the grade system is imperfect, here is a chance for education without grades. If you feel the need for more interchange of ideas, use the question cards at night and attend the panels and receptions. Just as critically as the Congo needs college graduates, the United States and the free world need original and dynamic thinkers, as well as the informed public upon which a democracy depends. It is in this belief that the people of North Carolina pay for you to be in Chapel Hill. Please remember that here and now, in our American ease and beautiful Chapel Hill spring, education is not a luxury.

Be an advertising writer in New York this summer

Talented juniors, here is a chance you will never have again: A summer job creating advertisements for one of the world's largest advertising agencies. A chance to find out—while you are still in college—if you can make the grade in the tough and rewarding business of advertising.

Do you have what it takes to succeed as an advertising writer?

The only way to find out is to try it.

But if you wait until you graduate, you'll find it almost impossible to land a writing job with a good advertising agency. To get a job, you have to have experience. To get experience, you have to have a job.

Now, an easier way to get into advertising.

This summer, one of the largest and most respected advertising agencies is offering jobs as full-fledged advertising copywriters to a few outstanding men who are college juniors.

You work from mid-June until Labor Day in our office in New York.

You start right out writing.

You don't have to carry mail or sharpen pencils—the usual ways to break into advertising. You do get a chance to think up and write advertisements and commercials for nationally known companies in the food, appliance, soap, gasoline and insurance fields.

You learn, not through lectures or training programs, but by actually working with the most capable professionals in the business.

You earn enough to pay transportation costs from your home, live in New York, and still show a profit at the end of the summer (if you're not too big-hearted about snatching all the lunch tabs).

Can you qualify?

Since this is a temporary job, men in their junior year are preferred. If you succeed this summer, you will be offered a permanent job as a copywriter after you graduate.

No, you don't have to be an advertising major.

Some of our best writers majored in English, philosophy, history, political science, classics. Some didn't even go to college. But all of them are gifted with an instinctive understanding of—and respect for—people.

How can you tell if you have the stuff?

Do you love to read? We've yet to meet a good writer who isn't a reader—hungry for new ideas, excited about new ways of expressing them.

Do you love to write? If you have what it takes, you have probably been writing all your life. Right now, you may be writing articles for your college newspaper; scripts for the radio station; letters that get her to say "yes"; poems, plays, or stories just to please yourself.

If this sounds like you—and you like the sound of working in one of New York's great advertising agencies—write for full details on how to apply. Write a letter that shows how well you can write. Mail it by April 15th.

If you are accepted, you will have a summer you'll remember all your life. And if you succeed, you will find yourself with a full-time job which pays the kind of money it takes to get married and in which there is no such thing as a dull day.

Rain Washes Out UNC's 3-0 Lead Over VPI

By ED DUPREE

UNC's hopes of evening the score with Virginia Tech were washed down the drain at Emerson Stadium yesterday afternoon by a near torrential downpour which left the baseball field fit for ducks.

The diamond was fit for ducks, but not for turkeys—the Southern Conference Gobblers—or Tar Heels. The rain washed a 3-0 UNC lead off the boards in the third inning. VPI won Friday's game, 4-3.

North Carolina's left handed pitcher and co-captain Dave Murr faced only 11 batters in his three innings workout. The 6-4 Hickory native fanned five Tech batsmen, yielding only two singles, and walked one man.

Murr struck out VPI second baseman Eddie Hite to lead off the game, but then walked his only man of the game—shortstop Terry Strock. Right fielder Dave Blake grounded to Tar Heel sophomore Jim Speight at short, Speight flipped the ball to P. W. Swing at second, and Swing fired it to Len Dellolio at first to complete the double play and end the inning.

Carolina was scoreless in the opening stanza. After Swing had flied to center, Buddy Tilden drew a walk. Then Speight flied to center and clean-up hitter Larry Neal also got a free pass to first. Heyward Hull grounded out to end the inning.

Murr fanned the Tech clean-up hitter, pitcher Don Coleman, to open the second. Catcher Aster Sizemore then singled off Larry Neal's chest at third for an infield hit, but the tall redhead, Murr, retired DeMoss Price and Bob Quesinbury to end the frame.

The home team scored twice in the second. Coleman hit Dellolio in the side on the first pitch and center fielder Dave Pope grounded back to the pitcher who forced Dellolio at second. Pope stole second and scored on catcher Dee Frady's bast hit. Frady advanced to second on the throw in from left field, and moved around to third when Tom Green threw the ball past the catcher.

The second marker was scored on a beautifully executed squeeze play on the part of Murr. He laid a bunt down on the third base side of the mound and by the time Coleman reached the ball, Frady had crossed the plate. Coleman turned to throw to first but no one was covering the bag, and Murr was credited with what would have been his third straight hit of the season if the rain hadn't erased the game from the records.

Murr struck out first baseman Wayne Hanks, Hite, and Strock in the third. Tom Green, the second batter of the inning, singled, stole second, and advanced to third on Pope's error in center, but that was as far as he moved.

Speight belted a long drive to left center that looked like a homer against the cloudy sky, but it stayed in the park by a few yards and Jim pulled into second with a two-bagger. He went to third on a wild pitch and scored on Neal's sacrifice fly to make it 3-0. And then the rains came.

Coach Walt Rabb's men meet Wake Forest here Tuesday in their first ACC game. Going into the Wake game Buddy Tilden leads the Tar Heel hitters with a .429 batting average. Tilden has hit safely six times in his 14 trips to the plate. Neal has the second highest average among the regulars—.386—by hitting safely on seven of 19 occasions. Hull has a .333 mark (6-18) and Speight is at .313 with his five for 16.

Swing is right below the .300 class with a .286 figure and Dellolio is .263. P. W. (6-21) and "Woogie" (5-19) both hit better than .300 last season.

The pitching records for the frist five games are Andy Billesdon (1-1), Bobby Cox (1-1), and Bob Wacker (0-1).

Netters Meet Harvard Monday

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Coach Don Skakle's UNC tennis team, undefeated in its first four matches, gets a chance to double that win output this week as the Tar Heels face two of the East's toughest net powers.

Harvard of the Ivy League comes to town tomorrow for a 2:30 match which will begin four consecutive days of tennis on the varsity courts. The Crimson from Cambridge, Mass., who beat Carolina twice last season, will also meet the netters in a Tuesday afternoon contest.

On Wednesday and Thursday, the Williams College Ephmen make their bid to unseat Skakle's high-flying underclassmen. Last year on its annual southern trip, Williams split its two encounters with Carolina, dropping the first meeting by 5-4 but coming back the next day to take that match, 6-3.

Against the two invaders from Massachusetts, Skakle will send a team which has dropped only six individual matches so far. Leading this year's talented group are captain Keith Stoneman and sophomore stars George Sokol and Ted Hoehn.

Stoneman, from Greenville, S. C., has lost only one set while winning his four matches. These victories have extended the 6-2 junior's consecutive win streak to 23 over a two-year period.

Sokol, the stocky blonde from Bryn Mawr, Pa., and Hoehn, a redhead out of Hanover, N. H., who is the son of the Dartmouth tennis coach, have also gone undefeated, playing usually in the number one and three positions, respectively. Both, like Stoneman, have lost but one set in the four matches.

The "Big Three" are backed up by towering John (Bitsy) Harrison, who is also undefeated and "Mr. Chapel Hill"—Charlie Shaffer. Both are sophomores and, in addition to their individual value, have contributed much to Carolina's doubles depth.

UNC Legislature Approves Motion For A Resolution

Solons To Commend Norwegian People

In a special called meeting last night, the Student Legislature voted by a 21-19 margin to approve a resolution commending Norweigan fishermen for a record season. A special copy of the resolution will be sent by air mail to Ursted Jojannek, president of the Norway Fishing Bureau.

The bill was introduced by Arthur McLach, Student Party representative from Dorm Men's I. McLach said that on such an important international issue as this one, with the lives of all the herring in the North Atlantic at stake, the legislature could not fail to take action.

The special session was called by vice-president Goonlik Marx after he heard of McLach's proposal.

The resolution states that the UNC student legislature recognizes the significance of the tremendous catch by the Norwegian fishermen this season, and sets it as an example for other fish-hungry countries to follow. Figures on the exact size of the catch were unavailable, but McLach reported that Time Magazine had called it a very good one.

Despite the insistence of McLach and several other Student Party leaders, the bill did not pass without a heated floor fight. University Party representatives argued that it was not the duty of the legislature to make such resolutions no matter what their importance. "This will become such an everyday thing, that before long we will be passing resolutions on such unimportant matters as voting ages, income tax evasion by professors, atomic testing, and the European Common Market," said UP floor leader Solly Spears.

When the matter came to a vote, the UP representative from Frat Rat II moved the bill be tabled. But his motion was ruled out of order by Parliamentarian Ron Jabbell.

Arboretum To Be UNC Parking Lot

Universiy Grounds Director Oswald Overby yesterday announced plans to convert Coker Arboretum into a parking lot. Bulldozer work on the site will begin late this week, he announced, in order to give campus botanists and amours a final chance to make use of the wooded area.

Overby said that the plan to uproot the ancient trees and plants and coeds in the Arboretum had been reached only after all other possibilities for parking spaces had been exhausted. "We may even have to blacktop the area between South Building and the library," he said, "in order to find space for the extra 5,000 cars we expect next year. Silent Sam will probably be moved from Polk place and replaced with a giant parking meter."

Plans for a changeover at the Arboretum met with an immediate disapproval over campus.

IDC president Horst Inman charged that the move was "a cheap trick by the administration to take away our happy hunting grounds. Is it the dorm man's fault that there aren't enough parking places on campus? It would have been a better idea to tear down the Deke house if they needed a parking lot."

Overby explained that the Coker Arboretum will not be needed next year when the new Hunt Arboretum is opened. His reply drew a sudden blast from the presidents of Spencer and McIver Dormitories and their Woman's Council representatives.

"How are we going to be helped by an arboretum two miles away?" queried Janice Flyce, Spencer president. "How can we girls, who have become avid nature lovers because we have had yon arboretum in our back yard, make out when it is gone?"

Local photographers and squirrel Wallace, Daily Tar Heel lensman, lovers also protested the plan. Jim complained that his prime shooting area would be destroyed.

After hearing complaints and receiving a signed petition from the residents of the four largest women's dormitories, Overby said that the change to a parking lot would still go through, but would be slightly changed.

Racial Troubles Solved At UNC, Friday Reveals

Carolina Riders To Have More Freedom

President William A. Friday announced yesterday that the long-standing racial problems at UNC had finally come to an end.

"I think that we will be able to win every race next season, without any trouble," said Friday, who had been under alumni pressure after the Carolina drag racing team finished its second straight season without a victory.

After making this announcement, Friday uncovered the new 595 horsepower engine that had been constructed for the UNC dragster. The engine, painted a shining Carolina Blue and with silver covers for its carbuerators, was constructed by 400 physics majors, all of whom are attending Carolina on drag-racing scholarships.

"This magnificent engine was built completely according to NCDRA (National Collegiate Drag Racing Associaton) regulations, said Friday, dispelling any fear that the new UNC powerhouse would not stand up to qualifications.

The Tar Heel dragsters were placed on NCDRA probation two years ago for using spark plugs which were built in a New York factory. Regulations demand that all parts of the dragster be built by amateurs, although unlimited dragster scholarships are allowed.

The new engine, which dragster coach John Blickey predicted would be in for All-America recognition next year, stands three feet, four inches tall. In this category, it is two inches shorter than that used in the University of Virginia Clutchstomper wagon, which placed first in the ACC (Atlantic Cluch Conference, no coasting allowed) last season.

The engine weighs 888 pounds, and according to NCDRA regulations, has a special safety feature of double-enforced exhaust tubes, which are not found in professional drag engines.

Coach Blickey indicated that the engine would be given its first track tryout in a special alumni match last week. Also competing will be the 1929 Tar Wheel dragster, the last one to win the ACC Championship.

The editorial staff of the Daily Tar Heel yesterday squelched reprts that the paper was a radical, biased and untruthful publication. After Editor Wayne King tried repeatedly to come up with some way to prove the fairness of the paper, star advertising man Chuck Oberdorfer performed an experiment in the paper's favor. After rolling his own, and taking a few deep puffs, Oberdorfer reported that the paper is "exciting, and really mild." However, King was still trying to show that the paper could be enjoyed without being burned. (Photo by Hayashi Zalk)

Doesn't Like 80% Rule, He Tells Faculty

Chancellor William B. Aycock yesterday revealed the first stage in a long range plan for the betterment of student-faculty relations at the University of North Carolina.

"In the past, there has often been an unnecessary amount of tension between the students and the administration," said Aycock in an exclusive interview with the Daily Tar Heel. "I have proposed a program to do something about this situation.

"I realize that the problem here at South Building has grown out of hand. Upon close consideration, and after weighing all the factors, I have decided that the 80% rule and the Honor System are at fault. It has come to my attention that certain persons under our employment may be in the wrong jobs, and therefore I have taken it upon myself to see that they are replaced."

The chancellor said that he had conferred with President William A. Friday and with Governor Terry Sanford, and they had agreed with him completely. The rulings will go into effect as soon as they are approved by the Board of Trustees, which has called an emergency meeting for Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

80% Rule Abolished

Aycock said that the first step would be to abolish the 80% rule. He explained this rule as follows: Because of all the trouble that exists between students and teachers, we have a rule to protect the well being of the teacher. This rule stipulates that no teacher can teach in this university more than 80% of any three year period. We have found that it endangers the mentality of any professor to have to remain in Chapel Hill more than 80% of the time. This figure may be considerably smaller for the students, but we are not concerned with that at this time."

"Therefore," the Chancellor continued, "we are planning to abolish this 80% rule. In the future, we will stipulate that no professor can be in Chapel Hill more than 75% of any year. This rule will be known as the '75% rule'."

Honor System Killed

The chancellor said that the change in policy had forced him to abolish the honor system. "Under this system, we left it up to each professor to discipline himself. Now we will be forced to keep our own records. We have found that since most professors don't realize the dangers of staying in Chapel Hill, the Honor System does not work," he explained.

"Long Leaves will work here," he said. "They have already shown that, in the ability to keep the faculty sane."

Aycock also released a list of prominent faculty members who had been asked to leave. Included are the following professors, including some who have been here.

23 Fraternities Move To Disband

By BILL WOMBATT

Twenty-three of UNC's twenty-four social fraternities disbanded yesterday in a move that drew praise from the administration and other campus groups, and biting criticism from the NAACP and Barry Goldwater.

The ex-fraternity men plan to devote themselves to "academic excellence," IFC chairman Inman Sevier announced yesterday, and want to "put an end to our frivolous ways."

The PiKA house was the only fraternity which refused to disband as a spokesman for the house, Jakie Lohr, said, "We like to party and don't care who knows it. We shall fight on the bandstand, in the bedroom and under the bar. We shall never give up."

Senator Barry Goldwater scored the move, as he appeared on the Senate floor dressed in mourning. "I must make an announcement of great sadness," he told the auguest body, "The University of North Carolina has finally succumbed to the infiltration of communism. The death of the fraternity system marks the end of the democratic process at that once-great southern institution."

The move was attacked from another quarter today by Leroy Wilkinson, secretary of the NAACP. "It's a dirty racist trick," he said in a prepared press statement. "They know they can't disband. It's just like a bus station closing its waiting room. They can't close; they must integrate. We'll fight this in every court in the land."

Dean George Long, spokesman for the administration, praised the move by saying, "I'm glad the fraternities have finally realized that the 'Gentleman's C' is no longer good enough. We feel that this action will make it much easier for the campus to achieve the C plus average that is the mark of academic excellence."

The administration, he stated, "has tried to guide the fraternities toward this move by the recent establishment of the 80 per cent and deferred rush rules."

The IFC head thanked the administration by saying, "Their loving guidance, and especially the establishment of the 80 per cent rule at our request, have shown us the error of our ways. On to brotherhood and BA."

The New Left Club was one of many campus groups to praise the fraternities' action. Nick King, president of the club, said "I want to welcome the fraternity men to the true brotherhood of man. It is very gratifying to see another group realize that only by giving away ther privileges can they hope to attain them.

"We are hoping to acquire one of the vacated houses for use as a home for wayward Albanians."

One campus group, however, censored the move. The Student Legislature passed a unanimous resolution condemning the action on the grounds that student government had not been contacted first. "These people must learn to work within student government," one legislator said. "Their unannounced action has completely unbalanced our budget."

Eighteen Dorm Men Found Guilty, Sentenced By IDC

Eighteen dormitory residents were sentenced Friday night in a two-hour session of the IDC court. It was the heaviest docket of the year, according to Jim Maudlin, IDC president.

One student, a resident of first floor Avery, was suspended from school indefinitely for not keeping cookies in a closed container. He appealed immediately to Bean Dong, assistant purveyor of the campus scene, for a reversal of the decision.

Dong announced late yesterday that after reviewing the case, he was "inclined to support the court. After all, dormitory rules specifically state that all food must be kept in TIGHTLY SEALED CONTAINERS. We cannot have such flagrant offenses go unpunished. The defendant has a past record of keeping empty bottles in his room and using tape on his door, and it appears that he is a habitual offender."

A second student, who lived in Mangum Dorm, was restricted from living in a dormitory for the next year for keeping an electrical appliance in his room. Maudlin explained that the boy, who seemed to have no respect for university rules, had kept a coffeepot hidden in his closet. "He was just waiting for the time when the dorm manager wasn't around, so that he could plug it in."

Two students defaulted their room deposits for next semester and were forced to leave Winston Dorm for conspiring to start a snowball fight with Alexander. Maudlin said that the two were reported by resident advisor John Rosencranz, who said that they had maliciously planned an all out war between the two dorms. "It was supposed to last for two full days, April 6-7," said Rosencranz, "but I found out about it and tried to talk the boys out of it. When they wouldn't admit their fiendish plot, I turned them over to the IDC.

In other action, 15 residents of Lewis Dorm were given unofficial reprimands and were moved into Ruffin after they set fire to the lower quad and burned down Graham and Stacy Dorms. "If this action doesn't stop," Maudlin said, "we may have to pass some kind of regulation against it."

Clodfellow Says Chez Hickory Is Ridiculous Clan

Chez Hickory, well known campus journalistic outpost, was brought under fire yesterday by Jim Clodfellow, president of the UNC chapter of the INJRCCC.

Clodfellow charged that, "Chez Hickory is an organization dedicated to the ridiculous principle that majority groups may sometimes be right."

Clodfellow stated that a full-scale investigation will be forthcoming.

Lenoir Hall Speeds Up Serving Of Customers

Lenoir Hall yesterday introduced a new method to relieve congestion in the lines where hundreds of starving students wait to eat every day.

Burns Hamburger, manager of the dining hall, said that students will not have to go through the long waiting lines any more in order to be served.

"We have also gotten rid of the student special," he revealed. "From now on, our customers will not have to select which meat they want to eat. The choice has already been made. We will only be serving beans at every meal."

Hamburger said that the new plan had worked very well at both meals at which it was tried yesterday. "We even cut prices to 30 cents for a meal," he said. "We could still make a profit by serving customers water instead of iced tea."

The manager said that the new plan worked in this way:

"When students came into the building, whether to buy a paper or for any other reason, they were not allowed to leave without paying their 30 cents. The only way for them to get their money's worth was to eat lunch."

The tables for four were scrapped, and long boards were laid down for tables, "so that we could serve more people," the manager explained. When the customers were seated, they were served banquet style, but with only one course," he said.

The plan worked well, Hamburger said. There was very little congestion for the first meal, and by the time customers caught on to the idea, they complained "very little. The best part was that there weren't a lot of grad students sitting around and drinking coffee after they finished eating," he said.

There was absolutely no congestion for the second meal. Nobody came back again.

Symposium Moves Into Third Day Of Activity

Vice-President, DTH Chief To Be Named In Runoff

Runoff elections will be held today for the strongly contested offices of vice-president of the student body and editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

Mike Lawler will be seeking to prevent a University Party sweep of the big four offices as he opposes UP candidate Larry McDevitt in the vice-presidential race.

The polls will be open from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. except in Victory Village where the hours are 9:30 to 5:00. and all students, including graduate and special students, of the university may vote upon presentation of ID cards or other identification.

Clotfelter-Wrye and Stepp finished second and third in last Tuesday's election behind write-in candidate Mike Mathers, who withdrew from the race after he learned that he would not be able to enter Journalism School as a special student next fall.

Clotfelter and Wrye led Stepp by 21 votes in Tuesday's election.

SP candidate Mike Lawler led Larry McDevitt by 115 votes while the rest of the UPslate was winning by substantial margains. The election was thrown into a runoff by independent John Salter, who polled about 200 votes.

With the exception of Kenan and Conner dorms and Emerson Stadium, all dorms will have their own polling places. Residents of Connor will vote in Winston and residents of Emerson will vote in Ruffin.

The polls and the polling areas for the rest of the student body are as follows:

Town Men's I, bounded by Columbia St. on the east, Cameron Ave. on the north, and the corporate limits of Chapel Hill on the west and south, will have polls at the Naval Armory and the Carolina Inn.

Town Men's II, bounded by Cameron Ave. on the south, Columbia St. on the east and the corporate limits of Chapel Hill on the west and north, will vote at the Scuttlebutt and Gerrard Hall.

Town Men's III, bounded on the west by Columbia St. and the corporate limits of Chapel Hill on the north, east and south will vote at Graham Memorial and Gerrard Hall.

Town Men's IV, composed of all men living outside of the corporate limits of Chapel Hill, will vote at the housing office in Victory Village and at Gerrard Hall.

Women's Town District, composed of all women not living in dormitories, will vote at Gerrard Hall and at Graham Memorial.

Grierson, Seldes Say Revolutions In Art Continue

Revolutions in the arts are going on all the time, according o two noted art critics, Gilbert Seldes and John Grierson who spoke last night.

Gilbert Seldes, critic of the popular arts, said "If there is a revolution in the arts today, it is in the way the work of art reaches the public—it is a great change in the nature of the public itself."

Seldes, who is the first director of the University of Pennsylvania's Annenberg School of Communications, said that today the arts are intended for everybody as opposed to the select group of art lovers characterized in the not too distant past. The new public has been created by the mass media, according to Seldes.

"We have probably not yet created anything great in the new arts (except in the silent movies) but we now have the chance to do so," said Seldes.

Seldes implied that one of the ways of creating something great would be to get rid of a certain hypocritical snobbishness of the people who feel that there is no art unless it is in the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Seldes said that one of the symtoms indicating there was a revolution in the arts was an increased criticism of the modern arts. As an example, he cited a discussion which is to take place in New York April 3, under the auspices of the American Institute of Architects, in which the topic of discussion will be "Who is Responsible for Ugliness." This shows recognition of the fact that if you put something out to the public, you have a responsibility to them. The discussion will be concerned with the ugliness of the way cities look.

The second speaker of the evening, John Grierson, chairman of Scottish Government Television and the only foreigner on this year's Symposium program, said that America is the "great homeland of aesthetic revolutionaries in our time," while Russia may be considered as the "great homeland of political revolutionaries in our time."

He continued to say that even though all revolutionaries had not been bred in America many of them finish up under the protection of this country.

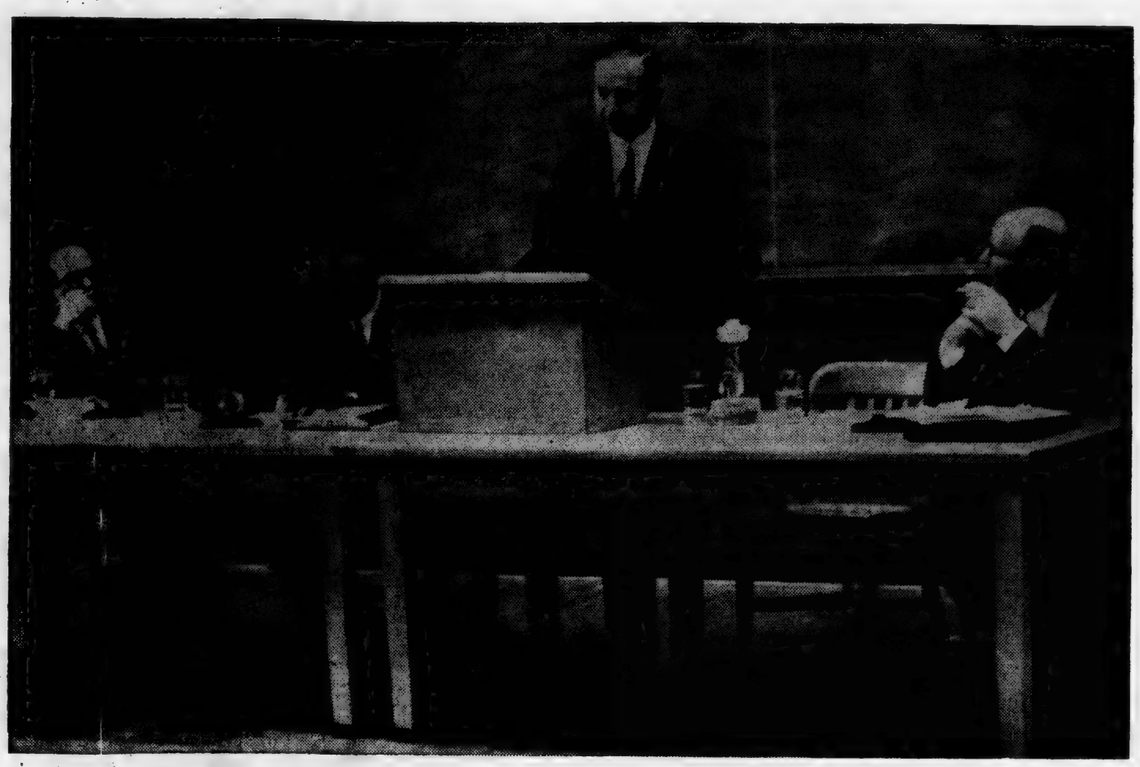
Grierson pointed out in his talk that art changes as reality—society—changes. He credited modern movements in art to stem from the American desire to be "forward looking at all costs." He acclaimed America for her movement in freeing the arts from traditional European concepts and ties.

Grierson is heralded as being the forerunner in the "documentary" film movement.

The Hearst newspapers and its yellow press were one of the most influential measures responsible for Americanizing America's European immigrants, according to Grierson. Other movements in the arts which he cited were the jazz of Louis Armstrong; especially, the architecture of Frank Lloyd Wright; the poetry of E. E. Cummings and Carl Sandburg; the literature of Sherwood Anderson—all expounding the American life.

The great basic changes in our modern reality which have most affected the modern arts, according to Grierson, are: the scientific advancement of the 20th century, "the common appreciation today of the world as a changing world, a dynamic world," the changes in the people themselves—in contrast with other people, other religions and points of view. Other changes are expressed in the individuals' negative reaction to the new world such as the feeling of pessimism and the advent of the organization man.

"The words 'beat' 'sick' and 'sour' . . . are the marks of much that is personally unresolved in our experiences as citizens. This, according to Grierson, is a true reflection of a very deep reality."



Race relations panel members James Kilpatrick, Floyd McKissick, McNeill Smith and Walter Spearman.

Racial Relations Panel Disagrees Over Question Of Earning Equality

James Kilpatrick, editor of the Richmond News Leader and winner of a Sigma Delta Chi editorial writing award for an editorial defending state's rights, told an audience of some 300 yesterday that the Negro must earn equality.

Kilpatrick participated in a panel discussion on race relations yesterday as part of the 1962 Carolina Symposium.

McKissick was the first Negro ever to gain entrance to UNC. He was admitted to the Law School in 1951 after a court battle and has been a leader in civil rights activity.

Smith was graduated from UNC and earned an L.L.B. from Columbia. He is currently chairman of North Carolina Advisory Committee, U. S. Commission on Civil Rights.

Kilpatrick said he felt the purpose of the Negro was evolutionary as well as revolutionary and that the Negro would gain real equality only through his own efforts. He indicated that he felt the Negro has not yet proven himself.

McKissick said that although the "courts, the church and the government have decided segregation is wrong," the Negro has only achieved token integration in the South.

"If we wait for integration to come voluntarily in the South," McKissick said, "it will never come. Southerners don't usually do things voluntarily."

McKissick advocated a stronger effort on the part of the Negro, not only in fighting for more rights, but in preparing himself for them through education and self-improvement.

Smith agreed with McKissick that the Negro must work to improve himself, but said that both whites and Negroes must provide the avenues whereby Negroes can advance.

He said the Negro's fight for Negro but "up to all of us."

equality is not entirely up to the McKissick emphasized that the right to vote and other constitutional guarantees are not contingent on the Negro's status.

"Whether a Negro takes a bath or not has nothing to do with his right to vote," he said.

"He can be blind, crippled, crazy and carry a switch-blade knife," McKissick said, "but he still has the right to vote."

The young Durham lawyer—the first to practice in that city—said that the Negro struggle "might not be a revolution, but it's something."

He said the Negro, particularly the young Negro, was acting because of what he felt, not what he thought.

Kilpatrick, who described himself as a gradualist in regard to racial integration, said a great part of the oppression of the Negro in the South is fiction.

Brinton Defines Revolutions In Opening Address

Dr. Crane Brinton successfully fenced off the questions of G. V. Taylor and the student body, and gracefully cleared an obstacle course of typographical errors Sunday night as he opened the five-day series of Symposium Lectures.

Brinton defined some of the "Concepts of Revolutions" as he covered a variety of subjects ranging from "vulgar TV" and America's "Angry Young Men", to the abortive Southern revolution of 1861.

The Civil War, Brinton said, is of special interest to him as a case history, because, although it was surpressed by sheer force, it has never been tried again.

Cuban Revolution

Of the Cuban revolution, Brinton said: "Given the history of Cuba, if only from 1898 to 1958, I should grant that 'force' would have brought about something like Castro's successful 26th of July movement at about this time.

"For the same reason of sheer history, I should guess that no fine flower of wholesale—I think I meant to say wholesome here but the typist evidently thought otherwise, so I will say wholesale—flower of Cuban American love could have grown out of that revolution climate.

"I can conceive of an American policy which would not have resulted in the Castro-Khrushchev pact that did result."

"Angry" Men No Danger

Brinton stated that the two great types of revolutions are the coup d'etat, or palace revolt, and the popular revolutions. A second useful comparison can be made, he said, between the successful and the abortive revolutions.

After mentioning that the "desertion of the intellectuals" was an important factor that he considered in his book "The Anatomy of Revolution," he stated that he could not get the feel of a coming American revolution despite the discontent of the intellectuals. "It takes hopeful, not angry, young men to make revolutions."

Orientation

Wednesday is the last day for interested persons to sign applications to become Foreign Student Orientation Counselors next fall.

Lowenstein, Ex-NSA President, Returns

Al Lowenstein, former President of the National Student Association and former assistant to Eleanor Roosevelt and Frank P. Graham, directed a late afternoon lecture at Gerrard Hall yesterday on world revolutions that was sponsored by the Carolina Forum.

The former UNC graduate and co-editor of the Daily Tar Heel is presently Assistant Dean of Students at Stanford University where he teaches political science. He holds the distinction of being the first American to testify before the United Nations without being called upon by the U. S. Government.

Book On Africa

Lowenstein has recently spent two years in Africa where he has toured and inspected much of the south-west portion. He has written a book, "Brutal Mandate," which will be published in the late spring.

"It has been 17 years since I've been here," Lowenstein said. "I remember the dropping of the first 'bomb' which was also 17 years ago. There was much misery and agony in the world, and I was worried of future indications then."

Americans believe everything is as it should be, he said. We exist in a normal state continually when revolutions are biting into so many countries around us. Something must be done or we as Americans will be the losers if present conditions continue.

"Many times," Lowenstein said, "we don't get the full story from our communications. The grave issues are not being discussed as they should be. Newspapers better begin printing the complete stories or we will suffer the mark of past societies.

"We can't think in terms of a revolution," he said, "because we have so much that we can't realize how it would be to need something to exist on tomorrow."

VP Aspirants Make Nth Plea

McDevitt said that statements which arise from violations of the Honor System find their original jurisdiction in the hands of the Men's and Women's Councils and "I reserve the right of student government to insure that this jurisdiction is assumed by no other group."

Lawler proposed that the student government work with the administration to get more experienced professors teaching general college courses.

Rufus Edminston, campaign manager for Dwight Wheless, thanked Student Party workers for their help and urged them to support the Student Party candidates in Tuesday's election.

Clotfelter Says Students Should Be Independent

Student autonomy—"Student government independence from Administration control has inherent educational value. Students should be allowed to decide and direct the future coure of its honor system and campus code. If it is to have any real value, student government must make decisions on issues of broader scope than television repairs and parking space. It is the responsibility of both students and educators that student government fulfill its educational responsibilities and help to form the student in a free and open atmosphere."

Honor system and campus code—"Students should work with student government to ensure that the honor system is effective in curtailing academic violations. "Ungentlemanly" acts covered under the campus code, are undefinable and outside the scope of academics therefore, should not be subject to honor council action. Civil authorities are capable of prosecuting such acts."

Eighty per cent rule—"No part of the campus should be singled out as deserving special restrictions. If fraternity men are to be required to have a higher-than-normal academic average—which is not unreasonable, considering how much time membership in a fraterinty requires—this requirement should be made by the Interfraternity Council, not by the faculty or the Administration."

NSA—"The University has benefited from its close cooperation with the National Student Association in the past, and this association should continue. The election of delegates this spring is an encouraging step forward to a fully representative NSA."

Beer Drinking Students Damage Aycock TV Room

The social room of Aycock Dormitory was damaged Saturday night by boys drinking beer and watching television. The damage was reported yesterday by Paul Sturdevant, head of janitors.

George Strong, assistant in the office of student affairs, said that the damage was of "the greatest magnitude that has happened this year."

Arthur Beaumont, chief of campus police, termed the damage "malicious." Wooden chairs were broken, furniture was disarranged, beer cans were spread about the room, the arms of other chairs were cut and a bag of cement and a bag of lime were thrown from the top floor.

Strong said that it was not the work of an organized gang. "It was simply a group of boys watching TV on Saturday night and drinking beer." He emphasized that, "The university cannot condone drinking in dormitories. There is a law against drinking on state property.

"It's disappointing. People are trying to improve dorm life. This makes it harder to convince them that it can be improved.

"I'm sure the IDC will take care of it. On the whole, the IDC and dorm managers have done well considering what they have to work with," Strong said.

John Gould, chairman of the IDC Court said, "The IDC is presently investigating the case."

Deadline Extended For Counselors

The deadline for Orientation counselor applications has been extended until Thursday of this week, Chairman Bob Madry announced today.

Interviews began yesterday and will continue through Thursday. They are being held in the Woodhouse and Grail Rooms of Graham Memorial.

Madry said that applications were still available at the Scuttlebutt, Y-Court, Graham Memorial, and the Reserve Reading Room of the library. These should be filled out and turned in at the Information desk at Graham Memorial as soon as possible.

We are well pleased with the turnout so far," Madry stated. "Well over 300 men have applied already."

Publications Board Trains Bus. Managers

The Publications Board has announced a training program for prospective business managers of the four publications under the Board's control, which are the Daily Tar Heel, the Yack, the Quarterly and the Handbook.

Board Chairman Bill Townsend said that a business manager for the Handbook is needed immediately. Interviews for this position and for trainees will be held Friday in the Woodhouse Room in Graham Memorial at 3.

Business managers for the DTH and the Quarterly will begin training this spring, Townsend said, and the Yack manager will be trained next fall.

"The Board has initiated this program," Townsend said, "so that there will be at least one qualified applicant for each position next fall."

Campus Code

In a recent letter to a member of the student attorney general's staff, the President of the Student Body and the chairman of the Men's Honor Council, Assistant Dean of Student Affairs William Long gave the administration's reaction to a bill designed to keep the campus code from being the catch-all for student offenses that it has traditionally been. The letter:

I am taking this opportunity to officially respond to your request that I write a statement concerning the University Administration's attitude toward the philosophy underlying a bill to be presented to the Student Legislature entitled "A Bill to Restrict the Campus Code to the University and Its Related Functions." This letter constitutes a written statement of the sentiment which I have previously given to you yerbally.

Traditionally, the University of North Carolina has considered that all students come under the jurisdiction of the University's Honor System—the Campus Code and the Honor Code—from the time of matriculation until the time of their graduation. All students at this institution who violate either code of the Honor System between the time of matriculation and graduation are subject to disciplinary action. This is true whether the alleged offense takes place on or off campus, during the time that the University is officially in session or during holiday periods, regardless of whether the person is participating in an official University or University-related activity or not. Thus, a student engaging in any type of misconduct which violates the rules o the Honor System is subject to disciplinary action 365 days of the year.

This is one of the fundamental policies of the University. Should Student Government decide that it, means two things: 1) If a stupolicy in full, the University Administration will step in to fill the vacuum which may be created by legislature action or any other action which results in the nullification of any part of this policy.

William G. Long
Assistant Dean

* * *

The above letter ,as we translate it, means two things: 1) I a student spits on the sidewalk in Karachi, Pakistan, while he's on summer vacation, he can be held accountable for it months later in Chapel Hill, and 2) If the students don't like it, they can take a long walk on a short pier.

Or ,in other words, this is a student judiciary just so long as the administration chooses to let it be so. If someone in South Building gets his feathers fuffled, the whole system can be canned, and student autonomy be damned. The letter is disturbing for two reasons.

First, it demonstrates that the idea of an autonomous student judiciary is valid only so long as that judiciary functions precisely as the administration chooses.

In addition, it lends support to the vague, wholly undefinable percept set down by the Campus Code. The Campus Code, by rights, should have been eliminated or restricted long ago. It is impossible to interpret adequately and impossible to enforce—even on campus, far more —so anywhere else.

Further, it demonstrates that inso-far as disciplinary measures are concerned, this university stands proudly in loco parentis. The administrative Aunt Matildas are bent on making a prep school out of Carolina if it kills them—or the students.

The whole ridiculous idea of a Campus Code so vague and undefinable as this one is bad enough in itself without having its effects extended around the world and in effect "365 days a year."

Decision Day

The day of decision is here. The vice-presidential candidates have spoken well for themselves. But perhaps the issues in the race for the DTH editorship have not been made as clear as is necessary.

Many disparaging remarks have been leveled at Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye. Some of them were true. But this is unimportant. We should consider only one question—Who will do the best job as DTH editor?

On this campus Ernest Stepp has demonstrated a minute amount of journalistic ability. We have only his say-so on what he has done and can do. Wrye and Clotfelter have demonstrated their ability as organizers and journalists beyond any doubt.

The student body will decide today whether the editorship will be filled by a good talker or by experienced and dedicated newsmen.

—Mike Robinson

"Oops — Wrong Bag Of Tricks"

'The Outsider': A Modern Tragedy

By Louis Legum

"The Outsider," currently playing at the Varsity Theater, is one of those "almost" motion pictures; it huffed and puffed, but it didn't quite get there, despite a memorable performance by Tony Curtis. Scenarist Stewart Stern and director Delbert Mann were conscientious enough in their depicture of the tragic life of Ira Hayes, but somehow they forgot to make their movie very stimulating or compelling until it was too late.

In 1945 on the island of Iwo Jima, the famous war photographer Harold Rosenthal snapped a picture of six Marines raising an American flag. The photograph was to become a major symbol of our great cause and tradition in the Second World War. One of those six Marines was Ira Hayes (Curtis), a shy Indian boy who had come off the Pima Reservation to fight for his country. "The Outsider" traces the poignant story of Ira Hayes; his stormy career as a Marine, and his short-lived status as a synthetic national hero—the ultimate impetus for his alcoholic dissipation and consequent death.

Without much pretense, "The Outsider" emerges as a one-man vehicle for actor Curtis, who has come a long way from his one-dimensioned earlier years. Sporting a "made-in-Hollywood" Indian nose, Curtis handles a difficult role with intelligent restraint and sensitivity. In portraying the torment and frustration that hounded Ira Hayes as he sought to escape his false hero image, Curtis sometimes achieves an emotional insight that approaches the profound. The concluding scenes of his brutal self-degradation and humiliation are tremendously moving and compelling. His supporting cast, though reasonably competent, remains conspicuously anonymous through the length of the picture. A commendable exception is Vivian Nathan who plays the mother of Ira Hayes with an understanding terseness.

"The Outsider" fails, because at its most crucial moments, director Mann and screenwriter Stern are not able to distinguish the reality from the cliche. The Pima Indian boy's search for acceptance with his fellow Marines is nothing more than a rehash of a thousand other war movies. A heavy reliance upon the crassness of the American public as the villainry in Ira Hayes' life falls flat in its narrow interpretation. Certainly there were other more subjective factors in his personality make-up that would account for Haye's downfall, as well as the overwhelming impact of his suddenly acquired fame.

The film is deliberately low-keyed and slowly paced in its documentary-like characterization. At times these austere tones are effective and appropriate, but just as often they produce stale moments of contrived morbidity. For all its faults, "The Outsider" is hardly a bad picture. It deals with an interesting and perplexing segment of modern times, if not successfully, at least intelligently.

Letters To The Editor

Frats Praised, 'Fusser' Cited

To the Editor:

Today we go to the polls to elect the Vice President of our Student Body, and one of the candidates on our ballots will be Larry McDevitt.

This fall, while serving as co-chairman of the State Affairs Committee, Larry initiated the thought of students' running a torch marathon across the State in support of the Bond Issue; and before anyone had a chance to tell him it would not work, he had obtained the aid of volunteer runners from all of our state-supported colleges. Because of his work the people throughout out state realized our support of higher education.

From year to year student government needs an influx of new blood which is offered by student officers who believe in student autonomy and can renew our faith in it.

Larry has proven that his concern is for the University and its entire student body.

May we give him a chance to serve us!

George W. Campbell

To the Editor:

The effectiveness of the Student Legislature is increased when its speaker is of the same party as the majority of its members. This situation affords the speaker the opportunity to attend the majority party caucus. It is necessary to be able to discuss freely within the caucus the positions of the executive branch in order a facilitate legislative support or executive programs.

One need only to recall some of the tense moments in the 29th Legislative Assembly to bring to mind the problems which a minority Speaker must face. With Mike Lawler as speaker of the Legislature, a meaningful Student Government program can be effected next year.

—Hank Patterson
Outgoing Vice President of the Student Body

To the Editor:

As a newly-elected member of the Men's Honor Council, I am vitally interested in the position Student Government will take towards the council in the coming critical year.

Mike Lawler and I agree that the system is not perfect, but that changes in it will require careful thought and a broad knowledge of the system.

From talking to Mike, I firmly believe that he offers these qualifications to the task.

The vague terminology of the campus code clearly needs defining. Through this, the student can be protected rom double jeopardy and unfair encroachment on his personal life. Student autonomy on the council will get a substantial boost if the investigations by the attorney general's staff begins in a student operated office and not in the office of the Dean of Student Affairs.

The future of the honor system at Carolina will benefit with MIKE LAWLER as vice-president.

—Rex Savery

To the Editor:

In re Mr. Croneberg's reply to my suggestion that Hank Patterson and Bill Harriss (the old Pro delegates) should step aside to give undergraduates a chance:

Mr. Croneberg's point is well-taken. Therefore, I will gladly make this my last letter to the editor if Bill and Hank will withdraw as delegates to the 1962 N.S.A. Convention i.e., I will leave the DTH "Letters to the Editor" column to the undergraduates if Bill and Hank will let two Carolina undergraduates take the week-long, expense-paid trip to Columbus, Ohio.

To the Editor:

If it were not for the fraternities and sororities on this campus, UNC would be a "nothing" school. Mr. Wuamett in his rather blatent article on the 80% rule has failed to note the fact that the Greeks have provided more leadership, more school spirit, and more contributions to this University than all non-fraternity men put together. Although we are in the minority, our influence has more than helped to put this school in the position it enjoys today.

The 80% rule is unfair. Wuamett admitted that himself. It could kill a sorority since this is mainly a two-year school for girls, and it can weaken fraternities to the point that their contribution to this University would amount to nothing.

If people would only stop picking at the discrimination clauses in the constitutions and look at the true good the fraternities, too — they would show some maturity. It is infantile and idiotic not to recognize our part on this campus.

Where would you be Wuamett, if it were not fo rour leadership? And as far as accusing us of being hedonistic, I would imagine that the "dorm rats" have their fun, too. We just don't hear as much about it.

The songs, mottos, and creeds that are a part of any fraternity serve to perpetuate a spirit that you, Mr. Wuamett, can not possibly understand. This is not the major part of a fraternity but it serves to remind us of our duties. What have you to remind you of your duties, Mr. Wuamett . . . the Daily Tar Heel?

One not in a fraternity surely can not understand properly its ideas and its genuine constructive spirit. All this talk about conformity is ridiculous. If we try to better ourselves, this is not conformity—it is common sense.

The next time you sit down at your typewriter Wuamett, remember that you cannot possibly write a decent article on fraternities until you join one. Once you are in an organization such as this, you never would consider writing the type of article with which you defiled the editorial page.

To the Editor:

In my letter to the editor which appeared in the March 31 DTH, there has been a gross error in typography. Not only was an important word misspelled, but the sentence it was included in the heading as being a quote WHICH IT IS NOT!

The word I used was EGOISTIC not EGOTISTIC.

There is a vast difference in the meaning of the two words. Please correct this error on your part in the earliest possible edition, for it throws an undesirable light on my entire letter.

Sinatra Plays Sinatra In "The Devil At 4 O'Clock"

By Bobbi Davenport

Hollywood has rediscovered a sure-fire money-maker: the adventure story. This time the adventures are not the grade "B" cliff hangers of old, but have exotic location settings with supermen to grace the super scenery.

In "The Devil at 4 O'Clock," now playing at the Carolina, the opponent is a volcano—a replacement for the guns in "Guns of Navarrone."

The story line is familiar. Father Doonan (Spencer Tracy) has served his flock on a small Pacific island for many years. He has gradually become an alcoholic since his people rejected him when he insisted on building a children's leper hospital on the island. (If such a thing got out, it might hurt the tourist trade.)

The plane that carries his replacement to the island also carries three prisoners on their way to jail in Tahiti. Father Doonan takes them into the mountains to repair the hospital chapel. A doctor, an ex-Parisian street walker, a native nurse, and a beautiful blind girl are the entire hospital staff. Frank Sinatra (one of the prisoners) falls in love with—ah, you guessed it!—the beautiful blind girl.

During all this early action, puffs of steam and intermittent rumblings are heard from the huge volcano that looms at the far end of the island. When the big explosion seems imminent, a freighter appears on the horizon to rescue the islanders. Father Doonan and the three prisoners (hoping for a reprieve) are flown in by an island-hopping bush pilot (Jean Pierre Aumont) to parachute to the rescue of those trapped at the hospital. Some make it to the schooner that is to wait until 4 o'clock, and some don't.

There are no great performances in "The Devil at 4 O'Clock." Spencer Tracy is always worth seeing, and it is interesting to watch Frank Sinatra play Frank Sinatra.

The best scene in the whole movie is when Father Doonan opens his burlap bag to distribute gifts at the hospital: a silk, fringed scarf for the blind Camille, a huge muu muu for the nurse, and three well worn sex magazines for the prostitute turned hospital director. He tells them that the people in the village wanted them to have these gifts. Actually, he had to go on a private raiding party to squeeze these "donations" out of his little flock.

This scene is much more touching than the drama on a grand scale that occupies so much of Liam O'Brien's script.

Director of photography Joseph Biroc gets the nod over director Melvin Leroy — the scenery behaves much better most of the time than do the characters.

One welcome boon to the viewer: "The Devil at 4 O'Clock" runs just over two hours. Maybe the film editors decided that the emotions couldn't absorb more than the seat could stand.

Four Funny Jokes

'62 Campaign Humor

Campus politicos take their politics seriously, but there's ALWAYS a humorous side. The masks of sadness and laughter both played a part in the recent Spring campaign . . . sometimes the mask of laughter had his foot in his mouth.

For instance, anyone seeing Larry McDevitt strolling up the road to the New Dorms the other night, would have been surprised to see him throwing rocks at his own political banner stretched above the road. Of course, to Larry it was a perfectly legitimate action, considering he was attempting to uncurl the sign so that it would display his name to best advantage. But to another lone soul, also traipsing back to his dorm, this action took on different meaning.

Dorm man: Say, I was thinking of doing that myself, getting that sign down . . . I'm sick and tired of looking at it.

Larry and the boy started walking up toward Avery, and the fella elaborated some more: You know, some of my buddies and I have been thinking just how we could get that . . . thing down. We've had several tentative plans, the best one being to put a rock on a piece of rope, toss it over and just rip it down. Sound good? Oh, by the way, we've not really met, I'm John Doe.

Candidate: Glad to know you. I'm Larry McDevitt.

* * *

Second example of the properly placed foot occurred in Stacy Dorm when Mike Lawler stopped at a second floor room to politic with a Pi K A. After a persuasive bit of oratory, Mike placed one toe in mouth by the innocent question: "Are there any questions?"

The whole foot was soon to follow.

The candidate, feeling confident because he could answer this, said quickly: we have not only $22,000 in general surplus but also a former student body president, Charlie Gray, invested $5,000 in bonds that are now maturing. 'Course, they were not only purchased illegally, without the proper authority, etc. (The reader can gather how this sort of thing goes).

Roommate: I don't think you heard my roommate's name. Meet Charlie's younger brother.

* * *

Once in a while the strict stigma on crossing party lines was dropped, and the good hearted fun that resulted on these rare occasions was heartening.

Spencerites were treated to a rare visit from John F. Kennedy Monday night, or at least to an excellent imitation o him by UP candidate for NSA delegate, Joe Masi. Best o all, was that Joe's introduction was made by Jimmy Weeks, SP candidate for treasurer. Jimmy, at the end of a pleasant house meeting (in direct contrast to last year's heated debate, said he felt the last house meeting of a long and exhausting campaign should be closed with a little joint entertainment by the two political parties. Joe seemed the obvious choice, being of SP sympathies and UP endorsement.

Personal note to Inman Allen: Guess the gun-backed PANIC BUTTON presented to a cohort of yours for you at one of the many political coffee breaks at Bryon's recently, really wasn't necessary was it?

Wrye Explains DTH Balance

To the editor:

Recently I have had several friends come to me suggesting that Jim Clotfelter's seeming liability in getting votes in certain circles was hurting even the slightest chance I had to serve as the editor of the Daily Tar Heel . . . At this time I would like to clarify my position on this matter and on a few other issues that have come up throughout our campaign.

* * *

When Jim and I got together to consider the possibiity of our dual candidateship, we felt that by serving together we could turn out a better DTH. We did not think in terms of votes to be garnered this spring, but rather, in terms of the paper to be put out next year.

We feel that our broad and varied backgrounds give us cognizance of campus issues obviously unparalleled by too many past editors.

Our involvement in campus problems has been sincere, our approaches have varied, and our sights set on the abolition of student apathy. Couple this with the fact that Jim has a technical knowledge of the workings of the Tar Heel that is equaled by few students on this campus, and you come up with the best posible combination for the improvement of the Daily Tar Heel.

Both of us feel capable of serving as your editor, and both of us feel that by working together we will be able to give yo uthe type of Tar Heel you want.

* * *

There have been suggestions that I will just serve as a front while Jim sets all the editorial tone of the paper. Nothing is further from the truth. Jim and I must be, and are able to work together.

I am not anybody's flunky. I resent the suggestion.

* * *

"I have ideas about what this campus needs, and I have my ideas about how we must strive to strenghten total student involvement. I feel that it is about time someone who is familiar with fraternity problems starts making the editorial comments about fraternity problems. I feel that much needs to be made more clear to all sides. If you are wondering what my stand is on the big fraternity issue— the eighty per cent rule, well, just bear in mind that I am a member of a fraternity that lost its fall rushing privileges because of that rule. Bear in mind that I sat in the living room of the Sigma Nu house and argued with Dean Kreps for hours about that rule. I firmly believe that the IFC has gotten up off its proverbial butt and is rapidly becoming the leading force in realistic approaches to our concerns, and I believe that the DTH must assume its role in presenting the truth about all issues to everyone concerned.

However, though believing that fraternities should be represented on the Tar Heel, I do not think that the staff should be made up of fifty of my fraternity brothers.

I am personally of the opinion concern of student government about inadequate dormitory social facilities, but I feel that too many other dormitory problems are being approached too timidly.

I am personally of the opionion that the newly elected IDC prexy, Bruce Welch, will be capable of leading the Interdormitory Council into an aroused year of trouble shooting. And I would like to be in a position to make sure that the Tar Heel gives these campus leaders every possible assistance.

* * *

As for the statement by Mr. Mooney, let me just say that they were cleverly cute political ambiguities. I was DTH assistant sports editor, I did not "wander off," I went to the hospital with mononucleosis. I did not change any petition. And Jim did not "go home early, after a hard summer." (as was s cutely suggested). Rather, he went to represent our University at the National Student Congress.

But rather than belabor innumerable hashed-over issues, at this time I would like to say that Jim and I, working together, will be seriously endeavouring to raise the stature and service of your campus newspaper. I would appreciate your support.

—Chuck Wrye

DTH Co-Editors 'Only Choice'

To the Editor:

I worked for 3½ years on the DTH—as sports editor, feature editor, associate editor, etc., and therefore feel somewhat qualified to speak concerning our campus newspaper.

Last week there were two capable, intelligent, experienced candidates for the editorship. One of them, Mike Mathers, has withdrawn. Now there is only ONE choice.

Very few of us realize just how much work goes into getting the DTH out every morning. Just getting it out—not to mention making it a good paper. Two things are absolutely essential: (1) Strong, intelligent leadership on the part of the editor. (2) A good staff.

I do not believe that Ernest Stepp can provide either of the aforementioned necessities. For one thing, the present staff has endorsed Clotfelter-Wrye whole-heartedly and, no matter who is elected, the backbone of the paper, as always, will be those who have given up their time and energies in the past.

Clotfelter has alienated many fraternity men. But, I think they will realize that there are things inherent in the fraternity system that will always draw criticism, anywhere, anytime, and no matter who the editor is. At the same time there are many valuable functions that fraternities can and DO serve. Also, it is obvious that the 80 per cent rule does them an injustice.

I would argue that they should not fear the criticism. What they should worry about, in this case, is selecting a candidate who will prove to be a weak, ineffectual voice, and, therefore, be more harmful to their cause in the long run. Furthermore, they should rest assured that Clotfelter-Wrye will provide strong presentation of their good side—and EFFECTIVE presentation of the arguments against the 80 per cent rule.

For the sake of a good paper (or just A paper) vote for Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye.

UNC Trims Harvard, 6-3, For Fifth Tennis Victory

By Louis Legum

The Harvard tennis team came to Chapel Hill yesterday to play their first match of the season and became the fifth net squad in a row to bow to Coach Don Skakle's undefeated Tar Heels, 6-3. At times, Carolina had more difficulty in battling the cold, windy weather than their inexperienced opponents. The two teams will meet again tomorrow on their varsity courts at 2 p.m.

In the feature match, little George Sokol wore down even smaller Paul Sullivan by a 9-7, 6-2 score. Once again, it was Sokol's relentless forehand that forced mistakes from his victim.

Ted Hoehn took Vic Niederhoffer with almost no difficulty, 6-2, 6-2. Chapel Hill's Charlie Shaffer also won easily, 6-3, 6-3, over Harvard's Bob Inman. Towering Bitsy Harrison harnessed his unpredictable strokes to defeat Gary Adelman, 8-6, 8-6.

The big surprise of the day came on the third court as Harvard's Frank Ripley snapped Keith Stoneman's 23 match streak by a 6-3, 6-4 score. Ripley, from California, made good use of a slow start from the Tar Heel captain to win the match. The final singles went to the Crimson when John Vinton rallied in three sets to beat Carolina's Stan Cocke, 7-9, 6-4, 6-2.

UNC clinched their victory with two triumphs in the doubles. Hoehn and Stoneman decisioned Sullivan and Ripley, by a narrow 6-2, 2-6, and 6-3, while Harrison and Shaffer combined to sweep Niederhoffer and Adelman 6-4, 7-5. The third doubles saw Harvard's Inman and Vinton defeat Kirby Jones and Garland Carlton, 6-3, 4-6, 6-4.

Clark And Whittle Capture Firsts In Florida Relays

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina's track team, although failing to retain its distance medley championship, still came away with two first places Saturday in the Florida Intercollegiate Relays.

Greensboro sophomore Tom Clark won the high jump at 5-6¾ while Davidson's Heath Whittle valuted 14-1 to tie for first place in that event.

Carolina's highly-regarded distance medley team, which ran 10:05 last year to establish the record, finished second to ACC champion Maryland Saturday, while the UNC sprint medley team could only manage a fifth place.

Bob Hart, Scott Brent, Jerry Stuver, and Rhett Everett were Carolina's participants in the distance medley while Hart, Jim Brown, Bob Bennett, and John McNinch formed the sprint medley team. The Tar Heels' next start will be Saturday when they meet South Carolina at Columbia.

Mann Third In National Finals

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Carolina's ace backstroker Thompson Mann captured two third places Friday and Saturday as Ohio State University romped to the NCAA Swimming Championships at Columbus, Ohio.

Mann, a sophomore from Hickory, Va., finished with times of 54.8 and 2:01.9 in the 100 and 200-yard backstroke events but could not beat out his old menace Jed Graef of Princeton and Ohio State's L. B. Shaefer.

Shaefer won both races—one in record-tying time. The swift Buckeye was clocked in 1:58.8 in the 200 and swam 53.9 in the 100 to tie the mark set last year by Southern California's Charlie Bittick.

Only one of North Carolina State's swimmers managed to reach the finals over the weekend but that one made it big. Ed Spencer, the Wolfpack's fine junior merman, won the 100-yard butterfly championship in 52.5.

Two Tar Heel Tankmen will close out UNC swimming this Thursday, Friday, and Saturday at the AAU Men's Indoor Championships in Bartlesville, Okla.

Joining Mann at the AAU event will be be heraled freestyler Harrison Merrill. Merrill, a freshman from Atlanta, Ga., set three NCAA freshman records last Feb. 19 at an invitational meet the UNC pool.

At Bartlesville, Merrill will enter the 220 and 440 freestyle races while Mann will swim his usual 100 and 220-yard backstroke races.

Carolina-Wake Tilt Opens ACC Action

By ED DUPREE

Wake Forest's Demon Deacons and North Carolina's baseball Tar Heels open the ACC baseball season this afternoon at 3 in Emerson Stadium.

Leading the Deacons batsmen is Roger Coon, a hard hitting outfielder who set a conference record last season by driving home 38 runs. The 1961 Deacon team won 23 games and lost only seven, but their 9-5 mark in the ACC placed them in third place behind Duke and UNC.

The 1962 team holds a 3-1 record with victories over Kent State twice and Yale, and a loss to East Carolina.

Senior right-hander Don Roth is slated to pitch against the Tar Heels. Roth had a 2-1 mark last season and pitched a five-hitter against Yale in his first 1962 start.

For the Tar Heels, who stand 2-3 for the season, sophomore right-hander Andy Billesdon (1-1) will be on the mound. Billesdon hurled a two-hit shutout or seven innings before VPI unloaded for four runs in the eighth inning last Friday to win 4-3.

Buddy Tilden is the leading UNC hitter with a .429 mark on six hits in 14 at bat. Other Tar Heels above the .300 mark are Larry Neal, .386, Heyward Hull, .333, and Jim Speight, .313.

But if you wait until you graduate, you'll find it almost impossible to land a writing job with a good advertising agency. To get a job, you have to have experience. To get experience, you have to have a job.

Now, an easier way to get into advertising.

This summer, one of the largest and most respected advertising agencies is offering jobs as full-fledged advertising copywriters to a few outstanding men who are college juniors.

You work from mid-June until Labor Day in our office in New York.

You start right out writing.

You don't have to carry mail or sharpen pencils—the usual ways to break into advertising. You do get a chance to think up and write advertisements and commercials for nationally known companies in the food, appliance, soap, gasoline and insurance fields.

You learn, not through lectures or training programs, but by actually working with the most capable professionals in the business.

You earn enough to pay transportation costs from your home, live in New York, and still show a profit at the end of the summer (if you're not too big-hearted about snatching all the lunch tabs).

Can you qualify?

Since this is a temporary job, men in their junior year are preferred. If you succeed this summer, you will be offered a permanent job as a copywriter after you graduate.

No, you don't have to be an advertising major.

Some of our best writers majored in English, philosophy, history, political science, classics. Some didn't even go to college. But all of them are gifted with an instinctive understanding of—and respect for—people.

How can you tell if you have the stuff?

Do you love to read? We've yet to meet a good writer who isn't a reader—hungry for new ideas, excited about new ways of expressing them.

Do you love to write? If you have what it takes, you have probably been writing all your life. Right now, you may be writing articles for your college newspaper; scripts for the radio station; letters that get her to say "yes"; poems, plays, or stories just to please yourself.

If this sounds like you—and you like the sound of working in one of New York's great advertising agencies—write for full details on how to apply. Write a letter that shows how well you can write. Mail it by April 15th.

If you are accepted, you will have a summer you'll remember all your life. And if you succeed, you will find yourself with a full-time job which pays the kind of money it takes to get married and in which there is no such thing as a dull day.

McGee States Faith Vital To American Leadership

The central fact that must be understood about the political revolutions in the world today, Sen. Gale McGee told a Symposium audience of about 1400 persons last night, is that what is taking place in the world today would be taking place if there had never been any Russians on earth.

The liberation of the peoples of the world by World War II and their acquaintanceship with American riches that they had never seen before, he stated, made these people feel that they had been cheated and gave them a desire to make up for lost time.

"The history of these times," he said, "will be called the history of the era of independence—not of the struggle between freedom and communism."

McGee stated that we must act as though we believe what we say about freedom, and attacked the extremists in America who "fear so deeply that they have forgotten their faith in what we believe."

He then stated the four concepts that he considers vital for Americans to accept if they are to provide world leadership.

"We must face the obvious—most of the world is non-white. The race issue in America must be considered in the light that it affects our image in the rest of the world. And we dare not forget that we are seeking to lead in a non-white world.

"The people of most of the rest of the world are desperately poor in a way that we can scarcely comprehend." McGee then cited a number of examples of world poverty such as a Congo chieftain whose annual income is about $20.

"We must remember that people are different." We have to understand, he said, the various cultures of man, and we cannot expect them to arbitrarily adopt our standards.

"The people of the world are in a desperate hurry," he stated as the fourth concept. "They don't intend to work out studious rationalizations for their actions. They intend only to make up for lost time in a hurry."

"These people hold the hand of the medicine on one side and the tail of a rocket on the other. They want to pull the two together—now."

In conclusion, the senior senator from Wyoming said that America needs less hypocrisy. "The people must accept the harsh realities, and the leaders must tell the people what they do not like to hear."

Run-Off Election Completes Voting

By ALEX MACFADYEN

Student Party candidates made a clean sweep of the run-off elections yesterday when Mike Lawler was elected Vice President of the Student Body, and Chuck Wrye and Jim Clotfelter were elected Co-editors of the Daily Tar Heel.

Lawler won over Larry McDevitt by 227 votes giving him 54 per cent of the total votes cast.

Wrye and Clotfelter defeated Ernest Stepp 1543 to 1167.

Lawler carried a majority of the dorm votes while McDevitt carried a majority of the town men votes. Clotfelter and Wrye carried both the dorms and the town men's districts..

Several hundred students turned out for the ballot counting at Graham Memorial last night, and several victory parties were held off campus to celebrate the Student Party win.

Aycock Litter Case In Hands Of Dorm Council

The case involving the litter of beer cans and furniture in Aycock's TV room is now in the hands of the Interdormitory Council, George Strong, assistant in the office of student affairs, reported yesterday.

"There was no dorm damage," Strong said, "and we don't want to make an example of Aycock. The only damage was a broken chair not belonging in the TV room." Strong also said that he was misquoted in the DTH yesterday with regard to his statements concerning the magnitude of the damage and the fact that the IDC has done well considering what they have to work with.

Arthur Beaumont, chief of campus police, declined to comment on the case other than that it was out of his hands.

Social, Scientific Revolutions Are Tonight's Topics

Dr. Huston Smith, professor of philosophy at MIT, and Dr. Samuel Kirkwood, Biochemist at the U. of Minnesota, will speak at the Symposium tonight on "Social and Scientific Revolutions."

Their speeches will be centered around the relative social and scientific changes responsible for the "development of the Post-Modern Mind and a new view of reality."

Travels In The East

Dr. Smith, who is author of "The Religions of Man," has traveled widely and has spent much of his life in India, the Near East, and Southeast Asia collecting materials for his research in the fields of comparative philosophy and religions.

He has contributed to the "Adventures of the Mind" series in "The Saturday Evening Post" in an article which appeared August 26, 1961.

Dr. Smith will arrive this morning and spend the day visiting classes and the campus before his address this evening.

Previous Visit Here

On the same program with Dr. Smith will be an address on "Scientific Revolutions" by Dr. Samuel Kirkwood, Biochemist from the University of Minnesota. A native Canadian, Dr. Kirkwood, whose research on the thyroid hormone and metabolism have gained national recognition, has visited Chapel Hill previously as a lecturer.

Dr. Kirkwood will arrive at UNC on Tuesday and will remain on the campus until Thursday morning.

Seldes, Grierson Point Out 3 'Revolutions In The Arts'

By LLOYD LITTLE

Three basic "Revolutions in the Arts" are happening today, art critics Gilbert Seldes and John Grierson said in Tuesday night's symposium program:

—Revolutions in electronic communication, as seen in films and television, are creating, and will create, changes in art.

—Revolutions in how the artist expresses himself—for instance, the arrival of perspective in paintings during the Italian Renaissance and more recently, the change to abstract from realism.

—Revolutions in ourselves as a result of, Grierson said, "a constant bombardment on our minds by the expanding images and new realities."

Seldes, first director of the University of Pennsylvania's Annenberg School of Communications, was not overly optimistic in present changes concerning the "quality in the way in which we receive the arts now."

Nothing Immortal Now

"Entertainment, almost perpetual, enters our personal lives every day," he said. "I'm not at all sure that we're creating anything immortal and lasting, except perhaps a few silent movies and perhaps some jazz music."

Seldes asked, "What good are they (new methods of communication) doing for us? We know we have incalculable instruments of communication and we wonder how to use them."

"Science makes a jump every five years and it takes the mind ten to catch up."

He spoke of the "dangers in not knowing what the needs of the public really are and the danger of creating dullness, deadness and inertia."

Hypocritical Snobbery

"We have to get over a kind of snobbery," Seldes said. "The snobbery of saying it's only good if 'we, the civilized minority,' say its good."

The critic said there is a perpetual need to preach against ignorance and suggested this is one area where the new "engines of communication" could make significant changes.

One real revolutionary phenomenon, said Seldes, has been the arrival of the American school of painting and it is recognized in Europe as a legitimate new school.

The second speaker, John Grierson, chairman of the Scottish Government Television said, the basic source of change in the arts lies in the changes in society, "as new economic forces and widening horizons establish new habits of thought and new values among men; and as these, in turn suggest new dramatic patterns and images of beauty."

Realities Affect Art

"This bombardment of new realities certainly affects our own perspectives and our sense of appreciation. There will, of course, be some pessimism—the problem of aesthetic harmony."

"This results in such psychological problems as exemplifed by the 'beat' in America and the conflict of the individual and the corporation man—all marks of much that is personally unresolved in our experiences."

"This certainly affects the arts, but I don't think this pessimism is lasting," Grierson said. "Because there is the one final measurement that all artists eventually come back to: human destiny."

He used this same concern of the artist with human destiny as the reason for disagreeing with Dr. Crane Brinton, opening symposium speaker. Grierson said he did not think that "former aesthetic revolutions will be dispossessed by later revolutions."

Arts Are In The Present

However, he added, "We can admire the old arts but we must

Hardison Publishes Work On Criticism

The New York publishing house of Appleton-Century-Crofts has announced the publication of a major work by O. B. Hardison Jr., associate professor of English at UNC.

Entitled "Modern Continental Literary Criticism," the 352-page paperbound book presents a collection of basic documents in the history of Continental literary criticism since Kant. Included in the anthology are selections by major French, German, Italian and Russian critics.

Dr. Hardison, who taught at the University of Tennessee and at Princeton University before coming to Chapel Hill has chosen and arranged the contents to emphasize three principal phases of Continental criticism — aethetic, scientific and humanistic.

Continental criticism — aesthetic,

Each selection is introduced by a headnote which indicates the historical importance of the critic and his work in English and American criticism.

Two of the selections are translated in Dr. Hardison's book for the first time—those of Andre Breton and Charles Maurras — and three others are in new translations especially commissioned for this text—those by Theophile Gautier, Charles Baudelaire and Stephane Mallarme.

Other important authors whose work is included in "Modern Continental Literary Criticism" includes Schelling, Schiller, Goethe, Emile Zola, Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Tolstoy, Henry Bergson, Nietzche, Freud, Jung and Jean-Paul Sartre.

The new book is being published in the paperbound series of Goldentree Books and is priced at about $2.75.

Dr. Hardison, who received his B.A. and M.A. degree from UNC, joined the faculty there in 1957 after taking his Ph.D. degree a year earlier at Wisconsin.

Beatniks' Beards Burned By Panel

By LINDA BYSER

A trio of writers singed the beatniks' beards and literary efforts headed for the real fire in future literature during a symposium panel discussion on writing Tuesday afternoon.

No current vital revolution exists in literature said John Aldridge, critic and author from Hollins College. This is a period of consolidation and refinement in literary works, he noted.

Undercurrents of revolution were detected by panelist Andrew Lytle, editor of the Sewanee Review who observes certain things are always recurring. "This perpetual experience that is always true is called archetype." Archetypal writing is a possibility for the future he predicts. "Give it human characteristics", he says, "because its got to resemble human beings".

No Poetry Revolution

Poet Charles Eaton of Chapel Hill noted "no signs of any revolution of great vitality" in poetry. He sides with the hopefuls in writing rather than the complaints, he said.

Vernacular writing of Eliot and Pound has become too colloquial he thinks. Beatniks don't say anything new to Eaton. The Beatnik movement is not a revolution but a symptom of a terrible fatigue to him. "What they say has been said so much better before. It is like the flux of the mind spewing forth. The beat style is characterized by four letter words for shock and a main theme of sexual eccentricity," he said.

Revive the lofty brave and magnificent to recreate a revolution in writing, he suggests.

End Of Realist Novel

The difference between Bohemians and Beatniks is the long hair has fallen to the lower part of the face, Aldridge observed. The modern age is in a constant state of revolution he said but there is a distinction between the truly vital revolutions and the beat or angry young men movements.

The realist novel is done for, Lytle noted. Nothing can be added to it. Writers deal more and more in myth now, he said.

The problem of envisioning experience without falling into stereotyped cliches faces the novelist now, stated Aldridge.

Personal Revolution Is Vital

The personal revolution is more important than the social revolution in writing Eaton noted. "The writer has got to fall back on himself and make a world he can live in with dignity. The writer's problem is how to keep an integrated life. He cannot always blame his culture or his mama and daddy," he said.

To what extent can social values become dramatic values? Aldridge answered that the decline in social values make it necessary for authors to shift from the social world to the personal world and create characters to whom certain things will have certain value. The characters would then stand out against society.

Resist Mass Taste

The writers advocated that authors too should stand out against the popular tastes of society and not compromise their work to the mass taste to gain popularity and money and lose quality in writing.

The better literature is found in college and university literary magazines Eaton said, and rarely in the popular magazines devoted to mass tastes. The universities open their doors to support most artists of our time, he observed.

No Art Revolution, Dr. Sedgwick Says

By DAVE CHEEK

"An artist has enough trouble without worrying about his audience" . .. those were the words of Roy Gussow, one of two men speaking at the Art Symposium yesterday afternoon. Mr. Gussow, art instructor at State College, was speaking in answer to audience questions about the artist and communication.

The discussion between Mr. Gussow and Dr. John Sedgwick Jr. got off to a lively start as Dr. Sedgwick expressed the opinion that we are not in the middle of a revolution in the arts—at least not a clearly defined one. Speaking mostly in respect to painters, Dr. Sedgwick went on to say that not since the New York School of the 1940's has there been anything in America close to a revolution in art.

Mr. Gussow was more limiting: not since the period of 1905-1915 has America had a revolution in art. Frank Lloyd Wright and others just prior to the first World War comprised the only real new period in art .

Furthermore, Mr. Gussow did not think people would be able to recognize a revolution if they saw it. This brought sharp questions from the audience of some 150. It was at this time that Mr. Gussow went on to express himself on communication in art. He stated that it was the responsibility of the audience to take the active part in the communication process rather than the artist.

Whether Here Or In Russia

We Aim At Ourselves

Stephen D. James, an advertising copywriter in New York, has come up with refreshingly original approach to the knotty problem of how to prevent nuclear war.

James and his wife believe that the attitude of suspicion and distrust that can trigger a nuclear the first step toward overcoming war is to establish a common denominator between the Russian and American people. Acting on this idea, the Bronx couple has drawn up what has come to be known as the Hostages for Peace plan.

The idea is that hundreds of Americans, including relatives of members of the Administration and Congress, should take up temporary residence in the Soviet Union, and the Soviets, in return should send a corresponding number of Russian citizens to spend an equal period of time in the United States. Such an arrangement, James contends, would deter war since these people would be in target areas. The idea, he says, is as old as Alexander's hope that his conquering soldiers would marry the enemy's women and settle down in Persia.

According to the New York Times, the plan has received consideration from the State Department.

Although it was reported about two weeks ago that some 150 persons have already volunteered to participate in such a project, we personally do not foresee any great flurry of applications forthcoming. James himself says he does not expect any "massive" migration this year or next.

It was reported after James' suggestion, however, that White House Press Secretary Pierre Salinger has thought of sending his children to Moscow for a time, but there appears to be no connection with the hostage plan. Aleksei Adzhubei, Premier Khrushchev's son-in-law, was said to be considering sending his children to the States this summer.

Regretfully, we see no great future for James' plan. To begin with, we can foresee no great desire on the part of State Department official's relatives to stand in front of American missiles and try to wave them away from Russian soil, nor any corresponding upsurge of feeling on the part of relatives of Russian higher-ups.

James' proposal is similar to a chess move which puts one's own queen in danger to stave off a check-mate. War is hell any way you look at it, and nuclear war particularly so. Relatives of high state officials or no, 150, or 200, or even 1,000 Russians on American soil aren't going to stop any buttons from being pushed for any appreciable amount of time. The game goes on whether the pieces lost are pawns, knights, castles or kings.

As Alistair Cooke pointed out recently in an article commenting on Jame's plan, "the chief snag seems to lie in the contradiction between goodwill and the mechanism for procuring it. 'Diplomacy,' said Machaivelli, 'is a method for securing goodwill. However, if goodwill exists, there is no need for diplomacy.' The same may be said about the base on which the United Nations was built: that 'unanimity of the permanent powers' which, if had existed at all, would have vitiated the need for a United Nations."

Still, even if we accept Cooke's pessimism, and give just heed to all contradictions and shortcomings in the Peace Hostage plan as outlined by James and his wife, we still should be heartened by it.

The very fact that James thought of it at all demonstrates that not all of the American people are devoting their energies to devising a way to build a better bomb shelter. Some, like James, are putting in some time trying to find some way to cut through the pall of imminent destruction with ideas designed to help prevent it.

Too, the idea points up some of the ridiculousness of war. Would high state officials here, or in Russia, be willing to loose a rain of destruction at the "enemy" if that enemy stood alongside members of their own family?

Perhaps not.

But the truth is that whether these same men give the signal which will plunge the world into war, they have done so at the expense of their own families, whether those families are killed in Russia by our own weapons or killed here by theirs.

Either way, we aim our weapons at ourselves.

Injustice

One of the sadder observations facing students at this time of year is that warm weather brings not only green leaves and an almost overpowering desire to lie on your back and look at nothing, but also a corresponding desire on the part of professors to "cover the material before the semester is over."

There seems to be some kind of inverse proportion between student ambition and professorial sense of duty at this particular time of year.

It's one of fate's great injustices that the days get warmer as the spring semester gets shorter.

Newspapers Play Down Racial News

The same night that Dr. Crane Brinton opened the Carolina Symposium with a talk on the "Concepts of Revolution," a small group of people heard Fred Reed, a veteran reporter, describe the effects of the greatest social revolution facing the South today—integration—in Augusta, Georgia.

None of us knew the story because it had not been carried in any North Carolina newspaper. It is fitting, in a week devoted to the study of revolutions, that we ask why.

As a rule, Southern newspapers are owned by local capitalists. There is no town with competing newspapers south of Louisville, Kentucky, so they are generally monopolies as well. The newspaper owners are likely to have very strong voices in the local chambers of commerce, and are almost always interested in attracting new industries to their cities.

The lesson they drew from Little Rock shows plainly that industries are unwilling to establish themselves in cities where the local chamber of commerce cannot assure them "our Negroes are happy." The newspaper owners also know that as Dr. Brinton pointed out, "revolution is contagious." Integration news, which is largely played down, usually receives its rightful prominence only when it is possible to project the image of a strife-torn city. An example of what happens if the local gendarmes permit Yankee agitators and uppity niggers to combine forces, no doubt.

Since the pattern of integration in Augusta has not followed these lines, it has not received newspaper coverage in the South.

Ted Kennedy Learns From His Mistakes

"Well, that should finish him!" remarked one person on reading in the newspaper that "Ted" Kennedy had been asked to leave Harvard, during his freshman year, for asking a friend to take his examination for him.

I said not necessarily so, everybody should be given at least one chance to learn from mistakes. Nobody is perfect, and most of us have to learn by trial and error. The Greeks said centuries ago,—"Man learns wisdom only through suffering." For most people, one lesson is sufficient; for some it takes several lessons; a few incorrigibles never learn and they wind up permanent residents of our penitentiaries. It is up to parents and to society to see that the lessons are learned, for it is no kindness to anyone to let them go through life thinking that because they have not been caught that lying, cheating, and stealing was all right.

Recently it would certainly seem that many of our men in the highest executive positions in the financial world, never learned that lesson. How they must regret that the rod wasn't applied when the suffering would have been much less and the disgrace not so humiliating.

The purpose of discipline is to form character, not to destroy people. I am sure "Ted" Kennedy profited by his mistake committed in his youth. He is, undoubtedly stronger for having suffered for his error. "He that is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone."

'Fair' Plan To Replace 80 Pct. Rule

The desire, if not the ability, to present a realistic plan for administering fraternity grade averages, to offer some reasons for the plan, and to challenge some previously printed ideas about fraternities and fraternity-University relations impels us to submit this essay.

By answering some of the questions and challenging some of the ideas expressed recently by Mr. Ken Toppell and Mr. Bill Waumett, thereby arriving at different conclusions, we shall lay the basis for a plan more satisfactory than any yet advanced. We wish that Mr. Toppell's analysis were as reasonable as his rhetoric is rousing. If he were less resentful of what he chooses to call "discrimination," he could perhaps be more objective. The Eighty Per Cent Rule requires only that four fifths of the membership of a given house make a "C" average or better, not that, as Mr. Toppell asserts, the fraternity average must be higher than the campus average. Indeed, the over-all average of the chapter is of no concern, though it would be better to employ such an average. To proclaim the absurdity of the Eighty Per Cent Rule by devising a comparable, even more absurd requirement for the faculty is merely to dodge any real issues and to indulge in petty bickering.

There are differences between a fraternity and any other organization on campus, and if Mr. Toppell were able to see more precisely what they are and why they exist, he could perhaps accept more readily both the benefits and obligations which attend these differences. These real differences do not result, to use Mr. Waumett's words, from thinking oneself or his fraternity superior to "niggers, jews, un-sharp guys, or poor people." On those criteria we would be the last to claim any such superiority for ourselves, but on grounds of our own choosing we would be the first to practice the privilege of associating with whom we please. We would extend the same right to a group of individuals freely associated, of their own volition, in friendship.

Fraternity Demands Time and Energy

The differences between a fraternity and any other organization lie in the natures of the respective groups. A fraternity tries to become a larger and more lasting part of a member's whole life than does any other group. Involvement and commitment to a fraternity can become more significant and can last longer than any ties with a group having a less permanent and more local structure. Not only does the fraternity demand a great deal of time, money, energy, and ability from a pledge or member, usually greater demands than those of other organizations, but also the fraternity attempts by its dormitory section, dining room, social calendar, and athletic program to serve its members over a wider range of activities. The most important difference is the initiation ceremony, a ritual which marks differences between pledge and member and between a fraternity and all other groups, and which gives meaning and permanence to a fraternal association which other groups lack. Either the inability to see these differences or the unwillingness to admit them can cause a person not to realize that standards applied to a fraternity must be different from those applied to any other organization.

If a fratenity is demanding in its requirements, it can also be generous in bestowing its benefits; but both should be undertaken by only the young man who can meet extra requirements and enjoy extra benefits because he has extra time, extra money, extra energy, yes, Mr. Toppell, even extra ability over and above what are required by the academic departments and the administration of the University. Unfortunately these ideal conditions do not always exist, and there is all too often ample justification for Mr. Waumett's assertion that fraternities are "so hedonistic in nature that they must be curtailed and harrassed (sic)," though we would question harassment as an effective solution to any problem. Too many times fraternities become mutual admiration societies devoted to perpetuating a group of the same kind of person, prejudices, narrow-minded attitudes, unnecessary restrictions, and most of the other perversities known to mankind.

"Raison d'Etre"

Bearing in mind the nature of a fraternity as it can and should be, the differences between it and other organizations, the extra demands and benefits conferred by a fraternity, and the requisites which the fraternity member should possess, we gladly acknowledge that the University does have a right to exercise control over a fraternity on the basis of its grade average. And the fraternity member should neither resent such control nor think himself discriminated against. If he must, he may consider it part of the price he pays for membership. Better, he should realize that the scholarship average is an excellent index to the health and strength of the fraternity chapter at all levels of operation, and should work to improve the fraternity average for his own sake primarily, but also for the chapter's sake. The differences between a fraternity and any other organization justify, even require, that the University enforce scholarship standards and administer penalties for violations. It is only right that the fraternity prove itself worthy of respect, indeed prove its "raison d'etre," by remaining in good standing academically.

Having shown some reasons for a neccessary control over scholarship, we are now faced with the problem of formulating an effective plan. The Eighty Per Cent Rule seems to be both unfair and ineffective, though we shall not enter another in the long list of diatribes against it. Since an entire chapter is penalized, each member feeling the punishment to the same degree, it seems only fair that an arithmetic average of the whole chapter's grades should be use as the criterion for judgment, each man's grades contributing equally to that final average. The average could be determined by taking the grand total of each man's grade points weighted with the number of semester hours and dividing the sum by the total number of the semester hours represented. This average would reflect more accurately than any other measure the level of scholarship of the chapter as a whole. The administration might then require that each chapter's average be in numerical value the equivalent of a "C." If a chapter should fail to meet the required standard, some members would still suffer for the failure of others, but there is a chance that the high grades of some members would counterbalance the low grades of others. Of course the grades of every member would have to be tallied. To work properly, this method of control requires accuracy, patience to smooth out difficulties, and mutual trust between the University and individual chapters, but the system is feasible and fair.

In answer to Mr. Toppell, Mr. Wuamett, and all other interested persons, there is ample justification for University control over a fraternity chapter based upon its grade average, and the arithmetic average of everyone's grades is the best measure of the real level of scholarship.

Profs Give Quizes During Symposium

To the Editor:

For several months numerous students on this campus have labored to organize the present symposium. The visiting speakers are probably the most learned and informed in their various fields, yet a great many students are unable to attend the lectures because instructors are giving quizes.

How can we hope to have a successful symposium when we have instructors who pretend to think their quizes are as important as any one of the symposium lecturers.

A quiz can be given any time. These speakers will probably never be here again.

It seems that the faculty could be a little more cooperative in this matter, not only for the remainder of this symposium, but in years to come.

Pete West

You people who write to the Tar Heel and complain about the discrimination on our campus. You people who write to the DTH and attack the fraternity system because it's unfair. You people who write to our campus newspaper and criticize the faculty, South Building, the Carolina co-ed, Poli. Sci. 41, your neighbors, Lenoir Hall, your political opponents, and the Kennedy administration, put down your sarcastic pencils, get off your smug, complacent rear-ends, and stop waggin' your tongues long enough to listen to:

Good music, somebody else, or, better still, your Carolina Symposium. You might pick up some facts to reinforce those flimsy arguments; you might be inspired or interested by intelligent people; or you might even learn something. And it's free!

Women Are Tightwads, Study Shows

CHICAGO (UPI) — One study shows it's the wife who's the tightwad in most families.

The average man would happily give his wife more money to spend if she would only let him, says a counseling firm.

A pilot study by the Public Relations Board shows it's the little woman who looks upon going to the hairdresser, new hats and sirloin steak for dinner as extravagances.

This is not to say most husbands have acquired the wisdom to understand that mink is no luxury. But if husbands aren't quite that easy-going, the study still indicates they would rather buy something for the wife and children than for themselves.

Not so the ladies! Most are ready the study indicates, to cut out their husbands' beer and cigar money when the budget runs low. Husbands' bowling and spending for home workshops also come under the heading of extravagances in most wives' books.

More evidence that men are more generous: most of the husbands studied wanted more labor-saving household appliances for their wives, but the women saw little need for such husband-savers as power lawn mowers.

Robinson's Ramblings

That the American girl is a good healthy one I will not argue, but the unmarried one, according to my observations seems to be prone to certain slight maladies. These I have enumerated as follows, along with my surmise as to their causes:

Headache: This generally comes on when she has a date with you and is going out with someone else.

Deafness: A temporary affliction usually brought on by such remarks as, "Let's walk instead of drive."

Itching palms: Caused by the sight of a handsome bachelor with a little money, or any bachelor with a lot of money.

Hallucinations: She thinks you want to marry her. Say, what in the world was it you said to her last night?

Cold feet: A condition which develops all of a sudden a little while after she answers yes to a marriage proposal.

Music Logic

Maurice Abravael, maestro of the Utah Symphony Orchestra can think as fast as he can whip his baton.

Not long ago, a young music lover tackled Maurice in a friendly debate.

The young man bragged he never attended concerts. "Why should I?" he asked. "I got all the great music on records at home. When I want to hear it, I just turn on the phonograph."

Maestro Abravael pondered a minute. "You remind me," he said, "of a boy who spent all of his time in his room admiring his collection of pin-up girls, never realizing that the chic chick next door had something which the pin-ups didn't have.

Flatt, Scruggs Play Here Next Week

Columbia recording stars Lester Flatt, Earl Scruggs and the Foggy Mountain Boys will bring their blue grass music to the Carolina campus in a concert to be held next Wednesday night, at 8 in Memorial Hall.

The concert, sponsored jointly by Graham Memorial and the senior class, will feature the kind of mountain music which in less than ten years has skyrocketed the group to international notoriety.

Proceeds from the show will be used to finance this year's senior gift and to provide prize money for a forthcoming campus-wide essay contest.

Tickets may be purchased for one dollar apiece and are now on sale at Kemp's in downtown Chapel Hill and at Graham Memorial.

OAS Troops Hit Hospital

Early reports said 10 Moslems were killed and eight wounded, most of them seriously.

There was no immediate indication whether the terrorists were after certain Moslems in the hospital or whether the raid was a demonstration to show the OAS will stop at nothing to wreck the cease-fire and keep Algeria from becoming independent.

In other terrorist attacks, two Moslems were killed and three wounded.

The attack on the Beaufrasier hospital in the Algiers suburb of Bouzareah followed Monday night's mortar shelling of the Algiers Casbah in which seven Moslems were wounded.

U.S. Asks Funds Release To Aid European Nations

PARIS (UPI) — The United States is asking for the release of some $600 million in former Marshall Plan funds for aid to economically backward European countries, authoritative diplomatic sources said Tuesday.

The money is currently in the so-called European Fund of the 20-nation Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development OECD. The sources described it as a "hangover" from the days of Marshall aid which ended gradually more than six years ago.

draw our strength from the present."

e offered a slightly different interpretation than Seldes of revolutions in television and films: "The reality was creating its necessary medium."

Grierson said TV was the middle man between writers and the consumers. In answer to a question later, he said, "But I wouldn't be too pessimistic, it's simply a matter of getting better and more imaginative sponsorship and backing."

In a discussion group yesterday in Howell Hall, Grierson compared American TV to Scottish, saying that while his own country may have 'better' TV on the whole, "American television, when it is good, is excellent and when it is bad, is really bad."

"There are new realities just around the next corner—we have got to appreciate the world as a changing world."

During the question and answer period following Tuesday speeches:

What will be the effect of (Newton) Minnow's (chairman of the Federal Communications Commission) "get tough" policy on television?

Seldes: "I think Minnow made a grave tactical mistake in his choice of words, calling TV a great wasteland. A jungle or swamp perhaps, where too many things are happening, but not a wasteland.

"I don't think this sort of policy will create the proper atmosphere for good programming. We, 'we, the civilized few,' should tell them what we want."

What does it mean to say that "I am an artist"?

Grierson: "How many semesters are you available? I guess you could say the pursuit of beauty, that is, you want to bring alive the world of your observations—the world of reality.

"Also there is a sense of public responsibility—duty to your audience, or giving people a sense of being uplifted. There really is no specific answer to that."

How do you answer the charge that television has made us a nation of observers?

Seldes: "We never were a nation of participants.

"However, I do think that the tendency to sit back and watch is being strengthened by TV. There is a tendency to become spectators not only of events but non-events, sheer fakery—not fiction—fakery."

Has the film industry done any films in the past five years that justifies the industry being called an art?

Grierson: "I never go to features any more—I'm getting old and am not a romantic any more.

"'Savage Eye' and 'Jazz on a Summer's Day' both had certain quite moving scenes, especially the handling of Mahalia Jackson and the 'Lord's Prayer.' On the documentary side I have seen some films that I definitely consider to be art."

Deacons Win Error Battle From Tar Heels By 13-8

By ED DUPREE

The ACC baseball opener between Wake Forest and UNC Tuesday was marred by 12 errors, six for each team as the Deacons took a 13-8 victory from the Tar Heels. The loss was the third in a row for Carolina.

Coach Walt Rabb's men took a 6-5 lead in the bottom of the second inning, but a six-run outburst on Wake's part in the top of the third frame iced the win for Jack Stallings' crew.

The first inning was well-played, comparatively speaking. Andy Billesdon walked only two men and hit one Deacon to load the bases. The first run scored on an error by shortstop Jim Speight.

A lead-off home run over the right field fence by P. W. Swing quickly tied the game at 1-1. A throwing error on Wake's third baseman Bob Worrell evened the miscue count at 1-1 also, but the scoring for the opening frame was finished.

The crazy second inning took 30 minutes and when the errors, walks, wild pitches, stolen bases, and courtesy runners were totaled up, UNC had their short-lived 6-5 lead.

The cool afternoon was anything but baseball weather. Billesdon, who had twirled seven shutout innings before faltering in the eighth against VPI, could not find the plate. He walked the first two batters in the second and had a 3-1 count on second baseman Don Nichols when Rabb lifted him for Bobby Cox, another sophomore. Cox loaded the bases on the next pitch, then got Mike Budd to hit into a force play at home.

Cox walked Bill Scripture to force in the go-ahead run for Wake. Roger Coon singled to drive in two more and Bob Worrell drove in the fourth run of the inning on a fielder's choice play.

Wake made three errors in the bottom of the inning to help UNC take the lead. Swing drove in two runs with a singe to right center and Buddy Tilden made it 6-5 with a home run over the left field fence.

Wake scored six in the third as Carolina made two errors. The big blows for the Baptists were Budd's two-run double and a three-run homer by Scripture.

Dave Murr turned in one of the finest pitching performances of the year in relief, but in vain. In seven innings the tall, red-headed co-captain yielded only two hits, two runs, two walks and struck out four. He didn't yield a hit until he faced his twelfth batter in the sixth inning and both runs scored against him were unearned, thanks to two more UNC errors.

Swing was the only Tar Heel to get two hits—he was two for five with three runs batted in. Murr, Tilden, Speight, Len Dellolio, Larry Neal, and Heyward Hull accounted for the remainder of the eight UNC hits.

The Baptists' Scripture and Coon collected two hits each in four times at bat to pace Wake. The Deacs had only seven hits. Wayne Martin was two for five and Budd had the other hit for their total.

Intramural Dept. Needs Officials For Softball Games

The intramural department currently has a big drive on to line up officials for the coming softball season. Organizational and instructional meetings will be held at 4 p.m. today and tomorrow in 301 Woollen for all students interested in officiating.

Attendance at both of these meetings is required. If a person finds he can not attend them, he should see Walter Tuthill in the intramural office. Although experience would be beneficial, it is not necessary. It might also be noted that a student can umpire intramural softball and at the same time play softball for his organization. He will not be scheduled to officiate at the same time as his team is slated to play.

Officials are paid $1.25 per game, with each game lasting one hour. In addition, officials will receive $1.00 for each meeting attended. It is possible for an official to be scheduled for four games in one week, all games being played between 4 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

SOFTBALL ENTRY DEADLINE TODAY

Intramural managers are reminded that today is the deadline for team entries in point-system softball. Play will begin the first of next week.

Today is also the last day for the bowling of quarter-finals matches in the All-Campus Bowling Tournament. Results must be in the intramural office by 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. The semi-finals deadline has been set for next Monday.

Netters Top Harvard, 8-1, For 6th

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

UNC's fine tennis team, slowly rounding into the form that may make it a strong contender for the NCAA title, rode five singles wins and a sweep of the doubles events to an 8-1 victory yesterday over visiting Harvard.

For coach Don Skakle's court tartars, the win was the sixth straight of the spring and second in two days over the crew rfom Cambridge, Mass.

Sophomores George Sokol, Ted Hoehn and John "Bitsy" Harrison all extended their personal unbeaten strings yesterday in the sunny but chilly weather.

Sokol, the stocky blonde from Bryn Mawr, Pa., turned back Paul Sullivan, 6-3, 10-8 in a battle of little men, while Hoehn beat tall Frank Ripley, 8-6, 6-4. The second set of the Sokol-Sullivan duel was possibly the finest display of tennis seen yet this year, as each man showed a devastating package of ground strokes.

Harvard's Ripley, who stopped Keith Stoneman's consecutive win streak at 23 on Monday, put on a fine show as he extended Hoehn to the limit, before succumbing in the two tough straight sets.

Harrison, a native of Richmond, Va., also was extended before stopping Vic Neiderhoffer, 6-4, 3-6, 6-3.

Stoneman, captain of this year's team, came back strong yesterday after his Monday loss. The 6-2 junior from Greenville S. C., playing in the number three position, beat Gary Adelman, 8-6, 6-1.

Charlie Shaffer registered Carolina's fifth singles victory with his easy 6-2, 6-2 decision over the Crimson's John Vinton. Actually, the win was the first on the scoreboard as Shaffer, per usual, was the first off the courts from his match.

Dave Morgan, playing in the sixth slot, was the only Tar Heel to suffer defeat as he dropped a 6-3, 6-4 decision to Bob Inman.

Shaffer and Harrison were the only ones extended in the doubles activity. Paired at number two, Charlie and "Bitsy" beat Niederhoffer and Adelman, 5-7, 6-2, 6-2, while Stoneman and Hoehn stopped Sullivan and Ripley, 7-5, 6-3 and Skol, making his first appearance in the doubles, teamed with Morgan to win 6-2, 9-7.

Army To Draft 6,500 In June

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Defense Department issued a call Tuesday for 6,500 draftees to be inducted into the Army during June.

The quota was 500 above those established for March, April and May. But it was sharply below the 25,000-a-month peak reached during the Berlin crisis last fall.

The June draft will bring to 141,500 total inductions since the start of the military buildup last August. The total draft since September, 1950, will then be 2,744,450.

Be an advertising writer in New York this summer

Talented juniors, here is a chance you will never have again: A summer job creating advertisements for one of the world's largest advertising agencies. A chance to find out—while you are still in college—if you can make the grade in the tough and rewarding business of advertising.

Do you have what it takes to succeed as an advertising writer?

The only way to find out is to try it.

But if you wait until you graduate, you'll find it almost impossible to land a writing job with a good advertising agency. To get a job, you have to have experience. To get experience, you have to have a job.

Now, an easier way to get into advertising.

This summer, one of the largest and most respected advertising agencies is offering jobs as full-fledged advertising copywriters to a few outstanding men who are college juniors.

You work from mid-June until Labor Day in our office in New York.

You start right out writing.

You don't have to carry mail or sharpen pencils—the usual ways to break into advertising. You do get a chance to think up and write advertisements and commercials for nationally known companies in the food, appliance, soap, gasoline and insurance fields.

You learn, not through lectures or training programs, but by actually working with the most capable professionals in the business.

You earn enough to pay transportation costs from your home, live in New York, and still show a profit at the end of the summer (if you're not too big-hearted about snatching all the lunch tabs).

Can you qualify?

Since this is a temporary job, men in their junior year are preferred. If you succeed this summer, you will be offered a permanent job as a copywriter after you graduate.

No, you don't have to be an advertising major.

Some of our best writers majored in English, philosophy, history, political science, classics. Some didn't even go to college. But all of them are gifted with an instinctive understanding of—and respect for—people.

How can you tell if you have the stuff?

Do you love to read? We've yet to meet a good writer who isn't a reader—hungry for new ideas, excited about new ways of expressing them.

Do you love to write? If you have what it takes, you have probably been writing all your life. Right now, you may be writing articles for your college newspaper; scripts for the radio station; letters that get her to say "yes"; poems, plays, or stories just to please yourself.

If this sounds like you—and you like the sound of working in one of New York's great advertising agencies—write for full details on how to apply. Write a letter that shows how well you can write. Mail it by April 15th.

If you are accepted, you will have a summer you'll remember all your life. And if you succeed, you will find yourself with a full-time job which pays the kind of money it takes to get married and in which there is no such thing as a dull day.

Symposium To End Tonight With Address By Reston

The Carolina Symposium will close Thursday night with the final speech by James Reston, Washington Bureau Chief for the New York Times. Reston, whose two sons have both been students at Carolina, will analyze the impact of today's revolutions on the American citizen and the university student.

James B. Reston

Reston was born in Scotland and received part of his elementary education in that country, but he has lived in this country since 1920. A graduate of the journalism department of the University of Illinois, he joined The Times in its London bureau in 1939, where he remained until 1941.

Reston became head of the Washington Bureau for The Times in 1953. In 1944 he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for his news dispatches and interpretative articles on the Dumbarton Oaks Security Conference.

Newsweek has called Reston one of the Washington columnists whom President Kennedy reads every morning. He is almost a legend in Washington for his ability to interpret significant trends of administration policy before they are stated.

One of Reston's colleagues once remarked: "I've discovered how Scotty works. He gets up in the morning and thinks about what he is going to write that day. Next he sits down, writes it, and sends it off to his paper. After that, he goes over to the appropriate Government department and explains what he has written and how he expects them to conform with that day's story."

Presidents are not unaware of Reston's influence. Eisenhower once complained, "Who does Scotty Reston think he is, telling me how to run the country."

Much of Reston's influence comes from his ability to place himself in positions to be able to have exclusive conferences with the men making the news on which he is reporting.

Twentieth Ceutury Will Mark Change In Man

By WILLIAM POWELL

"The twentieth century will mark a major change in man's outlook on reality and life," Dr. Husten Smith said last night.

He was speaking at the fourth sesion of the Carolina Symposium in Memorial Hall.

History, Dr. Smith, said, could be divided into four phases: the Greco-Roman, the Christian outlook, the Modern outlook and a fourth phase into which civilization is now moving.

Dr. Smith said he felt that the 'Modern Outlook" was beginning to slip and that this was evidenced by the fact that modern thinkers are not certain anymore that an order exisits to reality or that there is any way of discovering a definite order to reality by reason.

The two major philosophies of contemporary civilization, Dr. Smith said, were linguistic analysis and Existentialism. They are unlike in every respect except for the fact that both are products of this doubt that there is an order to reality.

Dr. Smith said that psychologists hold disorder to be healthy. He said that he himself feels that some order is essential to human beings. He said that the changing of the old order could be good or bad. Order is wrong if it constricts and the old order was constricting. We are avancing, he said, to a newer and ampler order than that which we had in the past.

Dr. Samuel Kirkwood, professor of biochemistry at the University of Minnesota, speaking on the scientific view concerning spontaneous creation of life said that the main argument against the primordal, spontaneous creation of life was the second part of the law of Thermadynamies. This law, he said, means basically that as water flows down hill, heat flows to cold and energy wil travel from a higher level to a lower level. The law would seem to disprove the idea of the spontaneous generation if life.

Dr. Kirkwood said that scientific research had shown that the composition of the earth at the time of the beginning of life had been different from what it is now, and that it was quite possible that the energy level difference had been different.

Dorm Strength Pushed Lawler To Victory

Strength in the men's dorms was responsible for Mike Lawler's election as student body vice-president Tuesday, while Daily Tar Heel co-editors Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye won on the basis of an overwhelming women's dorm vote.

Lawler led University Party andidate Larry McDevitt 989-606 in the men's dorms. McDevitt carried Town Men's II—Sctuttlebutt by 167-15, and also won Town Men's I and IV.

The total vote was 1533 for Lawler and 1306 for for McDevitt.

Clotfelter and Wrye, who were SP-endorsed, were fairly strong in Cobb and the Lower Quad, but lost the Upper Quad to independent candidate Ernie Stepp. The co-editor candidates led Stepp 817-732 in the men's dorms.

Stepp won Town Men's II 165 to 75. Clotfelter-Wrye carried the Town Women's district 48-27 and split the other Town Men's districts.

Clotfelter-Wrye won Nurses Dorm 141 to 19 for Stepp. They carried the women's dorms by more than 300 votes.

The co-editors totaled a 1543 to 1167 victory.

Students Use National Loans

A total of 1,529 students at the University have borrowed $508,261 under the National Defense Loan Program since its inception in 1959, according to figures released today by Julian D. Mason Jr., Director of Student Financial Aid.

1959-1961

The totals pertain to the period from 1959 to June 30, 1961. During the academic year 1960-61, a total of 797 UNC students borrowed $276,073. The average loan, Dr. Mason says, was $346, to compare with a national average of $470 for the same period.

As of Feb. 28, 1962, 806 UNC students have borrowed $215,536 during this academic year.

One of the most encouraging and significant aspects of the UNC loans, Mason says, is the speed with which the students are repaying the loans. Although repayment provisions provide a ten-year repayment period which only begins one year after graduation, as of June 30, 1961, $22,210 has already been returned.

Museum Head Gives $15,000 For Student Use

Harry T. Davis, director of the North Carolina State Museum in Raleigh, has given $15,000 to UNC to establish scholarships and loans for students from Dare, Carteret, Currituck, Hyde and Pamlico counties, it was announced here today by Chancellor William B. Aycock after approval by the President and the Board of Trustees.

Lands owned by Mr. Davis on Core Banks, N. C. and acquired by the state of North Carolina for public use have brought Mr. Davis the $15,000 which he has turned over to the University for the education of one or more boys and girls who need financial assistance in going to school at Chapel Hill. The UNC Scholarship committee will administer the scholarship selections.

The "Davis Scholarships" are named in honor of Mr. Davis' father and mother, the late Dr. Joshua Judson Davis and Margaret Elizabeth White Davis, and their 12 children.

Harry T. Davis was graduated from the University in 1919 and received the master's degree in 1920. He taught geology at Chapel Hill from 1918 to 1920.

In citing need as a primary criteria in selection of students, Mr. Davis also stated his own experience of leaving high school and working three years prior to entering the University, and removing deficiencies by making up work and removing conditions of admission.

90 Women Urge N-Ban IDC Court

GENEVA (UPI)—Ninety women from the United States, Russia, and eight other nations Wednesday held an unprecedented meeting with top American and Soviet disarmament negotiators and urged them to find agreement and abandon "out of date ideas" on security.

"We have one great concern—our children," their American leader said.

"Strike For Peace"

The women, members of the "Women Strike for Peace" movement, marched through the streets of Geneva to the Palais des Nations, where 17 nations are trying to draft a disarmament treaty under the co-chairmanship of the United States and the Soviet Union.

A United Nations regulation was broken for the first time and the women, most of them mothers or grandmothers, were admitted to the conference building.

Founder

Mrs. Dagmar Wilson of Washington, D. C., founder of the movement and leader of the 51 American women taking part in the march, handed the co-chairmen, Arthur H. Dean of the United States and Valerian A. Zorin of Russia, bundles of petitions containing 50,000 signatures.

They called for a halt to nuclear testing and agreement on "genuine disarmament."

Africa Said Now Emerging

By HARRY DeLUNG

"Africa can no longer be thought of as the dark continent. It is now emerging Africa." This was the sentiment of a trio of experts on Africa as stated by George M. Houser who participated in a discussion about revolutions on that continent yesterday.

Others on the panel were Esukema Udo Oten, a Nigerian journalist, and Tartt Bell, Alabama-born author. All three emphasized the complexity and large-scale of the current revolutions. Mr. Oten approached the present conditions historically by dividing the revolution into three phasis which he said began with the influence of Europeans involved in slave trading.

Nationalistic Sentiments

Oten's approach dealt with the political consolidation of various nationalistic sentiments. This led to discussions about the existence of a power vacuum in Africa. Houser denied that there was a vacuum although he cited the Congo as an exception.

Oten blamed the situation in the Congo on the interference of Belgium, the United States, the Soviet Union, and Great Britain. "If the leaders following the independence from Belgium had been left alone for four months, a stable government would have been established" said the Nigerian.

Congo Settled

He objected to the western conception that Africans were unable to govern themselves and noted that the Congo was more settled than Algeria where France has been unable to establish order.

During the question and answer period, Mr. Bell observed that the diversity among the independent African states had prevented the anti-U. S. coalition in the United Nations which many had feared in this country. He said that the African nations usually dealt with issues individually and that there was no real danger of such a bloc forming.

Racial Problem

The discussion was brought close to home when Mr. Oten cited the great amount of indignation felt in his country about racial discrimination in the South. "Despite the policies in South Africa, racial discrimination does not exisit in most of Africa, and the people are very emotional when they hear of situations like Little Rock."

Changes, Standards Of Living Blamed For Latin Revolutions

By ALEX MACFADYEN

Dr. George I. Blanksten in a lecture on the "Revolutions in Latin America" yesterday, said the basic causes of the Latin American Revolutions are the low standard of living and the rapid changes taking place.

Dr. Blanksten pointed out that an average of 50 per cent of the persons living in the 20 Latin America countries are illiterate and that the health and sanitation conditions are terrible.

Rapid Change

The rate of change taking place in Latin America is tremendous, and it is almost impossible to control a growth rate as such because revolutions encourage rapid change.

Many events take place in Latin America that are considered revolutions by the layman; however as pointed out by Dr. change in the government, so-occur there there must be a cial and economic conditions; therefore many events that are considered revolutions are not revolutions at all.

Better Understanding

Dr. Blanksten stated that an understanding on the part of the North American people would greatly aid in the reduction of the number of revolutions taking place in Latin America. Dr. Blanksten listed three ways in which the United States could aid the Latin American countries: To give aid through edution; the people of the United States should change their opinions in regard to the fact that all Latin American revolutions are similar to the American revolution of 1776; and there should be a closer organization between all the American countries.

84 Red Rebels Are Killed

CAO LANH, South Viet Nam (UPI)Three thousand South Vietnamese troops Wednesday completed a three-day sweep against Communist rebels in this area 100 miles southwest of Saigon. They killed 84 rebels in one of the biggest actions in the seven-year guerrilla war.

But the air-supported troops of the South Vietnamese 7th infantry division failed to force the Viet Cong rebels into a decisive battle, and the operation thus fell short of government expectations.

Eighty of the rebels were killed in one air strike Monday night. The government troops had surrounded a group of Viet Cong rebels at twilight. Planes were called in to prevent the rebels from escaping during the night.

Discriminatory Clauses

Periodically over the past 15 years or so, the question of fraternity discriminatory clauses has popped up in the editorial and letters columns of this newspaper, as well as in fraternity conferences, chapter rooms and elsewhere.

Each time the question has arisen, the pattern of discussion has been roughly the same. The same tired arguments for fraternity discrimination have been reiterated scores of times. Basically, the argument is this: Fraternity men have the right to choose their associates, and to choose them according to whatever they deem valid, whether it be skin color, religious affiliation or national origin.

This is wholly true. The right to associate, or not associate with whomever one chooses is a freedom as basic as any other. If the basis for such choosing is racial or religious, this is unfortunate. It is nonetheless a right that should be protected.

It is for this reason, as much as for any other, that inflexible written discriminatory clauses should be eliminated. They do not protect the right to free choice of associates, they deny it. A house with a written bar against Jews, for instance, is unable to pledge a Jew no matter how each member may desire to do so.

Naturally, most houses are too busy defending their clauses to realize this, and scream like hell about their rights every time someone suggests that the clauses be stricken. Floundering around in their own shortsightedness, they succeed in defending the very thing that denies them the freedom they claim to cherish.

The IFC, the organization which should furnish the moral leadership and courage necessary to change this situation, quite naturally chooses to ignore it. Not to do so might mean the body had courage. And God forbid that anyone get that idea.

The administration, meanwhile, also chooses to look the other way —even though it certainly has no compunction in looking closely at other fraternity situations. Sometimes we're not sure who has less interest in eliminating overt indications of racial and religious bias, the IFC or the administration. Neither is doing anything about it.

The responsibility should be the IFC's. But since that body has time and again chosen to avoid the issue, perhaps it is time for the administration to show its concern. If it has any.

Students See Need

Southern college students are far ahead of most of their elders in perceiving the justice and need of offering better educational opportunity to Negroes.

Unofficial polls at six colleges in the South indicated that a majority of the white students participating were in favor of admitting scholastically qualified Negro students to their schools.

Vanderbilt University was the only one of the six where the vote went the other way. A majority of those polled at Furman, Davidson, Southern Methodist, Rice and Baylor were in favor of removing racial barriers in higher education.

A student of intellectual promise should have the benefit of the best education possible, regardless of race. This question was long ago resolved by the United States Supreme Court in litigation involving state graduate schools. It should be resolved at the undergraduate level in both state universities and private or church-related institutions.

The president of Fayetteville State Teachers College for Negroes stated not long ago, "We not only take in illiterates, we graduate illiterates."

This is a school preparing Negro students to teach others of their race, so it is—in the words of Dr. William Archie of the State Board of Higher Education — "a vicious circle."

Many Negro students are inadequately prepared for college by public schools. They go on to attend poorly financed and staffed teachers colleges. Then they are sent out to minister to the educational needs of others of their race.

White college students in the South recognize the injustice that is done the promising Negro student when doors to the best educational institutions are closed to him.

Why should the intellectually gifted, the faithful student, the hard worker be denied the best teachers, the best facilities and the best atmosphere for learning simply because of his color?

With the rigid admission standards now being used at quality colleges, there would not be such a flood of Negro students that social problems would be of great consequence.

The time has come to recognize the individual Negro student for what he is and what he can become, rather than judging him on the ability of the least promising member of his race.

Realism, Peace And Disarmament

Last week the foreign ministers of the leading nations of the world met in Geneva with the intent of bringing into reality an ancient dream—PEACE. The chances for success were, as we all knew, negligible. Even the possibility of an agreement on the atmospheric testing of nuclear devices seems unlikely to result from the ensuing disarmament discussions.

If the situation looks so very pessimistic, then we might do well to consider momentarily why there are such conferences. Possibly the best reason for their existence is simply that they are expected. At first glance this reason may sound absurd. Is it? The masses of the world have to be convinced that their governments desire peace. Almost without doubt, neither Kennedy, Macmillan or Khrushchev had any high expectations of their representatives obtaining a mutually agreeable solution. The fact that the conferences occur doe show that the governments want to give the people hope. Hope of what? It is a hope that their governments desire and are striving for that beautiful, illusive, intangible, and unrealistic panacea—PEACE.

Theoretically, governments rule by the will of the people and they must be obedient unto the most fervent desires of the ruled. (The fact that in many cases, generally Communist, the governments are not elected in the Western sense of the word is irrelevant. The governments claim to be the people's governments and they do a satisfactory job of convincing the people that this is true. Only two Communist governments have been "voted" out of office. These elections occured in the miniscule Italian Republic of San Marino and the small Southwest Indian state of Kerala. Western standards are not always good criteria by which to judge foreign governments.

Ideal Lifts People To Higher Strata

The people (in the sense of the masses of the population) are not realistic. They can not afford to be realists and the governments can not permit it. Would it not be a pessimistic world for a nation of realists devoid of any hope of realizing peace, prosperity, and happiness in the near future? Government would be continually frustrated when subjected to the continual and unmerciful close scrutiny of the people who would have "good government" as their ultimate objective and most exalted ideal. The ultimate ideal which existant governments have given to the people of the world is the concept of World Peace. This ideal lifts the attention of the people to a strata above domestic problems including national security, national interests, and national governmental policies.

Universal stability and peace are unknown in history. There have always been wars and quarrels. History can be viewed as a chronology of the causes and results of wars and conflicts. Pharaonic Egypt, Ancient Greece, Imperial Rome, Persian Empires, Imperial China, African tribes, American Indians, Huns, Mongols, Mogul India, Arabs, Czarist Russia, Protestant England, Catholic Spain, Communists, and Capitalists all have one common thing in their histories—War.

Neither religion nor diplomacy have brought permanent peace to the world. The terms Holy War, Crusades, Inquisition, Wars of Religion, and Zionism remind us of religion's failure. Westphalia 1648, Utrecht 1713, Vienna 1815, Versailles 1918, and Geneva remind us of diplomacy's failure to establish a universal and enforcible permanent peace. The disastrous results of inefficient and nearsighted diplomacy are brought home to the Western World most painfully with the mention of the names Yalta, Tehran, and Potsdam, despite the fact that peace was the ultimate aim in these instances.

Disarmament Not Realistic Hope

Ideological, national, and personal rivalries, antipathies, conflicts and competition will have to be eliminated before peace can come to the world. Universal, unvarying, enforceable obedience to an absolute authority, possibly some sort of a world government, would probably be necessary. This is a vague dream far removed from the 1960's.

Nations and men, like all things in nature, complete with each other in the battle for the survival of the fittest. This situation will not end abruptly. Human nature, as it is today with its temperament, pride, egocentricism, frailties, and subtleties, does not lend itself to a universal and perpetually harmonious state of affairs.

A major step toward a universal peace is obviously nuclear disarmament. It would be ideal if everyone were to voluntarily abstain from testing, but this is not a very realistic hope. As long as one nation fears another nation, there will be desire for bigger and better, if not equal, weapons. Unhappily this situation is a shocking parallel to the pre-World War I armaments race and the construction of the Dreadnoughts. The results of this kind of futility do not have to be belabored. The deadly threat which nuclear explosions pose to humanity needs no exemplification and it is this realization which contains the greatest impetus for a solution to the problem. The only feasible solution is not probable. Basically it consists of immediate cessation of all tests, destruction of nuclear stockpiles, a complete and efficient inspection system, and no passing of nuclear arms on to presently non-nuclear powers. The probability for mutual acceptance of such a plan is almost nil until nations learn to trust one another.

Despite the futility of idealistic plans, the peace conferences will continue. At least they give the opposing camps the opportunity to accuse each other of balking at peace plans and disarmament agreements. Each government attempts to convince its people that its own plans are right and that the plans of the other nations are wrong, unfair, or impractical. (Vanity prohibits acceptance of another nation's plan in open conferences.)

Meanwhile the world's populace will watch Geneva with a faint hope, recoiling as discourtesies are levelled across the conference table, and watching with mounting trepidation as the opposing camps pull out each other's "dirty linen," including subjects like Berlin, Cuba, Hungary, Southeast Asia and Tibet. At every conference unpleasant items are always flaunted in the face of a world wistfully dreaming of that great unobtainable and elusive panacea—PEACE. And even if it is obtained, will it solve all our problems?

"Hello—ORwell 1984?"

'Fusser' Cited, Picture Protested

To The Editor:

To those who are concerned with my signature on the endorsement letter of Clotfelter and Wrye in the Daily Tar Heel of March 27 which, as it appeared unauthorized in the paper, was as President of the YRC, I would like to describe the circumstances which led to this mistake of affixing my position, denoting official sanction falsely. Believing that the DTH deserves more imaginative leadership than Earnest Stepp presents, I signed Clotfelter and Wrye's letter, even though I hold significant areas of disagreement with Clotfelter's political views, the letter having been proffered at a point when Mike Mathers was not a candidate. Although this was done as an individual, for which I am most willing to take responsibility and argue on those grounds, I most certainly did not sign it in my capacity as a YR officer, and although this appeared to be a political move by the candidates to gain conservative support, this is in no way attributable to my signature, because of its mislabelling, nor, I believe, to anyone at the DTH except through inadvertance. I had explicitly instructed that my signature was not as YR officer, and the addition of this was done only in the normal course of makeup of the editorial page.

I see the possibility of misunderstanding the fact of my signature on the letter as it was mistakenly inserted, but I am not amenable to some critics who contend that a candidate for DTH editor must mirror exactly one's own political views to receive support. The above paragraphs are a condensation of a longer statement (available for any interested), but this should be sufficient to convey the substance of my position.

To The Editor:

A gross misrepresentation of facts was disclosed in the D.T.H. on Tuesday, April 3, 1962. "Hot Scoop" headlines announced that the social room of Aycock Dormitory was damaged by "beer drinkers." The damage of "the greatest magnitude that has happened this year" was the demolition of one wicker chair and beer cans on the floor.

The wicker chair—please not that this is not plural—has previously been without a seat for at least a week. The furniture was disarranged —perhaps, just perhaps, to facilitate the observation of a corner T.V. in a rectangular room. Along with the beer cans on the floor were numerous paper cups which added to the "destruction."

The arms of the chairs which were "maliciously" cut had been in such condition for quite a while. A bag of lime and concrete had been deposited on the steps. There is no reasonable belief that these materials were thrown from the third floor window. It may be noted that these two bags were left on Friday at the east end of the dormitory within easy view of all passersby. Anyone could have dragged these bags to the steps. It has been revealed that the bag was already broken on Saturday afternoon.

We, the members of Aycock Dormitory, can almost conceive that the administration cannot condone drinking in the dormitories. However, is it possible that one dormitory may be "set up" as an example for others to fear.

In conclusion, we may point out, that the broken chair, several beer cans, and the trash can were rearranged for the picture of the "malicious" destruction which depicted the condition of Aycock's social room.

—Hunter Vaughan, President
—Donald Schuor, IDC Representative

Note: The above letter was signed by 31 additional Aycock residents.

* * * *

It is implied in the above letter that I took all the trash from the social room of Aycock Dormitory and piled it in one corner in order to get a "hot scoop" photograph. This is not true. The trash can and chair were moved not over a few feet in order to move them from the edge of the photo, WHERE THEY ALREADY WERE.

I have had at least one resident of Aycock tell me that the photo made the room look better than it was. I might point out that I could have as easily shot any other corner of the room and would have had the same effect.

Beer cans were piled in every corner and the fireplace was filled. The entire room, which could have been shown, was a disgrace to the image of the "Carolina Gentleman."

About Letters

The Daily Tar Heel invites readers to use it for expressions of opinion on current topics regardless of viewpoint. Letters must be signed, contain a verifiable address, and be free of libelous material.

Brevity and legibility increase the chance of publication. Lengthy letters may be edited or omitted. Absolutely none will be returned.

To the Editor:

We of the Campus Chest, as with many of the organizations on campus, have found that it is impossible to present not only the charitable projects which we support, but also the various activities which we used to raise funds, without the full and complete support of the Daily Tar Heel. This year we found the Tar Heel not only co-operative, but also a very resourceful news medium.

This year's Campus Chest Drive we consider to have been extremely successful in that we nearly doubled the gross intake of recent years, grossing in exess of five thousand dollars. We feel that a large measure of success can be attributed to the help given us by Wayne King and his staff. We would like to recommend that those people who complain about not being able to work through the Tar Heel might try to work with them and in this way gain the support which we received.

In particular we would like to thank Wayne King, Bill Waumett, Jim Wallace, and Harry Lloyd, for the help they have given us.

As I sit down to write this letter, I hope I can control myself, and keep from bursting out laughing. I have just finished reading Mrs. Otelia Conner's letter of the 28th. It is undoubtedly the funniest thing ever printed in the DTH. However, I would like to say that I think it is very commendable of Mrs. Conned that she has taken upon herself the huge task of bringing "manners" to the campus.

I can understand why Mrs. Conner gets angry when someone places an empty tray on her table, but surely she can see that if everyone who was the recipient of this "vile" action jacked somebody up and headed them off, Lenoir Hall would be in a constant turmoil. As for people removing chairs from her table "without a by-your-leave," it's fairly evident that a demure lady like Mrs. Conner can't possibly sit in all four chairs at once, and that she doesn't own them to start with.

Mrs. Conner mentioned the student who kept touching her feet in the library. I assure you, Mrs. Conner, that the guilty party has been suspended from the University. It's really a shame that ladies can't spend a quiet evening in the library without being assaulted!! Maybe the student who bumped Mrs. Conner's chair with his, and then didn't apologize, was only maintaining silence in the library. Or perhaps he just wasn't fast enough to beat Mrs. Conner to the draw before she bumped him on his back with her fist. (I understand that legal action has been brought against the student for hitting poor Mrs. Conner on the fist with his back.)

Mrs. Conner said that she intends to see that UNC students have manners when they leave here, but at the rate she's running them away now, she'll never make it.

I haven't been able to figure Mrs. Conner out yet. Either she has a persecution complex, (it does appear that everyone singles her out to pick on), or else she is just a habitual fusser. It's beyond me!!

This grant will provide for the development of graduate, undergraduate and extension courses for public health, medical, dental and other groups of professional health workers.

Emphasis On Accidents

At the graduate level, the Department of Public Health Administration will enroll a limited number of qualified students in the master of public health degree programs. This will enable these students to place particular emphasis on accidents and health during their program of study.

Extension courses, refresher courses, seminars and conferences will be organized for public health personnel and other individuals now employed in community agencies who desire a greater understanding concerning accidents. Accidents are one of the more prominent causes of death, injury and crippling in the United States today.

Personnel connected with this new project will be available to assist in the development of appropriate safety seminars, case studies, and other activities of this nature for the various groups of professional students and practitioners.

The guests will participate with members of the War College's senior officer student body and with government representatives in studying and discussing problems pertaining to national security in the future.

First Picked From UNC

Why Does Easter Arrive So Late?

Why is Easter so late this year? It doesn't arrive till April.

Richard S. Dodson Jr., narrator and advisor on the Morehead Planetarium staff here, says he has a "tremendous simplified" answer.

It has to do with the actual date of March 21 and not altogether with the vernal equinox, or the beginning of spring.

Dodson's explanation in words laymen can understand will be in the script of "Easter, the Awakening," which will open at the Morehead Panetarium here Tuesday night, March 27.

Easter Formula

The rule for the occurance of Easter, as generally and loosely stated is this: "Easter comes on the first Sunday after the full moon that occurs on or after March 21. If this full moon comes on a Sunday, then Easter is the next ensuing Sunday."

"Sometimes this rule is stated," Dodson stated, using Vernal Equinox instead of March 21. March 21 is correct, and dates from the fact that at the time of the Council of Nicea, when the rule was made by the Church Fathers, the equinox did occur on March 21, and it apparently did not occur to them that it would shift a little from year to year. Even today the date of the Vernal Equinox is usually given as March 21, although it often occurs on March 20.

The Full Moon referred to is, in the official version, the Paschal Full Moon. This latter may differ from the astronomical (or real) full moon because it comes, by definition, on the 14th day of the moon—that is, the day 14 days after the New Moon.

Universal Time

"The time on which these things are based is Universal Time, and this is in turn is based on the time at the zero meridian at Greenwich, England. Eastern Standard Time is five hours behind this.

"The Moon was new this year on March 6, at 5:31 a.m., Eastern Standard Time, which was 10:31 a.m. at Greenwich. The 14th day after this was March 20, the date of the Paschal Full Moon.

"Astronomically, the Moon is Full the following day, March 21, but this real Full Moon is not used in calculating the date of Easter, because as pointed out above the Paschal Full Moon must be used.

UNC Geographer Eyre Attending Malayan Meet

John Douglas Eyre, associate professor of geography at UNC, is one of 12 American delegates attending the Regional Conference of Southeastern Asian Geographers, in Qualalumpar, Malaya, this week.

Eyre, who joined the UNC faculty in 1957, is attending the conference via a grant from the Social Science Research Council of America. The conference will last two weeks.

While in Malaya, Dr. Eyre and other geographers will go on field trips and study problems of urbanization. City and Regional Planning experts are also attending the conference. Prof. Eyre will also present a paper on "Growth Characteristics of Tokyo," Tokyo being a city which he has visted several times and studied extensively.

Eyre received his Ph.D. in 1951 from the University of Michigan and is a member of the American Geographical Society, the Association of American Geographers, and the Association for Asian Studies. Human geography of Japan and Eastern Asia are his research and teaching specialties.

Grant Is Received For Negro Study

The Institute for Research in Social Science has received a new grant of $44,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation for the continuation of a study on Negro political participation in the South. Professors Donald R. Matthews and James W. Prothro of the Political Science Department are the directors of the study. This study is one part of a larger Institute research program on the changing position of the Negro.

The changing political position of the southern Negro is one of the most important events of our times. Two federal civil rights acts have been passed, both aimed at giving the Negro access to the polls. As a result of these developments, there has been an increase in Negro voting, a sudden growth in Negro power especially in the cities, the rise of Negro political organizations, the occasional election of Negroes to city councils and school boards, and new campaign and decision-making problems for white leaders.

Which Negroes Vote?

It is upon this aspect of our recent history that the research study is focussed. Which Negroes vote and which Negroes do not vote? What about the other forms of political participation such as joining political organizations, taking part in demonstrations and communicating with public officials? These and other questions are typical of those the study hopes to help answer.

Since the beginning of the story in 1959, the largest body of data on Negro political behavior ever assembled has been collected. The data were collected in the former Confederate states and cover four areas: large-scale analysis of Negro registration figures, an opinion survey of 1,000 adult Negroes and 1,000 adult whites, interviews of 275 Negro students in 30 schools and depth interviews with community leaders in four different types of communities.

Completion In 1964

The additional funds received from the Rockefeller Foundation will allow completion of the study by 1964 and will be used for completion of data analysis, publication of findings, and training activities designed to develop interest and competence in this field. The training activities will include research fellowships for political scientists and a summer workshop for political scientists and political sociologists.

Be an advertising writer in New York this summer

Talented juniors, here is a chance you will never have again: A summer job creating advertisements for one of the world's largest advertising agencies. A chance to find out—while you are still in college—if you can make the grade in the tough and rewarding business of advertising.

Do you have what it takes to succeed as an advertising writer?

The only way to find out is to try it.

But if you wait until you graduate, you'll find it almost impossible to land a writing job with a good advertising agency. To get a job, you have to have experience. To get experience, you have to have a job.

Now, an easier way to get into advertising.

This summer, one of the largest and most respected advertising agencies is offering jobs as full-fledged advertising copywriters to a few outstanding men who are college juniors.

You work from mid-June until Labor Day in our office in New York.

You start right out writing.

You don't have to carry mail or sharpen pencils—the usual ways to break into advertising. You do get a chance to think up and write advertisements and commercials for nationally known companies in the food, appliance, soap, gasoline and insurance fields.

You learn, not through lectures or training programs, but by actually working with the most capable professionals in the business.

You earn enough to pay transportation costs from your home, live in New York, and still show a profit at the end of the summer (if you're not too big-hearted about snatching all the lunch tabs).

Can you qualify?

Since this is a temporary job, men in their junior year are preferred. If you succeed this summer, you will be offered a permanent job as a copywriter after you graduate.

No, you don't have to be an advertising major.

Some of our best writers majored in English, philosophy, history, political science, classics. Some didn't even go to college. But all of them are gifted with an instinctive understanding of—and respect for—people.

How can you tell if you have the stuff?

Do you love to read? We've yet to meet a good writer who isn't a reader—hungry for new ideas, excited about new ways of expressing them.

Do you love to write? If you have what it takes, you have probably been writing all your life. Right now, you may be writing articles for your college newspaper; scripts for the radio station; letters that get her to say "yes"; poems, plays, or stories just to please yourself.

If this sounds like you—and you like the sound of working in one of New York's great advertising agencies—write for full details on how to apply. Write a letter that shows how well you can write. Mail it by April 15th.

If you are accepted, you will have a summer you'll remember all your life. And if you succeed, you will find yourself with a full-time job which pays the kind of money it takes to get married and in which there is no such thing as a dull day.

Netters Stomp Williams, 8-1

By LOUIS LEGUM

The North Carolina tennis team wasn't much of a courteous host to its last visitors from the cold Northeast as the Tar Heels coldheartedly did away with unsuspecting Williams yesterday, 8-1.

Coach Don Skakle's netter came out on the better side of all but two sets, both of these sets marking Williams' only point of the match. Today at 2:00 the two teams will meet again to get a second look at one another.

The Ephmen from Massachusetts started the afternoon with an aggressive determination that surprised Carolina. Rushing the net at every opportunity, Williams put on a colorful show for the sunglassed stands. However, the undefeated Tar Heels were quick to recover their poise and put away their seventh victory of the season and nineteenth over a two-year period.

On the first court, George Sokol used his crips ground strokes to defeat John Botts, 6-3, 6-4. Botts, who played very well, was not consistent enough to overcome Sokol's slashing baseline attack.

Ted Hoehn, blooping lob shots and effectively punching his vollies from the net, also ran through Ned Shaw in straight sets, 6-2, 7-5. Against Harvard, Captain Keith Stoneman had his win streak broken, and he viciously took it out on Williams' Bob Mahland by winning 6-4, 6-0 in a matter of minutes.

Bitsy Harrison was in an unusual hurry to get off the courts, too, as he used his big serve at the right times to win over Brooks Goddard, 6-4 ,6-2. Continuing to sharpen his game, Charlie Shaffer won a battle of the net against Frank Thayer by a 6-4, 6-2 score.

Employing his fourth different man at number six, Coach Skakle finally saw this position become victorious. Garland Carlton, who was undefeated in six matches last year, extended his uninterrupted streak by prevailing 6-3, 7-5 over Bruce Birgbauer.

The one and three doubles were very quickly played. While an old high school pairing, Dave Morgan and Stan Cocke, dispensed with Thayer and Birgbauer 6-0, 6-1. The number two doubles, though, belonged to Williams as Shaw and Mahland stormed from behind to defeat Sokol and Shaffer in a very long-winded affair, 2-6, 7-5, 9-7.

UNC-Delaware Play Baseball

Still looking for their first home win, Coach Walt Rabb's baseball Tar Heels play host to Delaware this afternoon at 3 in Emerson Stadium.

After winning two and losing one game on their trip to Florida the UNC nine returned to Chapel Hill and hasn't posted a victory since. They fell to Yale, 9-6, and Va., 4-3, last week and dropped the ACC opener to Wake Forest, 13-8, Tuesday.

Delaware, the champions of the Middle Atlantic Conference, won 17 and lost eight in 1961, but lost Bob Gates, their ace pitcher. Coach Tubby Raymond always comes up with a strong team, though.

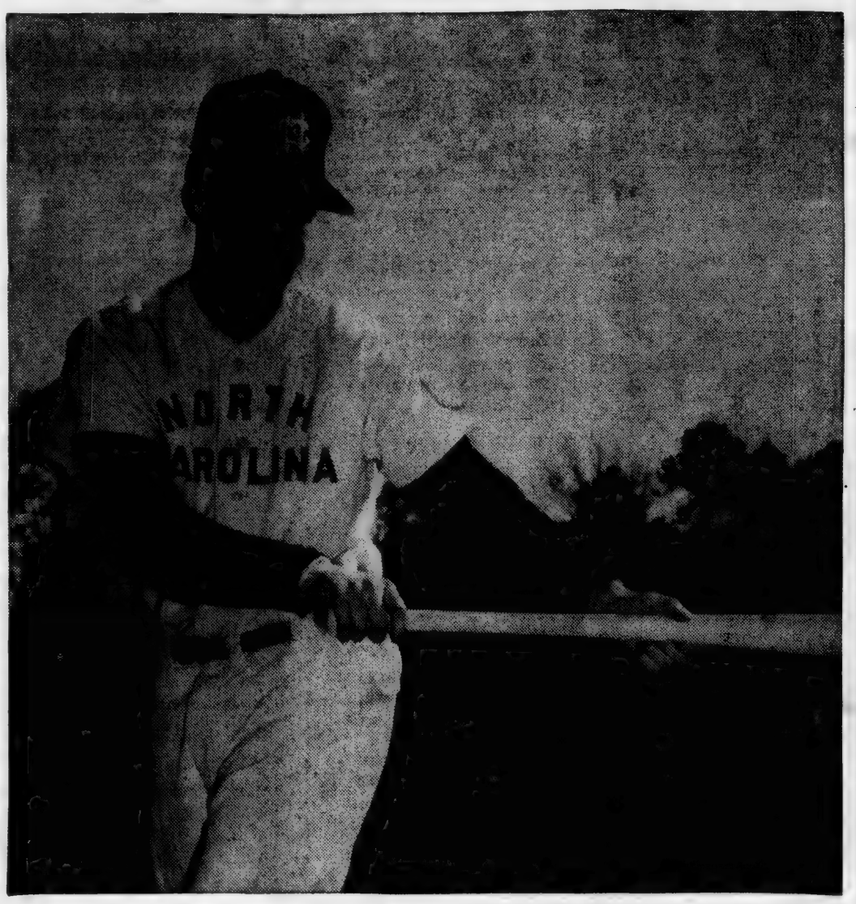
Buddy Tilden continues to pace the Tar Heel hitting attack with a .339 mark. Also above the .300 mark are Larry Neal, .333, Heyward Hull, .318, and P. W. Swing, .308. Jim Speight is .286 and Len Dellolio, .273.

Hitting has not been the Tar Heel problem—they've had 29 hits in their three home losses.

Pitching and fielding have been the thorns in Rabb's side. Only Dave Murr has turned in a creditable pitching performance in the three games—a two-hit, two-run, relief job against Wake Forest. Andy Billesdon looked good for seven innings before getting bombed against VPI and Bobby Cox has sparkled at times in three straight relief chores.

The Tar Heels made six errors against Wake Forest, but were not alone. The victorious Deacs also mishandled the baseball six times, so the opening conference game was far from a glittering exhibition of the hardball game.

Daily Tar Heel Athlete Of The Week



PAUL SWING

By ED DUPREE

The early season road has been rocky for Coach Walt Rabb's baseball players, especially at home, but one of the baseball Tar Heels stood out for a one-game batting performance last week which will be difficult for anyone to top this season.

Paul "P. W." Swing, a second team All-Conference infielder in 1961, was a thorn in the side of Yale pitchers Bob Kelly and Tom Petke, collecting four hits in five trips to the plate. The Ivy Leaguers won 9-6, but P. W. becomes the Daily Tar Heel's eighth Athlete of the Week for his hitting against the Bulldogs.

The 5-11 second sacker who originally hails from Hickory, but now calls Chapel Hill his home hit one to deep center in the fifth inning that could easily have been a triple with his speed, except that it bounced over the fence for a ground rule double. It also deprived him of an RBI, since Wendell Brande was on first base. A single by Buddy Tilden scored both runners.

With two men already out, Swing singled in the sixth to right center, stole second, and advanced to third on a wild pitch. Again he was stranded at third base.

In the eighth inning against reliever Petke, he singled to center and went to second on the center fielder's error. Jim Speight's sacrifice fly helped him score his second run of the contest.

His .800 afternoon pulled him out of the slump he had been in on the Florida trip. Against Florida twice, and Georgia Southern he garnered only one hit in 11 at bats. After the Yale game he stood .313 with five for 16.

This put him in the category where the good pro prospect belongs. He was .319 last year for the second highest mark on the club.

P. W. finished the week with a 1-5 day against VPI to pull his mark down to .286, but there are plenty of contests left in the season and the "Dabber" is a good bet to be near the top when the ACC race is over.

One of the most valuable leadoff batters in the conference, an unorthodox fielder with exeptionally good speed and reactions, a fine baserunner, a good competitor, and a strong long-ball hitter despite his size, P. W. would be an asset to any ball club.

Monogram Club Completes Alumni Plans Tonight

The Monogram Club will hold its weekly meeting tonight at 7:30 in the Club Room of Woollen Gym. All members are urged to attend.

Final preparations for Saturday's Alumni-Varsity football game will be made and it will be the last chance for members to pick up tickets for the game. Also on tap is the voting for the queen.

The Alumni-Varsity game, sponsored solely by the Monogram Club, will bring some of the greatest football players ever to wear a UNC uniform to Chapel Hill—Jack Cummings, Charlie Justice, Al Goldstein, Rip Hawkins, Ronnie Koes, Andy Miketa, Larry Parker, Frank Riggs, Art Weiner, Ed Sutton and a host of others.

This season's seniors will bolster the Alumni lineup—among them will be Bob Elliot, Ray Farris, Jim LeCompte, Joe Davis, Jim Shumate, and a number of other 1961 footballers.

Tar Heel Golfers Host Ohio Today

By Curry Kirkpatrick

North Carolina's golf team tries for victory number five this afternoon when the Tar Heels entertain Ohio University, at 1:30 on Finley Golf Course.

Coach Ed Kenney's linksmen, after opening the season with a second-place finish in the Florida Invitational Tourney, have since, won four and lost one in their dual meet competition.

The Tar Heels blitzed Dartmouth twice, Michigan State, and Princeton before falling to defending national champion Purdue, 21½-14½ in their last outing.

Blond All-American Pete Green, senior captain from Franklin, Mich., leads Carolina into today's action. Green, along with Greensboro senior George Murphy, has yet to be beaten in the five individual clashes. Mebane junior Jay Harris has tied once while winning his other four matches to join the elite unbeaten group.

Other golfers expected to see action today are senior John Brabson and sophomores Abe Andes, Jere Ayers, Mike Dore, Harvie Hill, Sam McNairy, and Tom Gardner.

In the Bobcats from Athens, Ohio, Kenney's linksmen will be facing a team which has won five straight Mid-American Conference titles and 11 in 12 years. Currently on its southern tour, Ohio U. was soundly beaten by tough Wake Forest on Tuesday.

The top Bobcat golfers are Jerry Mollencop, Don Howells, Bill

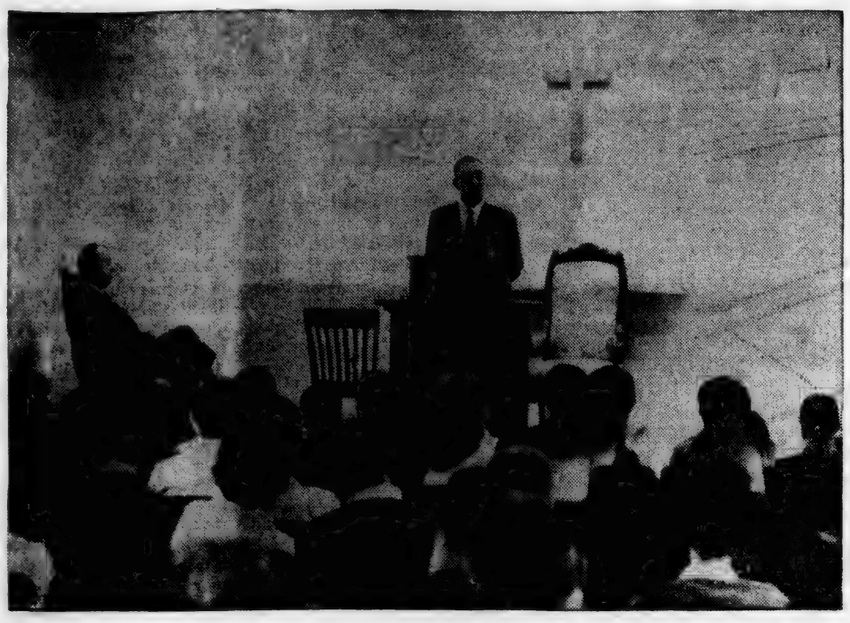
Reston: Individual Can Meet Revolutions Today

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★



Roger Hazelton

Richard Harkness

By LLOYD LITTLE

James Reston last night said problems produced by today's revolutions can be acted upon by the individual through honest discussions based on facts.

The Washington Bureau Chief for the New York Times said one of the things "that needs to be revolutionized is the press of our country. The reason is that the press has transferred the techniques of the county court house and small town to the world political situation.

"This has distorted the picture of the world. In effect this has given the country a feeling of hopelessness and endlessness about the world situation. I don't believe this is true."

The press and the individual, said Reston, must gain a perspective of our times.

Domestic Revolutions

On the domestic scene, he pointed out revolutions in industry moving south and west, in science and automation resulting in the problem of joblessness, and in our economy with the problem of higher taxes.

"These questions all indicate the kind of problems these new revolutions are bringing."

He spoke of revolutions overseas such as half the people of the world have changed the form of government in the last 60 years and 800 million have achieved self-government.

"The old empires, once the keepers of order in the world, have collapsed and the decisive powers have moved from western Europe to American and the Soviet Union, the least experienced nations, and recently the sleeping giant of China—and to what effect and what end, I don't know."

"The impact of all these revolutions is perfectly staggering. I think it's one of the great failings of this administration in not making these changes and the need for them perfectly clear," said Reston.

Not The Only Power

"One of my great problems today comes from the glories of the 18th and 19th century when we could say, 'By God, we can do anything we want to.'"

"The difficulty of foreign affairs is that they are foreign."

One result of these revolutions, especially in mass communications, is the tendency to "move the people off the land to the great depersonalized, selfish urban areas," Reston said.

"I don't believe this is a hopeless situation. I rather glory in the fact that no generation until this one has had the impertinence to take on so many revolutions at once. I like that, it's rather cheeky."

What Is The Answer?

"The answer to this is not to give up or say 'I'll leave it to Kennedy or somebody else' — I think the answer is not less democracy but more democracy and honest discussion, such as this Symposium."

In the question and answer period following:

Why won't there be a third world war?

Reston: "I work on the assumption that the Russians want to live as much as we. Also never have two such great antagonistic nations sustained for such a long length of time with so many incidents."

"The war we are going to have is the war we are having now. And this is what is so hard to understand."

What can a college student do for his country?

Reston: "One thing, look ahead and see what you can about your generation: the getting and making and saving of money will be less fruitful because of higher taxes."

"The frontier today is stretching acorss the whole world and it is not only physical but intellectual and spiritual and I thought you would be happier and more useful if you leaped into it."

Mission Concept Changing

"I found myself in a corridor asking a man, what does it feel like to be a Korean Southern Baptist," Dr. Roger Hazelton told afternoon Symposium audiences in Gerrard Hall yesterday.

Dr. Hazelton who is Dean of the Oberlin College Graduate School of Theology, said that there was more of a devolution than a revolution in religion today. He said that this could be seen in the two major fields of religion: denomination and mission work.

He said that the entire concept of missions was changing. The church is losing a lot of its old colonialist bent and is beginning to treat some of the Asiatic and African churches more as equals than as inferiors. "There are some forms of obedience in the younger churches," Dr. Hazelton said, "which put some of our churches to shame."

Pewless Church

Dr. Hazelton said that an example of this change was a small church in India. The inhabitants of the town where the church was built had constructed the church out of stone and had put everything in it from the altar down to the pews.

Recently, amidst a great deal of protest the pews were removed. The removal of the pews, Dr. Hazelton said, made the church into more of a Christian church than it had been before, because the people who were not accustomed to sitting in chairs and who did not like to sit in chairs had begun to worship in their own way instead of in the way of the Westerners.

In the field of denominations, Dr. Hazelton said the change is coming slowly towards a more unified church. Denominations, he said, as we know them, are peculiar to the United States.

In a recent meeting of church representatives of most of the protestant faiths in New Delhi, the representatives quickly ceased to be representatives of any one particular denomination and became representatives of the Christian church in their particular countries.

Dr. Hazelton said that partly because of the mobility of the population of the United States, denominations in the United States were getting closer and closer to a central norm in most of their major ideas and concepts.

Television's Growing Effect

By Harry Delung

Television's growing effect on politics, education, and international relations was emphasized by Richard Harkness, news commentator for the National Broadcasting Company, who spoke here yesterday.

Political

In noting the vastness of television's potential, Harkness sighted a recent national poll which indicated that the public places more faith in what they see on the screen than any other news media. Although the NBC commentator said that he preferred to depend on journalists for news interpretation, he pointed out the revolutionary effect television is having by bringing current events into the home. "People can see what is happening, and 'seeing is believing'."

He stressed the important changes that "electronic journalism" brought to national politics in 1960. In referring to the publicity that television gave the latest presidential campaign, Harkness spoke of the media as "a contribution to democracy."

Joseph McCarthy

Television's part in publicizing the late Senator Joseph McCarthy sighted as one of the most effective methods of exposing the controversial senator's methods to the public. Harkness, who said that the press had given McCarthy the headlines he wanted, recalled the televising of an army inquiry which "needed no editorial comment to arouse the public about McCarthy."

The achievements of television in education served as a basis for the broadcaster's optimism about teaching literacy to ignorant masses throughout the world. He noted such a proposal for Haiti which, like many Carribean islands, may be fertile ground for Communists while numbers can neither read nor write.

Impressions

Particular concern was voiced about the impressions which people in other countries get from watching American-made television programs. Harkness, whose humor delighted the audience, recalled the incident of a Nigerian who, after seeing many TV westerns, wondered why Americans still rode horses and apparently had no automobiles.

When asked during the question and answer period whether he thought that television was "corrupting" American youth, Harkness replied that the fault might lie with parents "who use television as a baby sitter." One of his sons, Peter, is a freshman at Carolina.

Ralph Bunche Speaks Here On Tuesday

Ralph Bunche, Under-Secretary of the United Nations for special Affairs, will deliver a lecture in Memorial Hall Tuesday night under the sponsorship of the Carolina Forum.

Dr. Bunche's talk will relate to the general state of World affairs and what the United Nations is striving to do about it, with particular stress on Arica. The title of his talk will be "The United Nations and Peace in Africa."

Lecture At 8

His lecture will begin at 8:00 in Memorial Hall and at its completion questions will be allowed from the floor. Bunche has served the United Nations since 1946 when he resigned from the State Department after being a delegate to several of the formative conferences of the UN.

He served as mediator for the UN in the Palestine dispute and directed the negotiations which resulted in the four armistice Agreements between Israel and the Arab States.

In 1956 Bunche organized and supervised the UN Emergency Force during the Suez crisis. He also organized the UN operation in the Congo.

On Harvard Faculty

He holds a Ph.D. from Harvard and served on the faculty there until 1950, when he resigned with the rank of professor. While at Harvard, he organized the Political Science Dept.

Science Fair Here Today

UNC is host to the 1962 State Science Fair for high school students today and Saturday.

A total of 70 North Carolina high school students will have exhibits in the fair, which is sponsored by the N. C. Academy of Science in cooperation with other public and private organizations in the state.

National Fair

All entries will be judged, and the two grand winners, one from the physical and one from the biological sciences, will be eligible to attend the 13th National Science Fair-International in Seattle, Wash., May 2-5.

John W. Carr, director of the UNC Computation Center and associate professor of mathematics, is director of the State Science Fair.

Open To Public

Exhibits will be set up in room 208 Phillips Hall and will be open to the public from 6 to 9 p.m. today and from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. tomorrow.

There will also be special demonstrations of the computer which are open to the public. These public demonstrations will be held at 7 p.m., 7:45 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. today and at 10:30 a.m., 11:15 a.m., and 12 noon on Saturday.

Air Force Major To Speak

Major John D. Locke, USAF, will speak on his Korean flying experiences at a meeting of the Chapel Hill Flying Club to be held at 8 tonight in the Grail Room at Graham Memorial.

The Chapel Hill Flying Club has openings for five new members and any persons interested in joinng the club or interested in learning to fly are urged to attend the meeting.

Sunday afternoon at the Chapel Hill Airport the club will give free plane rides to those persons interested in joining the club.

The club, organized in August of 1961, owns a single engine plane available to club members at a very reasonable rental rate. Club membership is comprised of women as well as men from Chapel Hill and UNC.

If unable to attend the meeting and are interested in joining the club you can contact Howard Adams, 968-8174, or Pebley Barrow, 942-6148.

Freshman Class To Sponsor Discussion On State Affairs

The freshman class will sponsor an informal discussion on state affairs Sunday night at 8 that will be led by U. S. District Judge and Mrs. L. Richardson Preyer.

The discussion is open to the student body, but attendance will be by invitation only. Interested students should contact John Dunne (968-6476), Bob Spearman (Chi Psi Lodge) or Terry Bond (28 Old East) as soon as possible.

The purpose of the discussion series is to give students a chance to communicate with state leaders, according to John Dunne, chairman of the state and national affairs committee.

Judge Preyer served as a state Superior Court judge until his appointment by President Kennedy this winter to the middle North Carolina district judgeship.

He is a graduate of Princeton and Harvard Law School and has practiced in Greensboro and New York. He is also an excellent saxaphone player and an expert of jazz, a subject that he often lectures on. He also served in the Navy in World War II.

Old East Votes For Its Janitor

Dee McCauley, janitor of Old East Dormitory, received the highest number of votes for the top three executive offices of president, vice president and IDC representative of his dorm.

As McCauley has a full time job, he will be unable to accept the duties of these three executive posts. He thereby recommended that the highest runners up be accepted as the officers for the next term.

Essay Contest Is Sponsored By Seniors

The Senior Class has announced an essay contest open to the entire student body on "The University and Its Meaning." Three prizes will be given and the winning essay published in the Daily Tar Heel.

The prizes for the contest will come from the proceeds of Wednesday night's concert by Lester Scruggs and Earl Flatt. Tickets are $1 and are available at Graham Memorial and at Kemp's.

Dual Purpose

The class officers have stated a dual purpose of the essay contest: "to awaken the student's sense of responsibility—both to himself and to his fellow students, and to more firmly establish this university's real meaning and impact."

The officers do not ask that the writer limit himself to applause or condemnation of the "Carolina way of life," but that he evaluate the university and explain the impression it has made and the effect this impression will render in the student's future years.

Ideas Into Open

"We feel," the officers stated, "that students here spend four of their most formulative years at Carolina without ever completely grasping an understanding of the relationship between the university and its product, the student. We feel that this contest can get individual ideas into the open for consideration."

'Human Comedy' Is Free Flick

Mickey Rooney, Donna Reed and Van Johnson star in tonight's free flick, "The Human Comedy." Showings will be at 7:30 and 9:30 in Carroll Hall. Admission will be by ID cards only.

The University

The essay contest to be sponsored by the senior class — a project which will be financed from the profits of the Lester Flatt and Earl Scruggs concert to be held Tuesday—has as it topic "The University and Its Meaning."

We personally could think of nothing more difficult to write about. What exactly is the meaning of four years or more of studying and living at Carolina? Is it the glut of maudlin sentiment that surrounds the Old Well, Davie Poplar, Silent Sam, or any one of the score of monuments to Carolina's love of itself? Is it the bitter-sweet realization that Carolina has much of the nobility of the South, but much, too, of its backwardness? Is it a passport to a good job, or is it a fulfilling educational experience, valuable for its own sake? Is it magnolias on a warm summer day or a silent Franklin Street during a football game?

We have no more idea, perhaps, of "the University and Its Meaning" than any student here. The topic is a hard one to pin down. Many of us spend most of our years here without ever knowing what the University is and what it means.

We hope someone will come up with the answer.

A Welcome Volume

Student government has recently completed compilation of its permanent statutes into one volume.

Primarily the work of Student Body President Bill Harriss and Vice-president Hank Patterson, with editing done by Assistant Attorney General Jack Fetner, the volume is a welcome sight to those who, in the past, have searched in vain through student government files for one bill or another.

The new codification includes all the acts of Student Legislature passed from May, 1946 until March 1962, and still in effect.

A glance through the bills in the volume is all that is needed to prove to the most sceptical that such a codification has long been needed. Some of the provisions included in certain bills are contradictory to those of others; some are completely out of date and should no longer be in effect. Had all permanent bills been collected in one volume before this time, all the contradictions and inconsistencies could have been avoided.

Thanks is due Patterson, Harriss and Fetner for their work in preparing the codification. It should be appreciated by student government officials for some time to come.

Lesson To Carolina

Colorado is a long way from North Carolina, but what is now happening in the sports world of the University of Colorado emphasizes the importance of fact that University of North Carolina academic officials have maintained a strong hand in control of inter-collegiate athletics.

Colorado officials have just fired their football coach for what the Associated Press termed "illegal recruiting practices." Some 18 to 20 members of the football squad were named in allegations made by the National Athletic Association.

It would seem reasonable to assume that there has developed on the Colorado campus a feeling that football might be a kingdom of its own. When the University hired a new football coach yesterday, some of the players had a meeting. After that meeting, one of the players said: "You've got yourself a new football coach—now get yourself a new football team. There will be no spring ball until this is straightened out. Our assistant coaches won't stay under Davis (the new coach). I don't think there are going to be many guys around."

* * *

THIS BOY has every right to comment on actions of the University. And his comment shows clearly that somewhere along the line someone had given him the wrong impressions about who should run a university.

* * *

It is important that athletics be kept inside its rightful place within the university, and that the players and all others connected with athletics realize that they will not only be supported but also will be kept in check.

Some phases of basketball got far out of hand at State and at Carolina in recent years, not once but on several occasions. That made it necessary for University of North Carolina officials to move in sharply to emphasize the fact that basketball must be controlled and that basketball must take only its rightful place in the educational program. The things the University officials did haven't rested well with some people, whose memories seem to be short.

What is happening now in Colorado is a valuable object lesson to those of us in North Carolina who have short memories about what can happen in an athletic program.

Letters To The Editor

Frats Defended

To the Editor:

The criticisms and bitter attacks, as displayed by Mr. Wuamett's letter of March 29, 1962, is typical of letters your newspaper prints concerning fraternities. We wonder if fraternities deserve such biased attacks. We, as prospective members of a fraternity (to you Mr. Wuamett) "pledges", would like to offer, for the first time, the other point of view. Throughout your letter you give examples of the so-called evils of fraternities. We wonder what your source of information was. Ours is one of first hand knowledge, taken from nearly a year's experience. This, we believe, is the necessary basis for the following opinions based on Mr. Wuamett's outburst.

We feel that Mr. Toppell's explanation of the unfair 80% rule was just and conclusive; however, your assumption that fraternities consist of merely "the right people" shows your judgment to be invalid and immature.

Contrary to popular belief, a fraternity is based on congeniality, not (as you call it) sharpness or material wealth. A person whom we consider sharp has and uses qualities which are beneficial to his brothers and his other friends. We admit that it costs some money to belong to a fraternity, but we wonder how many people realize the number of boys who work in order to enjoy this type of congenial and permanent friendship.

As to selectivity, Mr. Wuamett, we trust that you are also selective in choosing your life-long friends. Why not allow us this privilege? Just as a note of interest, "Jocks," Jews, and, as you call them, unsharp guys, can be found in many fraternities.

Concerning the ability of fraternities to maintain higher than campus average grades, it seems that you believe that upon donning a fraternity pin one immediately experiences a sudden increase in I.Q. How weak an assumption is this? Clearly, with two minutes rational thought, it is obvious that neither a fraternity pin nor a dormitory room number will increase a God-given gift such as intellect.

Being connected with a fraternity, Mr. Wuamett, is both extracurricular and burdensome, but not burdensome in the manner which you imply. You imply that it is burdensome to learn such material as a brother's home town, girlfriend's name, songs, and the names of the national officers of the fratenity. This is burdensome, in the sense of consumption of time, to learn; but if one is truly interested in something, he wishes to know every possible detail about that thing. This interest in the names, home towns, and fields of interests of others is the quantity which separates a fraternity, Mr. Wuamett, from a hotel.

In conclusion, we contend that fraternities are both an admirable and constructive part of this University. We answer your challenge with a challenge of our own. Come follow us through a typical day and then, Mr. Wuamett, you think before you again attack a way of life you neither have first hand knowledge of nor understand.

Opportunities For 1962 College Grads

By ARTHUR GOLDBERG

Physical Sciences

Employment opportunities for well-trained chemistry students at all levels are very good this year. However, employers are again stressing quality placing heavy emphasis on graduates' grades and academic standing. Employment prospects are best for graduates with the master's or doctor's degree who are qualified for research positions, and for bachelor degree holders who rank high in their class.

Continued growth in employment of chemists is expected both in the next few years and over the long run. Further increases in research and development activities, in which about one-half of all chemists are engaged, will be a major factor in the expected growth of the chemical profession. The continued expansion of those industries which employ large numbers of chemists — the chemical and allied products industry in particular—will also be a factor. Rising enrollments in colleges and universities are expected to result in many openings for chemistry teachers.

Starting salaries offered new graduates with the bachelor's degree in chemistry average around $500 a month. Beginning salaries for those with the master's degree are as much as $100 a month higher than salaries offered graduates with the bachelor's degree. For new graduates with the doctorate, beginning salaries are considerably higher, but vary sharply by type of employment and according to the graduate's special and individual qualifications.

Job prospects for well qualified physics graduates are excellent. Persons with the doctorate, qualified to do basic research or advanced applied research and development, are especially sought after. Many of the opportunities for physics graduates both in research and teaching, are in relatively new areas of physics, such as solid state physics, magnetohydrodnamics, space physics, cryogenis, plasma physics, and nuclear and high energy physics. Physicists are also needed to fill teaching positions in colleges and universities.

Average starting salaries for this year's physics graduates with the bachelor's degree generally exceed $500 a month. For those with master's or doctor's degrees, beginning salaries are considerably higher.

The outlook is for continued rapid growth in the employment of physicists both through the mid-1960s and over the long run. The demand for these scientists is closely associated with research and development activities, and expenditures for these activities are expected to continue to increase in industry, Government, and colleges and universities over the next decade. Increased enrollments in college and university physics courses are also expected to create many openings for teachers of physics.

Mathematics

The employment outlook for graduates with a major in mathematics is very good at all levels of training and exellent for graduates with the Ph.D. degree. New graduates who have a knowledge of engineering and the physical sciences are in particular demand for many types of work, including operations research, logistics, quality control, scientific management, and the translation of scientific and engineering problems into mathematical terms for solution by electronic computing equipment. Persons qualified to teach mathematics at the college level are also in special demand. College graduates with a background in mathematics and statistics are increasingly sought after to work with computers in the electronic processing of business and accounting information. New mathematics graduates are also in strong demand for actuarial trainee positions in insurance companies.

The long-run outlook is for rapid growth in employment of mathematicians, primarily because of continued increases in scientific research and development activities and the rapidly spreading use of electronic computers. High-speed electronic computing machines not only make possible the solution of a steadily widening variety of complex physics and engineering research problem, but have also opened up broad new fields of application for mathematics in accounting and business management. Many new mathematics teachers will be needed in colleges and universities, both to provide for the much larger enrollments expected in the middle and late 1960s, and to meet the growing demand for advanced mathematics training in other science fields and in engineering.

Starting salaries for mathematicians with the bachelor's degree average around $500 a month this year. Salary offers for particularly well qualified beginning mathematicians with Ph.D. degrees may be as high as $800 or $900 a month.

Biological Sciences

Employment prospects for biology graduates with advanced degrees are very good—partiularly for those with doctor's degrees in biophysics, biochemistry, microbiology, physiology, and virology—to do research important to medicine. There is also need for biologists with advanced degrees in microbiology, animal, soil and plant science and entomology for research positions in the agricultural sciences. Biology graduates qualified to fill college and university teaching positions in all specialties are also needed. Among graduates with bachelor's degrees, opportunities are best for those who are near the top of their class, especially in the fields of entomology, fish and wildlife biology, and microbiology. Graduates with bachelor's degrees may also find opportunities as junior professional assistants and technicians.

Employment in the biological sciences is expected to increase substantially over the long run, primarily because of further increases in research activities in both medical and agricultural sciences. Additional biological scientists will be needed in such relatively new areas as space biology (research aimed at solving biological problems associated with the survival and proper functioning of men in space) and radiation biology (the study of the effects of high energy radiation on the human body).

Earth Sciences

Employment opportunities for geology graduates continue to be limited, although there appear to be somewhat more job openings this year than last. The demand for geologists is mainly for graduates with advanced degrees. New geologists with only the bachelor's degree even those who rank high in their class, may find it necessary to begin in semi-professional jobs or to obtain work outside the field of geology.

The long-run outlook for the geological profession is more favorable. As the world's population expands, the demand for petroleum, minerals, and water supplies will increase. To fill this increased demand, geologists with advanced training will be needed to devise new techniques for exploring deeper within the earth's crust and for searching underseas areas, to do more extensive research and analysis of geological data, and to help develop more efficient methods for finding and recovering crude oil and minerals.

Employment prospects for the few students obtaining advanced degrees in geophysics continue to be favorable. Some geophysicists are needed by Federal agencies to work on such programs as water resources and flood control and to do research concerned with radioactivity, cosmic and solar radiation, and with outer atmosphere and space. A few graduates are being hired by petroleum companies to search for new oil deposits, and by mining companies to locate new mineral deposits.

Opportunities for new graduates in meteorology are very good. In particular demand, by both Government and private industry, are meteorologists with advanced degrees to fill research positions. Qualified meteorologists are needed by the U.S. Weather Bureau to fill vacancies in weather forecasting and for research programs dealing with hurricanes and air pollution. They are also needed to sift atmospheric data collected in the Nation's space program. Airlines, weather consulting services and other private companies are also providing some openings for meteorology graduates.

Teaching

Total demand for teachers continues to exceed the supply of qualified candidates in most parts of the country. Intensity of demand, however, varies according to school level and field of specialization. More than 110,000 new kindergarten and elementary teachers will be required this year to take care of the increase in enrollments and to replace teachers leaving the classrooms. However, only about half this number will meet the certification requirements for elementary school teaching this June. Salaries for elementary school teachers (both experienced and inexperienced) average a little more than $5,300.

Opportunities for employment of secondary school teachers are increasing as enrollments rise. The demand for these teachers will approximate 100,000, but the number of new graduates entering the field with adequate qualifications will probably be considerably less than 85,000 this year. Some specialties are reported to be in particularly strong demand: Mathematics, science, home economics, art, music, physical education for girls, and some foreign languages. Some fields are overcrowded, especially the social sciences and physical education for boys. The master's degree is being required by an increasing number of city schools either for initial appointment or for advancement. Secondary school teachers receive about $5,800 a year, on the average.

The demand for specialized school personnel — including librarians, audio-visual experts, psychologists, health specialists, teachers of the gifted and the handicapped, speciali ists in remedial reading and speech, and counselors—exceeds the current supply.

Openings for college and university teachers are plentiful and will become more numerous in the years ahead. The shortage of people with the Ph.D. is severe in many subject matter fields, and colleges are competing for their services with industry, private research organizations and other types of employers. An estimated 25,000 new teachers may be needed this year to handle the increase in college enrollments and to meet the need for replacements. Graduate training, often including completion of all preliminary work for the doctorate except the dissertation, is a common requirement for beginning college teaching. Salaries of instructors average about $5,310 for nine months of full-time teaching.

Library Work

Excellent opportunities exist for well-trained librarians in all parts of the country and in all kinds of libraries—schools, colleges, public and private libraries, government agencies, educational and research associations, medical institutions, and business and industrial firms. The demand is particularly evident for librarians with special training in science and technology. Many part-time positions are available in library work. Starting salaries of library school graduates generally range from $4,400 to $5,000 annually.

Law

Graduates who rank in the top 10 per cent of their class will have excellent opportunities to join legal staffs of large firms, corporations, and government agencies, and to become law clerks to judges. As in most other independent professions, young attorneys who plan to open their own law offices must be prepared to face a period of low earnings while they build up their practices. Numerous opportunities for employment are also available to enter a variety of salaried positions requiring a knowledge of law. Annual starting salaries in the Federal Government for lawyers who have passed the Bar are either $5,355 or $6,435, depending on their qualifications. Salaries of lawyers employed in beginning positions with business firms average close to $6,400 a year.

Journalism

Journalism as well as liberal arts graduates with writing ability, will find numerous openings with newspapers and in advertising, public relations, trade and technical publishing, and other fields.

Newspaper editors are actively seeking young reporters with exceptional talent. Graduates with only average ability, however, will face keen competition for jobs, especially on large city dailies. The largest number of openings for beginning reporters are with weekly and daily newspapers located in small towns and suburban areas. Large city dailies also have openings for inexperienced people with a good educational background, and a flair for writing, to enter as reporter trainees.

Two Years Put Into Plans For One-Week Presentation

In reality, the organization of the '62 Carolina Symposium dates to 1926, at which time the first program of its type was conceived and presented under the auspices of the YMCA. More directly, the '62 Symposium was provided for at the close of its immediate predecessor, the 1960 Symposium on "The Image of Man."

JOE OPPENHEIMER
. . . Symposium Head

Shortly following that event its officers met and chose an interim committee so that the necessary planning and continuity could be given to this year's program. Regular officers were elected for this group, with Sally Womack serving as chairman.

In addition to completing the wrap-up of the previous Symposium, the interim committee established a new program committee composed of both faculty and students to begin selection of a general theme and of nightly topics, and it approached the student legislature for the initial funds necessary for the operation of a forum of such scope.

By early 1961, the interim group had selected and begun training the new officers who would guide the '62 event to and through the current presentation. Joe Oppenheimer and Bill Bevis were chosen chairman and vice-chairman respectively.

In February the program committee arrived at "Today's Revolutions" as a general theme and discussed a rough breakdown for nightly topics. April of 1-961 found the program divisions and the nature of afternoon panels and addresses pretty well solidified, and selection of speakers was well underway.

Throughout the remainder of 1961, the program committee and general officers worked hard until the final slate of speakers and panelists had been secured.

Also in the spring of 1961, the executive officers began the establishment of the Symposium committees and the selection, through application and interview, of their chairmen and members. Seven committees, with four additonal subcommittees under them, were selected. In all, roughly one hundred students were brought to work directly with the Symposium.

The finance committee, under Symposium treasurer Dennis Rash, set to work soliciting funds from foundations, lecture funds, and student individuals and groups in order to supplement the legislative grant and reach the $8,500 figure needed for the operation of a successful Symposium.

The publicity committee under Nelson Irvine provided throughout the year excellent coverage of the Symposium's progress and now of its actual events as they are presented. Its two subcommittees under Gray Temple and John Currie have been responsible for the publication of the handbook and for the extensive exhibits on campus. Coverage of the Symposium has been channeled through major state newspapers, the wire services, and statewide FM radio.

Charles Shelton's related discussions committee and its divisions chaired by John Frye and Fred Wedler have presented numerous discussions with faculty members in various student organizations and living units and have engendered general faculty interest in the program.

A fourth committee headed by Fuller Honeycutt has planned and administered an intercollegiate seminar for students from some ten other campuses. This group is currently holding daily discussions on the Symposium topics with a group of our own students under the moderation of Dr. Clayton of the RTVMP department.

Lee Kohn and her active social and hospitality committee have made travel, room, and board arrangements for all visiting Symposium participants and have co-ordinated all banquets, teas, and receptions held during the week.

Of no less importance have been the physical arrangements committee, headed by Clyde Benton, and the office secretarial committee under the direction of the Symposium secretary Jan McColskey.

Assisting the major officers, Oppenheimer, Bevis, Miss McColskey, and Rash, has been executive secretary Bob Sevier, whose primary job has been that of committee co-ordinator and general assistant. This group of five, then, along with the one hundred committee workers has been hard at work for fully a year making possible the April 1-5 presentation of "Today's Revolutions."

As this week's event came all too hurriedly, its personnel began to look toward the beginning of another such cyclical history which it is hoped will make a 1964 Carolina Symposium likewise a reality.

For Improvement

Suggestions Offered

The Intercollegiate Seminar of the Carolina Symposium concluded Wednesday morning with the third of its meetings, this one with Dr. Kirkwood and Dr. Huston Smith. Approximately twenty-five students from colleges along the Eastern coast attended these three-hour discussion sessions. During the rest of their stay, they attended the other regularly scheduled activities of the Symposium, met students in the raternities and sororities where they stayed, and audited classroom lectures and discussions.

Four of the girls in the Seminar were interviewed after the conclusion of the Wednesday morning session, Esther Schwartz, Elsbeth Joyce, Judy Schwartz of Swarthmore, and Judy Seidel of Pembroke College. All were highly enthusiastic about both the Seminar and the Symposium in general and offered suggestions for improving the program.

Judy Seidel commented, "The Symposium in general improved from beginning to end. It gained its vitality through speakers who were actively engaged in what they were speaking about. For example, the artist provided more food for thought than the art historian.

"In the seminars questions were not really answered, but refined. The consequences of the seminars were, for me at least, a greater knowledge of what the questions were, an urge to learn and act for myself, and a desire to spread the knowledge that I had gained and to make people interested in the problems discussed."

Elsbeth Joyce thought that "the speeches were most inspiring and enlightening" and that "the selection of speakers was excellent."

Esther Schwartz emphasized the wealth of material on the topics. "In retrospect, the Symposium was exciting, enlightening, and inspiring. The speakers certainly were well-qualified and interesting. The topic itself was stimulating enough to warrant another similar Symposium in the very near future."

Judy Schwartz complained of the lack of continuity among the seminars and said that "each one was interesting in itself and those which dealt with specific areas were more interesting for being less nebulous—the race relations panel, McGee and Al Lowenstein. Perhaps these were also better presented because there really are revolutions in those areas today—also perhaps because I'm personally interested in politics."

Bill Imes, a Carolina student also interviewed, found the Seminar "on the whole quite worthwhile," but complained of the "lack of discussion in the group," partly, he explained, because the speakers gave too little opportunity for questions and group discussion.

All four of the girls criticized their lack of opportunity to meet more students on the campus and suggested that a "student guide might be added" in the future for each member of the Seminars.

Two of the girls commented that "Gussow looked like a Russian anarchist or one of the Smith Brothers." Otherwise, they found the speakers stimulating and entertaining.

As general comments, they concluded that the seminar was "too big," that there was "not enough time" to discuss the questions raised, and that there "could have been more schools" represented on the seminar itself. The third day seemed to them to be the most exciting, but one girl added that it "takes a while to warm up, to build up rapport." They complained that the topics were too large and caused the discussions to become rambling, that the questions for discussion should have been in specific areas instead of broad ones, and that certain of the speakers were not used as effectively as they might have been.

When questioned on the importance of their experience, they decided that the seminar had made them "more aware," "eager to act," and "I'd like to foster the spirit of desiring knowledge on my campus." They found the Symposium concept a "marvelous idea" and that the topic this year "served different purposes in different places."

Copies of the speeches delivered by the evening lecturers will be available in a bound booklet shortly after the final night of the Symposium. Any persons desiring to have a copy should send their name and address to the Carolina Symposium, Box 6, Chapel Hill, or they should come by the Symposium office on the 2nd floor of the YMCA building. The price of the complete book will be $1.50.

Committee Estimates

10,000 Attend Symposium

Symposium attendance reached about 10,000, the Executive Committee estimated yesterday. Near-capacity crowds have characterized both the afternoon and evening programs during the week.

Quizzes have been postponed and lectures rescheduled in order to permit greater attendance by the students and faculty of the University. "Cooperation has generally been good throughout the week," a committee spokesman said, although there have been some unfortunate conflicts with the scheduled activites.

"At least one phase of our program has been of vital interest to every student on campus," said Bob Sevier, Executive Secretary of the Committee.

There appears to have been a large number of regular attenders primarily among UNC students and faculty. The Committee noted, however, that there has been a large and favorable response from the Chapel Hill community and from the surrounding area, including Duke.

Out-of-state students have participated in the Symposium for the first three days of the week through the Intercollegiate Seminars program.

The Symposium reports that there have been quite a number of requests for the books of speeches to be published at the completion of the week. Requests have been received from Charlotte and neighboring towns which heard and saw the Symposium over radio-FM or television.

WUNC-TV, the campus educational station, has provided live coverage and publicity for the evening speeches each night except Wednesday.

All of the evening lectures were carried over WUNC-FM radio through the assistance of WRAL-FM in Raleigh.

Too Much Too Fast

The biggest andt almost sole complaint lodged by students about the Symposium was that activities followed so closely after each other that many students were unable to catch important speeches.

"I do have to go to class and study occasionally," one student complained. "It's tough to do that and still attend more than half the speeches."

Too much too fast was the comment of other students also as the Symposium moved rapidly through the week.

A Word Of Thanks

The Symposium Committee would like to express its appreciation to the students of the University and the community of Chapel Hill for their enthusiastic support of its program this week. Friday's session marks a climactic end to eighteen months of work and planning and we are grateful for the opportunity to have been associated with an outstanding group of students, the administration and faculty in this effort.

It has been personally beneficial to each of us, and a debt of gratitude is shared by all the students who have been involved.

Whatever this week's sessions have meant, or will mean, to the State, the community, the University and the individuals who have participated, in a very real sense it has been a selfish effort on the part of the students who have worked longest, hardest and closest with the Symposium. We have learned more, profited more and will continue to gain more from our experiences.

Walter Spearman

Force Behind Symposium

A quiet but effective steering force behind the scenes of the 1962 Symposium has been Professor Walter Spearman of the UNC Department of Journalism, the Symposium's adviser.

Always a virtual "anchor man" on the organization's program committee, Mr. Spearman was instrumental in the selection of the Symposium general theme and nightly topics and in the selection and contacting of speakers. Together with Honorary Chairman Aycock and student Chairman Oppenheimer, Mr. Spearman has worked all along to assure proper faculty interest and consideration for this year's program.

Not to be overlooked, too, is his cheerful and contagious smile, an outward sign of the adviser's willingness to serve and to advise, to assist and to enlighten those students working with the program.

Motivating his ardent and active support of the 1962 Carolina Symposium seems to be Professor Spearman's sincere belief that such a program of combined efforts among students, faculty, administration, and townspeople is a desirable challenge to the educational community, the results of which can only be enjoyable and edifying.

Mr. Spearman has been a member of the University of North Carolina faculty of journalism since 1935, in which position he has accumulated the record of excellence that mgiht well be expected of such a man. A past president of the Faculty Club and the local chapter of the AAUP, he is currently director of the North Carolina Scholastic Press Institute and secretary of the North Carolina Editorial Writers' Conference. His editorial excellence has been exemplified in his work for the Greensboro Daily News, and the Charlotte News, and other prominent newspapers.

The success of the 1962 Symposium is no less than a tribute to Walter Spearman and others like him from the University faculty and community.

McGee Finds Symposium 'Refreshing' In Stay Here

"It's been refreshing," said Senator McGee as he boarded his plane for Washington early Wednesday morning. And, indeed, it has been refreshing, not only for the junior Senator from Wyoming, but for some 1500 students and faculty members who heard him speak to the Symposium Tuesday night.

In his speech McGee urged Americans to take a new look at "Today's Revolutions" and to see them for what they really are. In referring to the so-called Communist revolutions in the underdeveloped countries, he said, "What is taking place around us would be taking place if there were never a Russian in the world." We are "overly obsessed with our fear of Communism" the former professor of American history told his captivated audience, who responded enthusiastically during the question and answer period that followed.

Those who attended this third lecture of the current Symposium series were impressed with the speech, but even more so, the man. The youngest senior senator on Capitol Hill was detained for one and a half hours by a crowd of students at a Graham Memorial reception which followed his speech. His statement that he would approve lowering the voting age to 18 or even below brought nods of approval from the students who just minutes before had heard the results of the campus election.

Contrary to the usual procedure at the Graham Memorial receptions Professor McGee (as he was addressed by Dr. G. V. Taylor) was forced to take a seat while the others present sat around him on chairs and on the floor. McGee covered the spectrum of the political environment from the crisis in the Congo to the "negative" approach of the Republican party. Participating with his former professional vigor in the lively debate, he balanced the mood of his audience with his quick wit. When asked whether he had aspirations to the presidential nomination, he replied that he was 47 and already too old to be president.

While waiting for his plane to depart, McGee remarked that he was one of six members of the Senate who have come into politics from the field of education, and he is one of two who hold a Ph.D. degree. He doesn't believe that not having a law degree hinders him in any way, although he admits it perhaps makes him a little less cautious than if he were constantly aware of the legal complications of some problems. There are already maybe a few too many lawyers in the Senate anyway.

The stimulating discussion and exchange of opinion inspired by Senator McGee's address gave the Symposium a shot in the arm at the mid-point of the week-long program. It is the hope of the Symposium Committee, and in fact the purpose of the Symposium itself, that this interest and enthusiasm exhibited Tuesday night will continue among the students and the faculty. If so, the time and money expended by those who are responsible for the existence of the Symposium will not have been wasted.

Oppenheimer Says

Crowds Record-Breaking

But Pace Is A Bit Fast For High School

Attendance at this year's Symposium was "record-breaking," according to Symposium Chairman Joe Oppenheimer.

Oppenheimer said crowds were large and enthusiastic at most of the round of speeches, panel discussions and meetings.

He said he was particularly gratified by the attendance from outside Chapel Hill. Students from Duke and State were in attendance at many of the sessions, he said, as well as non-students from towns around Chapel Hill.

Oppenheimer said the frantic pace of the Symposium, which had two or more sessions scheduled in one day several times, made it hard for most students to attend every one they were interested in.

"We packed as much as possible into the week," Oppenheimer said, "and considering the crowded schedule, it was surprising how many people said they attended every session."

"We tried to publicize the sessions as much as possible," he said. "I think that helped make everyone aware of the times and places the speeches and panels were held."

Most people, according to Oppenheimer, were able to select those events they wanted to attend beorehand.

Snakes and fish have ears but these ears have no outside openings. They "hear" mostly through vibrations in the ground or water.

'Tales Of Hoffman,' 'Music Master'

Opera Evening Slated

Pergolesi's witty and delightful opera, "The Music Master," and the fourth act of Jacques Offenbach's masterpiece, "The Tales of Hoffman," will be featured in an evening of opera at Hill Music Hall, Friday, April 13, at 8 p.m. These two works will be fully staged by the Carolina Opera Workshop, a musical organization composed of outstanding local singers and directed by Wilton Mason of the UNC Department of Music.

"The Music Master" is the story of Lauretta, favorite pupil of the maestro Lamberto, who decides to embark upon a career in opera. Lamberto opposes her wishes but his objections are brushed aside by the impresario Colagianna whi is romantically interested in Lauretta and offers her a contract. In Lamberto's absence Lauretta signs the contract and upon his return confesses what she has done. A tender love scene develops, interrupted by the furious Solagianna. Lauretta's quick wit resolves the situation to the advantage of all concerned.

"Tales of Hoffman' 'is based on stories by the German novelist, E. T. A. Hoffman. The excerpt enacted by the opera group is the last of the opera's three tales of the tragic love affairs of Hoffman, a young poet. The story deals with Hoffman's love for Antonia, a young invalid who suffers from a malignant fever which strangley will prove fatal if she over-exerts herself with singing. Though forbidden by her father Crespel to sing, she is persuaded to do so by her pretending physician, Dr. Miracle, a fiend with hypnotic powers who tells her that her dead mother, whose ghost he has conjured up, wishes her to sing.

As she dies from excessive singing Hoffman and Crespel enter to hear her last words. The frenzied father accuses the young Hoffman of the murder of his daughter while Dr. Miracle gloats over the success of his plot.

The performance is open to the public without charge.

Violin Recital To Be Heard Sunday

Miss Joan Sandler, a UNC senior majoring in music, will give her senior violin recital at 4 p.m. this Sunday in Hill Hall. The public is invited.

A native of Charlotte, Miss Sandler has played with the Charlotte Symphony and is a member of the University Orchestra here. Since coming from the University of Miami to UNC, she has been studying violin with Edgar Alden of the UNC Music Department.

The program of the recital will include sonatas by Handel, Schubert, and Cowell; a romance by Beethoven, and a concerto by Tchaikowsky.

DR. WEISS WILL SPEAK

Dr. Charles W. Weiss of the UNC Department of Sanitary Engineering will speak on "Detection of Insecticide Contamination in the Aquatic Environment" at a UNC seminar in environmental hygiene at 10 a.m. this Saturday in room 123 of the north wing of the University's School of Public Health.

Sanford Names Drama Week; 24 Plays Set

Gov. Terry Sanford has proclaimed April 8-14 State Drama Week in celebration of the 40th anniversary of the Carolina Dramatic Association. Twenty-four invitational one-act plays will be presented at the Association's annual festival here April 11-14.

Fourteen of the special productions have been selected to honor North Carolina playwrights and critic-judges and to represent the mountain, piedmont and coastal regions.

Native North Carolina playwrights being honored on the program are Bernice Kelly Harris o Seaboard; Dr. Elizabeth Welch of Winston-Salem; Mark Reece Sumner of Asheville and Fredericksburg, Va.; and W. P. Covington III of Winston-Salem and Portsmouth, Va.

Mrs. Harris, a novelist and playwright, has had eight of her one-act and two full-length plays presented at past C.D.A. festivals. "Ca'line," her 1932 prize-winning play, will be staged by the Northampton County Players under the direction of Mrs. Jack O'Brian.

Dr. Elizabeth Welch, now head of the Education and Psychology Department at Salem College, began bringing her plays to the C.D.A. festivals in 1943 when she was a teacher of dramatic art at Lee H. Edwards High School in Asheville. From her nine festival plays, "Trail of Tears," a choric drama, will be staged by its original producing organization, the Goldmasquers of Goldsboro High School. It will be directed by Clifton Britton, who also directs Paul Green's "The Lost Colony" on Roanoke Island each sumer.

Sumner and Covington were represented at each festival for three consecutive years in 1939, 1940 and 1941. Mr. Sumner, then a student of Dr. Welch in Asheville, is now Chairman of the Department of Dramatic Arts and Speech at Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg, Va. His 1940 prize-winning play, "Rock Dust," will be staged by the Dept. of Dramatic Art of Richmond Professional Institute. Raymond Hodges will direct.

UNC Grid Greats Return For Alumni Game Saturday

When the fans attend the Alumni-Varsity spring football game in Kenan Stadium Saturday, they will see some familiar faces in new roles.

Winter-spring practice is a period of experimentation. Coaches shift around the talent, hoping to get it placed for the best interests. They can see great depth and ability in some positions, lack of depth and not enough ability in others. So they move the men around, which is something they cannot do so conveniently after the season opens, with games bearing down every Saturday.

FRANK RIGGS—GUARD

AL GOLDSTEIN—END

Ron Tuthill, a quarterback on the freshman team last season, is now a halfback and will be wearing Gib Carson's old number, 29, next autumn. Eddie Kesler, a freshman halfback who was not in school last semester, has been made a fullback. On the other hand, three former fullbacks, Buddy Cozart, Glen Ogburn and James Whitmire, are in new posts now, Cozart at guard, Ogburn at center and Whitmire at halfback. And Bruce Greene, has moved from guard to end.

John Flournoy is back at safety, but in most of the early days of practice he was being used at halfback.

Incidentally, the converts have been looking good generally at their reassigned positions, which the fans will find out Saturday.

GOOD PRACTICE—Coach Jim Hickey and his staff have been well pleased with the progress of the players in practice.

There have been some pleasant surprises, such as tackle Cole Kortner, a junior from Greenwich, Conn. A big, strapping 235-pounder, Kortner was out for track as a freshman and showed he had all the qualifications as a weight man.

EXCITED ALUMNI—More than 50 alumni, along with their wives, are coming back to the game. All will not play but about three teams will be "suited up" and Coach Hickey is loaning a couple of his teams to the Alumni.

The "old grads" have written to Monogram Club president Joe Davies that they are mighty excited about the contest, which is taking the place of the old Blue-White game.

It was reported in this space earlier that Art Weiner is playing, but Art says this was in error. "I will be unable to play, but will certainly be there to watch the game and be with the fellows afterwards." Art's knee operations make competition out of the question for him.

The "Cho Choo" says, however, he will put on his gear and take some part in the show. Stars of more recent vintage of course will provide most of the opposition for the varsity.

Wacker Hurls Heels To First Home Win

By ED DUPREE

Bob Wacker, UNC's hard-throwing right-hander, limited Delaware's Blue Hens to five hits Thursday as Coach Walt Rabb's Tar Heels took a 10-3 win, their first victory at home this season.

Wacker spotted the visitors two runs in the opening inning and shut them out on three hits in the middle seven frames. They picked up one run against the Florida native in the last inning.

Delaware scored their first two runs on only one hit. Wacker walked two men, they advance a base on an infield out, and scored on a single to right center.

A triple by Larry Neal in the bottom of the inning drove in P. W. Swing with the first UNC run.

In the fourth, two more three-baggers put the Tar Heels ahead to stay. Len Dellolio belted one to deep center field to drive in Jim Speight who had walked, and Heyward Hull tripled down the right field line to score Dellolio.

Rabb's men picked up three more in the fifth, two in the sixth, and one each in the seventh and eighth frames.

Buddy Tilden, the team's leading hitter going into the game, hit a sacrifice fly to score courtesy runner Cronin Byrd in the fifth and a pair of errors after the bases were loaded accounted for two more.

Byrd again in as a courtesy runner for Wacker, scored the first run of the sixth. With the speedy Byrd on first, Swing executed a perfect hit-and-run play on a single to right field sending Byrd to third. But the right fielder let the ball get past him and allowed Byrd to score and Swing to advance to third. He scored on another Tilden sacrifice fly.

The Heels scored their single run in the seventh inning without the benefit of a hit. Neal and Dellolio walked and Hull was hit by relief pitcher Jay Lutz. Jim Umstead had hurled the first six frames, yielding eight runs on six hits. George Lockhart hit a sacrifice fly to score Neal with the ninth tally.

In the bottom of the eighth Tilden doubled to left center and Neal, collecting his third hit of the afternoon, singled to bring home the tenth run.

The Blue Hens from the North, who had defeated Duke Wednesday, scored their final run when Luke Lackman singled with Cihocki on first, and Buddy Tilden muffed the ball in left field.

Wacker, in registering his first win of the year, struck out seven an walked six. After the first inning, he was in trouble only once—that was when the Hens loaded the bases in the seventh. The 6-4 hurler got Gary Hebert on a pop fly to short to get out of the jam.

Neal was three for four to pace the Heels who got eight hits. Swing (1-3), Tilden (1-3), Dellolio (1-2), Hull (1-3), and Wacker (1-2) collected the other hits.

Lackman, who entered the game as a pinch-hitter in the seventh, led Delaware with two for two, both singles.

Netmen Shut Out Williams

By LOUIS LEGUM

Coach Don Skakle's mighty tennis team gave evidence of things to come as the Tar Heels blistered Williams, 9-0, yesterday. The win marked the eighth consecutive triumph of the season for the netters and their twentieth over a two-year span.

Only two matches went into three sets. One of these took place on the number one court where Ted Hoehn fought back to take the last three games and defeat John Botts, 8-6, 4-6, 7-5. Botts, who also played well against George Sokol on Monday, finally buckled under the persistent pressure of Hoehn's sharp net game.

The other singles were easy victories for Carolina. Sokol whipped Williams' Ned Shaw, 6-2, 6-2, while Bitsy Harrison played consistently and forcefully to beat Bob Mahland by a 6-3, 6-0 score. Keith Stoneman, down 4-0 in the second set, swept the final six games to hand Brooks Goddard a 6-1, 6-4 loss. A pleasant surprise for Skakle was the 6-0, 6-2 victory of George Zimmerman against Frank Thayer. Charlie Shaffer also beat Bruce Birgbauer in straight sets, 6-4, 6-3.

Harrison and Shaffer overpowered Shaw and Mahland in the doubles, 6-4, 8-6, with their big serves working to great advantage. The combination of Kirby Jones and Sam Applegate lost only two games in decisively defeating Thayer and Birgbauer, 6-1, 6-1. Relying a great deal on pure enthusiasm, Dave Morgan and Stan Cocke upset Botts and Goddard in an exciting match, 4-6, 6-3, 6-4.

Be an advertising writer in New York this summer

Talented juniors, here is a chance you will never have again: A summer job creating advertisements for one of the world's largest advertising agencies. A chance to find out—while you are still in college—if you can make the grade in the tough and rewarding business of advertising.

Do you have what it takes to succeed as an advertising writer?

The only way to find out is to try it.

But if you wait until you graduate, you'll find it almost impossible to land a writing job with a good advertising agency. To get a job, you have to have experience. To get experience, you have to have a job.

Now, an easier way to get into advertising.

This summer, one of the largest and most respected advertising agencies is offering jobs as full-fledged advertising copywriters to a few outstanding men who are college juniors.

You work from mid-June until Labor Day in our office in New York.

You start right out writing.

You don't have to carry mail or sharpen pencils—the usual ways to break into advertising. You do get a chance to think up and write advertisements and commercials for nationally known companies in the food, appliance, soap, gasoline and insurance fields.

You learn, not through lectures or training programs, but by actually working with the most capable professionals in the business.

You earn enough to pay transportation costs from your home, live in New York, and still show a profit at the end of the summer (if you're not too big-hearted about snatching all the lunch tabs).

Can you qualify?

Since this is a temporary job, men in their junior year are preferred. If you succeed this summer, you will be offered a permanent job as a copywriter after you graduate.

No, you don't have to be an advertising major.

Some of our best writers majored in English, philosophy, history, political science, classics. Some didn't even go to college. But all of them are gifted with an instinctive understanding of—and respect for—people.

How can you tell if you have the stuff?

Do you love to read? We've yet to meet a good writer who isn't a reader—hungry for new ideas, excited about new ways of expressing them.

Do you love to write? If you have what it takes, you have probably been writing all your life. Right now, you may be writing articles for your college newspaper; scripts for the radio station; letters that get her to say "yes"; poems, plays, or stories just to please yourself.

If this sounds like you—and you like the sound of working in one of New York's great advertising agencies—write for full details on how to apply. Write a letter that shows how well you can write. Mail it by April 15th.

If you are accepted, you will have a summer you'll remember all your life. And if you succeed, you will find yourself with a full-time job which pays the kind of money it takes to get married and in which there is no such thing as a dull day.

Two Dishwashers Scuffle In Lenoir

By Joe Burns

The Lenoir Hall kitchen was the scene of a brief scuffle early Wednesday night between two colored dishwashers.

They "started out horseplaying," according to Manager George Prillaman. One of them struck the other on the forehead but he only received a slight cut.

Several of the kitchen employees broke up the scuffle immediately after it started.

Which Steeple Is Taller, Methodist Or Presbyterian?

Within the last few days, there has been quite a bit of activity going on in the lot next to Kemp's which has attracted a lot of attention.

Construction workers have placed, with the help of a large crane, the new steeple on top of the new Presbyterian Church.

Sidewalk superintendents began at first to glance at the new steeple, and then they would glance down Franklin Street at the steeple atop the Methodist Church.

The spectators commented on which they thought was taller. Upon being asked, one of the construction workers said the Presbyterian steeple was actually higher from the ground level—"In fact, the Presbyterian's steeple is 20 feet higher than the Methodist's."

But upon asking Mr. J. S. Bennett of the Methodist Church and Mr. Tom Rose of the Presbyterian Church, it was found that the Methodist steeple is higher by 147 to 138 feet.

'The Rack' Free Flick

Paul Newman, Wendell Corey, Walter Pidgeon, Edmond O'Brien and Anne Francis head the cast of "THE RACK," tonight's Free Flick. S. war hero from two-and-a-half years in a Korean prison camp and his subsequent court-martial for treason.

Based on actual instances of American prisoners who did collaborate with the Communists, this drama examines the thesis that nobody is blamable for his actions when forced past his breaking point.

Showings will be at 7:30 and 9:30 in Carroll Hall and only students with ID cards will be admitted.

Those in the infirmary yesterday included Miriam Green, Elizabeth Rendell, Margaret Holland, Ann Baldwin, George Reid, John Reitzel, Wendell Carpenter, Robert Williams, Billy Saunders, Charles Buckley, and Charles Cushman.

JAMES "SCOTTY" RESTON, of the Washington Bureau of the New York Times, speaks to a group of journalism and political science students in Howell Hall. —Photo by Lloyd Little

By LLOYD LITTLE

President Kennedy has changed the tendency in Washington to act much like Pavlov's dogs, James Reston said yesterday in Howell Hall.

"When Khrushchev rang the bell in Moscow, Lincoln White and the State department would salivate," he said.

"The Cuban revolution had a profound effect on the US—Khrushchev took the invasion as a sign of weakness in Kennedy and tried to rough him up."

Kennedy has brought the intellectual to the American political scene, Reston said, much as Eisenhower had brought the businessman, each assuming that it was best for the country.

"What Kennedy has decided in the cold war is that the dialogue between Washington and Moscow was getting out of hand."

Last Symposium Meet

In the last informal meeting of the Symposium, Reston spoke briefly and answered questions before about 20 students in Howell Hall auditorium.

Reston said the situation in Africa is not what the Communists had expected to happen after the end of the war. "They had assumed that 'inner-contradictions' of the capitalist system would collapse when the old empires began to fall."

"The remnants of the empires didn't go to the Eastern camp and Western Europe did not fall."

Internally, Kennedy hasn't done at all what he implied during the election. He has played it cool and cozy—we have a number of domestic problems at a time when we are struggling to get a new tax bill, enter the common market, and set up new trade bills."

Later Reston answered a number of questions from the audience. Among them:

Will Kennedy run in 1964?

"Yes, unless he gets into very deep trouble in South Viet Nam, I wouldn't advise you to run against him."

Are labor unions gaining power and what can be done about them?

"Yes, they are gaining too much power—the question is how to curb them. I have not seen presidential power used in a more

NDL Students Should File

Harold Weaver, director of student loan funds, announced yesterday that all students indebted to the National Defense Loan Funds or the University Loan Funds should complete the necessary forms with the management of the Loan Funds office prior to their separation from the institution for any reason.

Failure on the part of a student to check with the manager of the Loan Funds office in person prior to his separation, may jeopardize benefits he may be entitled to under the terms of the Act for repayment.

Any student indebted to the Loan Funds, who intends to leave the University at the end of the current semester, before leaving should first call at the office of the manager of the Loan Funds, 301 Bynum Hall.

The New Colleges

The Greensboro Daily News pointed out in an editorial recently that the University should go slowly in considering offering affiliation to any of the new community colleges which are beginning to spring up in the state.

"Already (the University's) relative standing among other national institutions has fallen in recent decades," the editorial states. "Simply maintaining its present quality will be difficult enough without taking on new campus problems in Charlotte, Wilmington or Asheville. The umbrella of university prestige should not be extended haphazardly over new four-year colleges ,even in such economically plush areas as Charlotte."

This seems to be good advice. The argument against connecting the Consolidated University with a state-wide system of four-year colleges with Chapel Hill as the nerve center are strong. The problems of administration it seems, increass geometrically rather than arithmetically in proportion to growth rate in any educational system. The University already has enough under the present set-up without taking on part of those that will be encountered by the new colleges.

But there are equally good arguments for some sort of close cooperation with some of them.

Already the University here is faced with the problem of educating students whose diversity of economic, educational and social backgrounds is amazingly wide. The motives for seeking a college education are even more widely varied.

With this sort of enrollment ,it is difficult to provide curricula broad enough to provide each student with what he wants and needs in the way of education without becoming a sort of educational catch-all.

Hopefully, the blossoming of some of the new four-year colleges will take some of the burden off the University, paving the way for it to become more selective.

The time has come, painful though the necessity is, for the University to forsake at least part of its egalitarian outlook toward admissions. It cannot continue to be all things to all people .

We do not suggest that the University assume the attitude of an educational aristocrat such as Imperial Harvard, nor that it be as selective as one of its educational neighbors, Davidson—not that this might not be desirable. It is impractical for a state university.

But tightening could be done, and it could be done through cooperation and possibly loose affiliation with some of the new colleges.

Statistics

If every automobile in the nation were equipped with safety belts, highway fatalities would be cut by one-half.

In recent years, that fact has been highly advertised; scarcely a driver exists, we should think, who has not at one time or another heard it. Yet, like the figures that stare from newspaper columns each day, ticking off life after life, estimates of how many lives could have been saved leave little impact upon the average driver. Witness the fact that today ,only 3 per cent of the automobiles on this nation's highways are equipped with safety belts.

The American people, probably the most statistics-conscious people in the world, steadfastly refuse to respond when they hear traffic fatality figures. Figures somehow do not carry the image of dead human beings. They are numbers, not lives.

This week, five nursing students from Duke died in an automobile accident.

Many, when they read the story, were shocked. Quite probably, some students knew one or more of the girls. When the highway new fatality figures appear next week, it will be increased by five. Few, if any, here, at Duke, or across the country will be shocked; few will even pause long enough to realize that there is a connection between the increase and the deaths of the five Duke students.

Still fewer will realize that the statistics on safety belts mean that two or three—possibly all five—of the girls could have been saved.

Here are some oher statistics—remember when you read them that they were derived from incidents like one involving the five Duke students:

—One in four vehicles is in a collision every year.

—Sixty per cent of fatal accidents occur at speeds under 40 MPH.

—Seventy-five per cent of drivers killed were less than 25 miles from home.

—Seat belt users are 60 per cent less likely to have an injury of any kind.

—Fifty per cent are less likely to be killed .

The above figures have been parroted over and over again for some time, almost to the point that they are cliches. Still, only three per cent of American motorists bothered to take them seriously.

Why Medicine Needs Federal Aid

By DR. RALPH JONES
Chairman, Dept. of Medicine
University of Miami

The bill H.R. 4999 is a bill to increase the opportunity for education in the health professions. It is now before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives.

In the following paragraphs I will outline the various provisions of this bill and emphasize its importance to the people of America.

Construction grants for teaching facilities would be provided on a matching plan whereby the Federal government would provide up to 66 2/3% of construction costs; the Institution receiving the grant would be required to provide at least 33 1/3% of the construction cost.

* * *

The urgent need for the Federal government to provide funds for this purpose has been documented by three extensive independent studies during the past three years, none of which have been seriously challenged. Each study has shown that the number of medical students in the United States must be increased by approximately 50% in the next eight years in order to avoid a serious shortage of physicians in this country in the 1970's. Because of the continued growth of our population and the increasing demand by all segments of our society for more service from physicians, facilities for an additional 4,000 medical students must be created.

For nearly a decade the present ratio of the number of physicians to the total population in this country has been constant, but this has been achieved only because nearly one thousand physicians who graduated from medical schools in other countries have immigrated to this country each year.

* * *

It is clear that we must expand our existing medical school facilities and create 20 to 27 new medical schools in this country. This must be done promptly because, from the time a decision is made to create a new medical school until a doctor is graduated requires approximately eight years.

Three independent national surveys during the past three years have shown that private and local sources cannot possibly be expected to provide more than one-third of the capital funds required to construct the facilities which are essential to meet this national need during the next decade. Hence it is essential for the Federal government to provide funds to match private and local funds, if this vital national goal is to be achieved.

The Federal government shares its responsibility with local government, industry and the medical professions in the health of the nation. It is appropriate for the Federal government to provide matching funds, rather than total costs, and to do so, using a formula based on measured need and a careful estimate of the ability of industry and other local sources to participate.

* * *

The importance of this Bill for the University of Miami should be very clear to all who have followed the evolution of our medical school. After nine years, the principal teaching facility is still the coverted servants' quarters of the old Miami-Biltmore Hotel, located seven miles from the Medical Research Building and the teaching hospital. Passage of this Bill would mean that the University would be eligible for (and would almost certainly receive) approximately $6,000,000 this year to facilitate the construction of the desperately needed teaching facilities on the grounds of the Jackson Memorial Hospital.

The second provision in the Bill H.R. 4999 would provide funds for scholarships for medical students, payable by the government to each medical school, at the rate of $1,500 per student for a maximum of one-fourth of the total number of students in each class in that school, on the basis of demonstrated need and competence.

* * *

This provision is considered to be essential for the recruitment of the requisite number of qualified candidates to utilize the new and expanded teaching facilities and to meet the predictable (and present) need of our growing population for more physicians, while maintaining our present standards of excellence of health care in this nation. It is also essential if we are to preserve the principle that this democracy is obligated to provide equal opportunities for education for its citizens.

In 1959 the average personal indebtedness of the graduates of American medical schools was $4,258 at the time of graduation. These, and many other pertiment facts which have been published recently in three separate studies of this problem, leave no doubt of the urgency and the necessity for this provision of H.R. 4999 if we are to preserve one great national resource—the very high quality of the health care of this nation.

* * *

This provision is the only aspect of H.R. 4999 that has had serious opposition. The opposition to this provision is based solely on the fear that Federal scholarships for needy medical students might one day, in the distant future, result in socialized medicine. The arguments advanced to support this fear have no substance. They ignore the evidence for many years of Federal support of needy students in other areas of higher education.

The third provision of H.R. 4999, which has no opposition, is designed to meet a demonstrated national need, based on a decade of experience with an ongoing program. If enacted into law, this provision well might provide the University of Miami with 50% of the construction cost of a new Life Sciences Building.

Bourgeoisie & Proletariat (Frat Snobs Vs. Dorm Rats)

As usual around election time on this campus there can be seen a rift between frat snobs and dorm rats. Now this rift could be something of tremendous value for UNC if it were only a big enough rift. But as it is this antagonism between dorms and fraternities has only led to some mild name calling on both sides. If the rift could only be made bigger, U.N.C. could have a real communist revolution on its hands. This would be exactly the kind of stimulation this campus needs to shake it out of its current state of apathy.

* * *

THE SEEDS for this potential revolution have already been sown. We already have the two necessary images fixed in our minds. On one hand we have the image of the rich, over-fed, over-sexed intoxicated and decadent frat snob. On the other hand we have the image of the poor, scoady, mistreated, but lovable dorm rat.

Now if the New Left would just add to this image some of the philosophy of Marx, Lenin and Trotsky, this campus would be well on its way to a revolution. All that need be pointed out is that the friction that exists between dorm rats and frat snobs is part of a never-ending class struggle. Frat snobs! are the bourgeosie. Dorm rats are the proletariat.

But before a revolution can be it needs to have more than just a philosophy behind it. There must be a feeling of hate on one side and a feeling of utter contempt on the other. There must be some acts of terrorism on both sides. Here are a few things fraternities could do to dorms to produce hate:

* * *

INMAN ALLEN, as student body president and a fraternity man, should make the following decrees:

(1) All dorm televisions to be removed from dorms immediately.
(2) No dorm rat should be allowed to speak to a frat snob, unless the dorm rat is addressed first by the frat snob. Dorm rats violating this law would have their tongues removed.
(3) No dorm rat should ever be allowed to date a sorority girl, or even come close enough to a sorority girl to let his shadow fall on her person. Dorm rats violating this law would be castrated.
(4) Dorm rats should pay due respect to fraternity court by falling into a prostrate position of reverence for five minutes every time they pass it.
(5) All dorms should come under the jurisdiction of the I.F.C. and the dorms should have to comply to the 100% rule. This rule would mean that all dorms which had any dorm rats who failed to make their "c" average would be confiscated by the I.F.C. and turned into a fraternity house. All dorm rats would naturally be compelled to leave.

THE RESTRICTIONS would in all probability disturb the dorm rats. They would resort to acts of terrorism not unlike the O.A.S. Here are just a few things the dorm rat could do to retaliate against the frat snob:

(1) Steal K.A. picture of Robert E. Lee and replace it with a picture of General Grant. (This is terrorism at its height).
(2) Dorm rats should go through rush disguised as Sammy Davis Jr. in order to embarrass fraternities.
(3) Dorm rats should go through rush disguised as Barry Goldwater in order to catch fraternities off guard.
(4) Dorm rats should go through rush disguised as termite inspectors. Little would the frat snobs know that these innocent looking termite inspectors are actually carrying millions of termites and roaches in their termite inspector kits, and as soon as nobody is looking they would let these pests go in the fraternity house just as some prize rushees are about to pledge.
(5) Dorm rats should kidnap sweetheart of Sigma Chi and force her to marry a dorm rat. (This is really going too far. This would be an act of pure and simple perversion to the frat snob.)
(6) Dorm rats should uncover evidence that Silent Sam was a dorm rat. (Blasphemy!)
(7) Dorm rats should have nightly panty raids at the sorority houses. (Keep in mind that this would be a clear-cut violation of the castration law.)

* * *

THIS DORM RAT LIST could go on and on, and so could the fraternity list. But once some of these acts of terrorism are performed the revolution would begin, and UNC would become a better college campus because of it. For it is evident that only through a communist revolution are things made better. The doctrines of Marx and the examples of Lenin, Trotsky, and Stalin have made this great truth clear to us.

So dorm rats remember to hate all frat snobs for the end always justifies the means. And frat snobs remember to have utter contempt for dorm rats. There must not be cooperation between fraternities and dorms. There must be mistrust, suspicion, hate, contempt and violence. Dorm rats throw off your chains! Frat snobs defend your honor and prestige! There must be a revolution!

"Haven't We Got Enough Problems To Be Solved Right Here On Earth?"

The Woman's Place? At Home, Judge Says

GREENSBORO (UPI) — North Carolina's first woman Supreme Court Justice believes women make better jurors than men.

"Women are more realistic than men," said Judge Susie Sharp, "and are more apt to render a true verdict based on evidence than men."

The 54-year-old judge said she wouldn't hesitate for a minute to vote for a woman to hold any public office—from president on down, but added, "I'm of the opinion that the average woman's field is in the home as a wife and mother."

Miss Sharp served for 12 years as a judge in North Carolina's superior court system before being named to the highest state court by Gov. Terry Sanford. She likes to return to her needlepoint her collection of high fidelity operatic records, and her cookbooks, after a tiring day on the bench or in chambers.

* * *

"I'm one of these one-shot cooks," she explained, "I like to make salads, desserts and casseroles—just the kind of cooking a woman doesn't have to do."

The Tar Heel state's first woman Supreme Court judge stands 5 feet 2 inches tall and wears her salt-and-pepper gray hair in a bob. Her favorite courtroom attire, under judicial black robes, is a tailored suit. Between court sessions she lives with her 78-year-old mother in Reidsville, a small manufacturing town located not far from the Virginia line.

North Carolina's superior court judges are reassigned to different districts every six months and during her career in the lower courts she served from one end of the state to the other. Her new post will require her to sit with the court in Raleigh, the state capital.

Judge Sharp was graduated from the University of North Carolina law school in 1929 at the age of 21 and was admitted to the bar in the same year. She practiced law in partnership with her father at Reidsville for the next 20 years and had an excellent reputation as an attorney when in 1949, sh ebecame North Carolina's first woman superior court judge.

"I guess I studied law because my father was a lawyer and I used to hear intriguing stories of his court cases at the dinner table," she said.

"I never expected to be a judge of the superior court and most certainly I never dreamed about the supreme court. This is an honor that comes to few men and fewer women."

Susie Sharp is a stickler for courtroom decorum and when she sits on the bench there is a no-nonsense atmosphere cloaking the judicial proceedings. Explaining her judicial philosophy, she said: "The judge is tampering with people's lives. Solomon was the only one qualified to do it, and he's gone. The only consolation you have is that somebody has got to do it, so you do the best you can."

Physics Report Garbled

To the Editor:

On behalf of the four hundred physics majors here on drag-racing scholarships, we the undersigned would like to express our amazement on your explanation of Dr. Kirkwood's talk Wednesday night. We realize that you had a deadline to meet, but the report was rather grossly garbled. Dr. Kirkwood's main point was that the spontaneous generation of the building blocks of life was indeed highly probable in the conditions existing some six billion years ago. The second law of thermodynamics, stating that the most energetic reaction will be the preferred one, supports this hypothesis and not the contrary, as you stated.

Judging from comments overheard afterwards, you were not the only ones to miss the point. We suspect that this confusion is a manifestation of an attitude which Dr. Kirkwood described when he spoke of those who publicly boast of their ignorance of science. We noticed that many in the audience stopped listening the minute science was introduced into the talk and did not even try to understand or follow the discussion, as they would have with any other subject.

Since the article was so badly written and/or edited, we will be happy to write further on the subject or talk to interested persons.

Prof. Byerly Speaks At Greensboro

"Taxpayers and newspapermen have something in common," a University of North Carolina journalism professor told Greensboro Rotarians Monday.

"Both may be challenged," said Prof. Ken Byerly, "so neither should ever report anything that can be challenged successfully.

"Here the similarity ends," said the former newspaper publisher. "Income tax reports are filed just once a year, and may be challenged only by Uncle Sam or the state.

Often Criticized

"But hundreds of news stories are reported every day. Any one of them may be and often is challenged or criticized by some or many of the millions of newspaper readers."

Prof. Byerly said that newspapers have a further comparative disadvantage. "Government will approve an income tax report that has been challenged, once it is proved to be correct. But newspaper stories, no matter how accurate they may be, will never be accepted by some readers who are involved personally or have strong prejudices on the subjects reported."

Turning to editorials, he asked, "Did you ever stop to think that a newspaper is the only business—and it must be a business, too, or it won't exist long—that is expected to risk a loss of revenue, or even its very existence, by taking a stand publicly on every important and controversial issue?

Needs Judgment

"A reporter needs more than ability to gather and write news," he said. "He sometimes needs courage, but courage alone can be a bad and dangerous thing. Even more he needs judgment, accuracy and understanding. He must know his reaers' interests, yet also be able to place himself in the position of the people he is writing about."

Cosmos II Launched By Russians

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union launched another unmanned satellite into orbit around the earth Friday as part of its study of the cosmos for future manned space flights, the Soviet news agency Tass announced.

The new satellite, Cosmos II, was reported performing well in an orbit approximately as planned and roughly similar to that of Cosmos I, launched March 16. The weight of neither satellite was announced.

The main purpose of the satellite, like its predecessor, is to gather data on cosmic ray radiation and other dangers to men in space and improving space vehicle construction. Wester.. observers believed the research program was part of the advance work necessary for placing a man on the moon.

Tass said Cosmos II carried a multi-channel radio-telemetric system, radio technical devices for measuring the trajectory, a short-wave transmitter and other scientific instruments.

Two UNC Alumni Lecture On Films

Two UNC alumni who have risen to positions of importance in the world of documentary films, George Stoney and Borden Mace, are here this week where they have lectured to students as guests of the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures.

Stoney, a native of Winston-Salem, is the 1937 graduate who has made over 35 documentary films and is respected in the nation as one of the most able of movie makers. He now teaches at Columbia University. Mace, a 1941 graduate from Beaufort, is president of Louis DeRoachmond Production Company, the first documentary film company in this country.

Audio-Visual Head

Mace was head of the University Audio-Visual Center while here. Stoney, who studied writing under Sam Selden and Phillips Russell, says he is best remembered "as distributor in the area of the Greensboro Daily News."

Several of Stoney's films have been made in North Carolina, a region of which he is especially fond. He has produced, directed and/or written Tarheel films, including "Mr. Williams Wakes Up," starring UNC professor J. O. Bailey (1947), "Tar Heel Family" (1950), and others.

Stoney, who says he makes an average of 2 1/2 movies a year, has a film now in script having to do with trained nurses, which he is to do for the Heart Association. Talking about this film yesterday, the veteran movie-maker expressed criticism of the education process.

Students Cut Off From Reality

"There is a grave danger in the school's separating students from experience," he said. "I always talk with the subjects my films concern before I begin the picture and I've been talking lately with these nurses. They are 19 or so and right out of high school and they meet problems every day. They are not loaded down with education as, for instance, are my graduate students at Columbia.

"The problem with my students is that they have been going to school so long that they are cut off from the real problems. These nurses stare it in the face every day and are equipped to handle it. They can hold hands and comfort a dying man. "That's something most students in a university could not do."

Some of Stoney's best known documentary films, many of them made in the south, are "Book for Safe Keeping," a police training film; "All My Babies;" "The Invader;" "The American Road," the 50th anniversary film he did for Ford Motor Co.; "The Boy Who Saw Through," and the 50th anniversary film on the Girl Scouts, "Something for the Girls," which he describes as his current best seller.

Mature Students Here

Stoney expressed admiration of the "maturity of the students" with whom he had talked here, a maturity which he said, could not have been matched in his day. "There was a comradarie then, though, which existed between students and faculty members here like it did at no other University I have seen. The tone was set by Dr. Graham, I believe. As a freshman I knew all my professors personally."

While here Stoney viewed film productions accomplished by students in the RTVMP department.

Both Mace and Stoney were attracted to the University by the presence of John Grierson, the "granddaddy of documentary film making," who is a principal speaker at the current Carolina Symposium.

Two approaches to the "man's deodorant" problem

If a man doesn't mind shaving under his arms, he will probably find a woman's roll-on satisfactory. Most men, however, find it simpler and surer to use Mennen Spray Deodorant. Mennen Spray was made to get through to the skin, where perspiration starts. And made to work all day. More men use Mennen Spray than any other deodorant. How about you? 64¢ and $1.00 plus tax

Alumni-Varsity Kickoff In Kenan Today At 2

By ED DUPREE

Kenan Stadium will be the secene of one of the most colorful athletic events ever to take place at UNC this afternoon at 2.Including this year's seniors, the Alumni roster numbers over 50 players, a number of them All-American and All-ACC football players for Carolina in the past. UNC's first All-American, George Barclay, will coach the alumni.

Charlie "Choo-Choo" Justice, the Tar Heel All-American who played from 1946-1949, heads the list of Alumni players. Choo Choo will be used mostly as a kick off and punt specialist, since he has passed his playing shape by a few points. Justice holds so many UNC records that they are countless. He scored more points in his career than any other Tar Heel—234. He picked up more yards rushing—scored more touchdowns—39. He 2,814. He completed more passes from his tailback post than any other back in UNC history—173. He threw more touchdown passes—26. And he had the best punting average—42.5 yards.

But Justice is only a face in the crowd. Stars, past, recent, and present, will suit up for the Alumni-Varsity game as Coach Jim Hickey presents his 1962 football team before the fans in Kenan Stadium. Some haven't said definitely that they could make the game.

Jack Cummings, one of the greatest passers in UNC history, will probably start at quarterback if he plays. Rip Hawkins, an All-ACC performer for the 1960 team and a profesional linebacker with the Minnesota Vikings, will be back. Ronnie Koes, one of the top all-time UNC centers and Al Goldstein, a 1958 All-American end for Carolina have been invited to play.

At halfback, Larry Parker may be back at his old position. Bob Shupin ,a near-perfect extra point kicker a few years back, will play. Wade Smith and John Schroeder, assistant freshman football coaches here, will play for the Alumni. Many of the present Tar Heels played on the same team with Smith and Schroeder.

CHARLIE JUSTICE, the man who thrilled UNC football fans during the 1946-49 era, will be one of the former Tar Heel stars participating in this afternoon's Alumni-Varsity game. Choo Choo is a member of the National Football Hall of Fame.

UNC football fans get a preview of Coach Jim Hickey's 1962 football team this afternoon in the first annual Alumni-Varsity football game, sponsored by the Monogram Club.

Coach Hickey has not announced a starting lineup, but under his new three-platoon system it is certain that a number of players will see a lot of action. The first, or starting team will be designated the Blue unit. Sandy Kinney will probably quarterback the Blues, with Barry Westfall or Ken Willard at fullback, Ward Marslender at one half and Joe McLamb or Ronnie Jackson at the other.

In the line for the Blues, John Runco and John Hammett will probably start at the ends, Jim Alderman and Vic Esposito will man the tackle posts, Duff Greene and Jack Tillery will be at the guards, and Joe Craver will start at center.

Craver and Marslender will co-captain the 1962 team.

Two or more teams on the varsity squad will join with about 30 Alumni and graduating seniors to furnish the oppositon.

The spring game concludes 20 days of spring practice for the UNC footballers. Hickey thinks the off-season drills were most successful. In addition to the Blues, he has designated his offensive specialists as the Rams and the defensive team as the Tar Heels.

The new UNC three-platoon system is, of course, similar to the system Paul Dietzel used at LSU before he took over the head coaching job at West Point.

President Joe Davies of the Monogram Club says there is no way of estimating what the size of the crowd will be but adds that response of alumni in buying tickets in advance has been excellent.

Tickets are priced at $1 each, with no reserved seats, and will be on sale at the Kenan Stadium box offices. Proceeds go to the Monogram Club's scholarship fund.

UNC Frosh Win Golf And Tennis

UNC's yearling golf and tennis teams came out victorious in freshman action Thursay as the Tar Baby linksmen all but wrapped up the Big Four Tourney while the tennis team was defeating Duke, 5-4.

The Big Four Tournament, actually reduced to a "Big Three" now that the State College team has dropped out of the competition was practically over as the Tar Babies increased their lead to 26 strokes after two rounds. Vin Giles, the Carolina ace from Lynchburg, Va., leads in the medalist race with a one-uner-par 141.

UNC Beats Ohio U Golfers By 20-7

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina rode the one-under par performances of Jay Harris and Abe Andes to a 20-7 victory over Ohio University Thursday—the Tar Heels' fifth win in six dual meet starts.

Harris, a junior from Mebane and Andes, the Miami Shores, Fla., sophomore shared medalist honors with a 71 while Don Howells fired a 74 to lead the Mid-American Conference champions from Athens, Ohio.

Howells and Bill Harding were the only Bobcats to win individual matches as Harding stopped Carolina's George Murphy for the first time this year.

All-American Pete Green continued his unbeaten string as he polished off Nick Keri, 3-0. Carolina, which has lost only to defending national champion Purdue, dominated best-ball activity with 3 1/2 of a possible 9 points.

Ed Kenney's Tar Heel linksmen face Navy at Finley Golf Course on Thursday of next week in their last match before opening ACC play against North Carolina State on April 16.

Pete Green (UNC) def. Nick Keri (0), 3-0. Jay Harris (UNC) def. Jerry Mollencop (0), 2½-½. Best Ball, UNC 3-Ohio 0.

Fencers Host Meet At 1:00

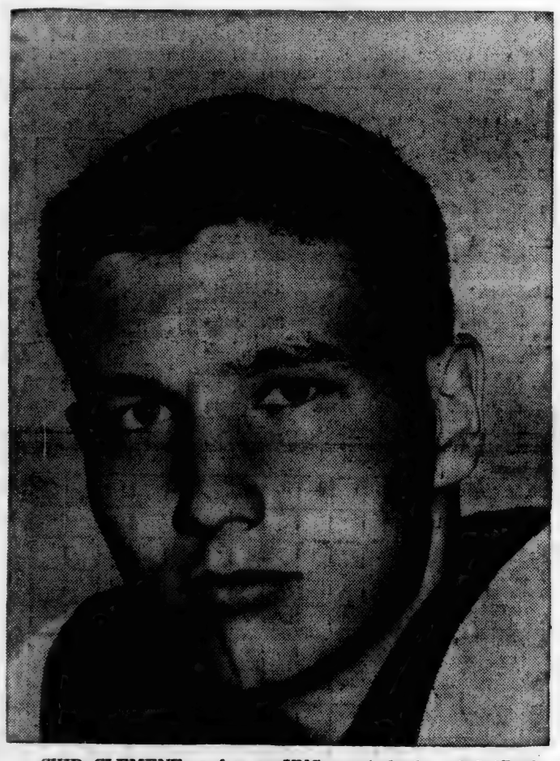
Tar Heel team captain Don Hubbard captured 15th in the foil competition of the 1962 NCAA Fencing Championships last weekend at Ohio State. Hubbard paces UNC this afternoon at 1:00 in their final home meet of the season—a three way affair with Duke and Johns Hopkins. The fencing meet will be held on the main floor of Woollen Gym.

Blazing away with brilliant victories over such top-flight competition as Dick Rothenberg of Columbia (placed 2nd), John McCarthy of Navy (4th), Wiviott of Wisconsin (6th), Levin of Brandeis (9th), Fitzgerald of Detroit (10th), Hershorn of Penn, and Elbert of the Air Force Academy (14th), Hubbard was chiefly responsible for UNC's 23rd place finish in the national meet.

Jon Weber in the epee competition and sabre man Tom Welch combined with Hubbard to win a total of 29 bouts. Hubbard's record was 20-13.

"Hubbard's record at the nationals surpasses anything ever done by any of our previous individual entries in the past," commented fencing coach Pebley Barrow.

Fencers from 36 schools were entered in the championships at Columbus.



SKIP CLEMENT, a former UNC quarterback and halfback, will be in the Alumni lineup for today's football game. Clement, a professional now with the Pittsburgh Steelers, has been assisting Coach Jim Hickey during spring practice.

RIP HAWKINS, "The Ripper," now a linebacker with the professional Minnesota Vikings, will be a big obstacle for UNC's varsity backs in this afternoon's first annual Alumni-Varsity game, sponsored by the Monogram Club. An All-ACC center and linebacker for the 1960 team, Rip led the team in tackles.

UNC's baseball and track teams hit the road this weekend for contests with N. C. State and South Carolina, respectively.

Coach Dale Ranson and his cindermen left for Columbia yesterday afternoon and will face a Gamecock track team today led by hurdler Charlie Bradshaw and broad jumping ace Dan Upton.

John O'Bannon will furnish stiff competition for Upton in the jumping event, Jim Brown will be tough in the hurdles.

High jumper Tom Clark and pole vaulter Heath Whittle, who took first in the Florida Relays, are other top Tar Heel entrants.

UNC will be looking for its first ACC baseball victory at Raleigh this afternoon against the Wolfpack. Dave Murr, who pitched seven innings of two-hit, two-run ball Tuesday against Wake Forest may get the nod in today's encounter.

CRAM COURSE NO. 2: BIOLOGY

The grisly shadow of final exams looms over us, so today in this column instead of merry quips and homely saws, you will find hard facts—quick cram courses to help you through the ordeal ahead.

Last week I gave you a rapid survey of Modern European History. Now let us turn to Biology.

Biology is divided into several phyla, or classes. First is the protozoa, or one-celled animal. All life stems from the one-celled animal. Over a space of millions of years, life slowly evolved until today we have animals with as many as 12 cells. Some larger mammals claim they have 14 to 16 cells, but you know how larger mammals lie.

The second class of animals is the periphera—a shadowy category that borders often on the vegetable. Take, for example, the sponge. The sponge is definitely an animal. The washcloth, on the other hand, is definitely not.

Next we come to the arthropoda, or insects. Most people, of course, find insects fairly repulsive—and yet, if one will but look, there is exquisite beauty in the insect world. Who does not remember the lovely insect poems of William Cullen Sigafoos—such enchanting lyrics as Tumbling Along with the Tumbling Tumblebug, Fly Gently, Sweet Aphid, and Gnats My Mother Taught Me. Mr. Sigafoos has been inactive since the invention of DDT.

Our next category is the mollusca—lobsters, shrimp, and the like. Lobsters are generally found under rocky projections on the ocean bottom. Shrimp are generally found in a circle around a small bowl containing cocktail sauce. Marlboro Cigarettes are generally found at any tobacco counter or vending machine.

What have Marlboro Cigarettes got to do with biology? Well, actually, not very much. It must be remembered, however, that the makers of Marlboro pay me for writing this column, and they are inclined to get surly if I fail to mention their product.

Mind you, I enjoy singing the praises of Marlboro—and so will you once you try that flavorful tobacco, that fine filter which lets the flavor come through undiminished. It is a great pleasure to smoke Marlboros and a great pleasure to write about them, but sometimes, I must confess, I find it a bit difficult to work the commercial into the column. Some years ago, for example, I did a piece about Alexander the Great, and, believe you me, it took a heap of stretching to drop in a plug for Marlboro. The way I finally managed it was to have Alexander go to the Oracle at Delphi and say, "Oracle, I have conquered the world and tasted all its pleasures, but somehow I am not content. I know that somewhere there must be a joy I have not yet experienced." To which the Oracle replied,

There is no great difficulty distinguishing the two

"Yes, Alexander, there is such a joy, but, alas, the time is not yet. I refer to Marlboro Cigarettes which will not be invented for another 2500 years." Whereupon Alexander fell into a sulk from which he never recovered . . . Well sir, there is no question I sold a lot of cigarettes with this ingenious commercial, but the gang down at the American Academy of Arts and Letters gave me a mighty good razzing, you may be sure.

But I digress. Back to biology, and the most advanced phylum of all—the chordata, or vertebrates. There are two kinds of vertebrates—those whose backbones run horizontally and those whose backbones run vertically. Generally, there is no great difficulty in distinguishing the two varieties. A fish, for instance, has a horizontal backbone, and a man has a vertical backbone. Occasionally, however, you run into a problem—like a fish who swims upright and a man who spends most of his time in the sack. How, in such a case, do you tell one from another? Science struggled with this sticky question for centuries, but finally Sigafoos of M.I.T. came up with a brilliantly simple answer. Offer the creature a Marlboro. If it is a fish, it will refuse. If it is Homo sapiens, it will accept. In fact, the more sapient, the quicker the acceptance.

The makers of Marlboro, upright vertebrates all, remind you that their fine cigarettes are available in pack or box wherever cigarettes are sold in any of the 50 states.

New Officers To Take Oaths

Newly elected officers of the executive, judicial and legislative branches of student government will be inaugurated at the final session of the Thirty-second Legislative Assembly in Howell Hall Monday night at 7:30.

President Inman Allen, Vice-President Mike Lawler, Secretary Judy Clark and Treasurer Bill Ciswell will be sworn in by George Campbell, chairman of the Constitutional Council. Campbell will also administer the oath of office to the new members of the Men's and Women's Councils.

New legislators will then be sworn in by Vice-President Mike Lawler.

Following the inauguration, the Thirty-third Legislative Assembly will convene to hear President Allen's inaguration address.

At the conclusion of Allen's address, the legislature will elect the following officers: speaker pro tempore, clerk, filing clerk and sergeant-at-arms.

Chairmen of the Rules, Finance, Ways and Means, and Judicial committees will also be elected at this session.

Aycock Dormitory Closed One Week

The Interdormitory Council has officially closed the social room of Aycock Dormitory as a result of the abuse it received last weekend.

"This thing has been blown up completely out of proportion," said Bruce Welch, the new IDC president. "We've decided to close the social room in order to pressure the majority of residents in Aycock into influencing the few who don't appreciate their social room privileges."

According to IDC Court Chairman John Gould, the room will remain closed until April 15. Gould said, "If any further mistreatment of social room privileges occur the room will be closed for the remainder of the semester."

"The IDC," he continued, "will take the same action against any dorm which misuses the social room privilege. The privilege will be suspjended for as long as the Council feels necessary."

$300 Is Due From Unpaid Pledges

The 1962 Campus Chest Drive netted more than $5,000 through solicitations and special projects in this spring's campaign, co-chairmen Charlie Shelton and Jeanie MacDougall announced yesterday.

This figure includes $4,710.94 which is already in the bank and more than $300 in accounts receivable (money pledged to the Campus Chest but not yet paid). Those persons who have pledged money but have not yet paid will be contacted during the first part of next week, starting Monday.

Approximately $850 was raised by the Campus Chest Carnival, about $600 was raised by the auction and more than $3,500 was solicited from the students. The Carolina Women's Council raised $135 by shining shoes in Y-Court.

Funds raised through this year's solicitations drive more than doubled the amount raised by last year's drive.

Money Used

The money will be distributed in the following manner: $1,000 will go to the Mental Health Clinic for children at Butner, N. C.; $753 will will go to the Tours Scholarship Fund and the remainder of the money will be distributed as equitably as possible between the American Friends Service, the World University Service and to Dr. Thomas Gibson at Memorial Hospital to further his research on an improved electrocardiogram fo hospital and space-astonaut use.

In the drawing for "door prizes" given at the carnival, Walter Dellinger won a Madras sport coat from Milton's, James Gerardi won two steak dinners at the Ranch House and Tim Burnett won five 20-minute backrubs from senior physical therapists at Whitehead Dorm. All students who contributed a dollar to the Campus Chest were eligible for the drawing.

Possible Suit

Shelton also said that the Campus Chest Committee has employed a Charlotte attorney to investigate the possibility of bringing suit against Ross Manning Shows. Shelton said that Manning failed to fulfill a contract with the Campus Chest signed on February 23 in which he agreed to provide five carnival rides for the Campus Carnival on March 17.

Shelton estimated that the Campus Chest lost about $500 when the rides were not provided. The Campus Chest was to receive 15% of the gross intake from the rides.

Bunche To Talk On World Affairs

United Nations Undersecretary Ralph Bunche will return to the UNC campus Tuesday night to speak on the general state of world affairs. His speech at 8 in Memorial Hall is being sponsored by the Carolina Forum.

Bunche spoke here in 1956 in connection with the Symposium. His speech then was on colonialism, and he then stressed the close relationship of colonialism and race relations.

He then stated that on a tour of India, there were three questions that were asked him most frequently. The first was about Kashmir (a disputed province on the India-Pakistan border), and second and third were questions on colonialism an race relations.

Nobel Prize Winner

In his address Tuesday night, Bunche is expected to stress the problems of Africa and the Congo, and what the UN is trying to do about these problems.

He has served the UN since 1946 and has won a Nobel Prize for his efforts to promote harmony among nations.

Bunche served as mediator for the UN in the Palestine dispute and directed the negotiations which resulted in the four armistice Agreements between Israel and the Arab states.

In 1956 he organized and supervised the UN Emergency Force during the Suez crisis. He also organized United Nations operation in the Congo.

A UN Founder

Prior to his joining the United Nations, Bunche was with the State Department and was a delegate to many of the formative conferences of the UN.

He holds a Ph.D. degree from Harvard and resigned as a professor there in 1950, after organiizng the Political Science Department.

In addition to the Nobel Prize, Bunche has been the recipent of several other honorary degrees and awards including Phi Beta Kappa and the Four Freedoms Award.

Chancellor House Given Scroll By Junior Class

In a surprise ceremony Saturday afternoon during the halftime of the Alumni football game, Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House was honored by the Junior Class for his long and faithful service at the University of North Carolina.

The scroll, presented to Chancellor House by Howard Holsenbeck of the Junior Class Cabinet, read as follows:

"In behalf of the students of the University of North Carolina we wish to express our gratitude for the years of inspiration and devoted service which you have given to all those affiliated with this university.

"Your example and enthusiasm have contributed to our appreciation of education and our love for Carolina. Indeed, your personality has become an integral part of the beloved traditions."

The inscription was signed by Richard Vinroot, president of the Junior Class, and Beth Walker, secretary.

Chancellor House first came to Carolina as an undergraduate in 1912. He graduated as President of Phi Bete Kappa in 1918. He returned in 1926, serving as secretary to President Woodburn.

Eight years later he was appointed Chancellor of the University and served in that position until 1957. Since then he has been a Professor of English and Classics.

'Smelly' Movies?

The Raleigh Times was apparently disturbed this week with the public's taste in motion pictures. Taking a cue from the Academy Awards nominees, the Times asked "What does it take to make a good movie?"

It then goes on to answer its own question:

It's a little hard to figure the answer to that one. But judging from the list of nominees for the Academy Awards this year, the movies has to be about some unpleasant subject, preferably something unpleasant sexually.

One of the cleaner nominees is a sympathetic view of lawless street gangs in Ne wYork. Another is about a call girl and a gigalo. Still another features a refugee woman who is notably free with her charms. Another concerns a spinster who sees folly in her chaste ways and picks up the first salesman who comes along. Another tells the story of a girl who went to the insane asylum because of the strain of having refused sex with her sweetheart. Still another stars a reformed child molester. And another nominee tells of a whispering campaign charging two teachers with sexual perversion. The last of the sorry lot tells the story of a woman who procures Italian boys for lonely American women.

All this, presumably, is art. It all seems to fit into the pattern that if it smells bad enough it is really art.

The really sad part of all this smelly stuff in the movie houses is that if the public didn't support it by buying tickets ,it wouldn't be art long. And if the public would stop going to the movies which feature these things, pretty soon the public would begin to get some good—and decent—movies.

Although we're not sure of all the movies the Times is referring to, we gather that "The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone," "West Side Story," "The Mark," "Two Women," "Splendor in the Grass," "The Children's Hour," and "Summer and Smoke" are among those falling into the Times category of "smelly stuff."

We will have to agree with the Times that at least two of these movies are pretty "smelly." But even these two aren't offensive because they deal directly or indirectly with sexual themes. They stink because they're poorly done.

The Times, however, is apparently not interested in the quality of a production, but whether it is fit fare for Aunt Minnie's sewing circle. And while Aunt Minnie makes great doilies, she's not exactly noted for her critical ability.

What the Times seems to overlook is that art, to a great or small degree, imitates life. Today's motion pictures are just beginning to reflect some of the realities that exist whether the Times likes them or not.

Some movies, unfortunately, deal with their themes poorly; some, as the Times implies, aren't interested in theme at all, but purely in box-office receipts.

Some of the new freedom gained through gradually relaxing censorship has manifested itself in slipshod attempts to cover up bad art with blatant sexuality.

But this does not mean that there is no place in movies for sexual themes. Indeed, these themes need more, not less attention.

OAS Indicts Itself

If there remains any doubt in the mind of any as to the level of barbaric ruthlessness to which the French Secret Army has sunken, let that doubt be dispelled now.

There was a time when the OAS symbolized a cause which it could not be condoned, could be understood. The OAS consisted of men who felt strongly that Algeria should remain French. They felt strongly enough to fight and kill.

But the French people have indicated, by their support of President Charles de Gaulle, that the will of the majority is that Algeria be governed by Algerians.

When a peace treaty was negotiated between the French and the Moslems of Algeria, the OAS called upon the French people to rise in revolt. They promised to bathe Algeria in the blood of Moslems.

But the French people did not rise in revolt. And the OAS, castigated now by both the French and the Moslems, has turned its cause into a bloody vendetta of hatred and revenge.

The battle reached its lowest, most depraved depths when OAS gunmen walked through a Moslem hospital, killing defenseless patients in an orgy of death.

If there remains any Frenchmen —or any persons anywhere—who still delude themselves into thinking that the OAS fights bravely for a proud cause, this senseless slaying should overcome the delusions.

The French government, supported by the French people, should spare no effort in tracking down every member and bringing him to justice.

'Russian Letter' Cites 'Benefits' Of Communism

As evening lowers, Mikhail Suslov, a student at the University of Moscow, writes to an American friend overseas:

"Dear Roger,

"I was glad to get your last letter, in excellent Russian—you really keep in practice, don't you? I'll keep writing in English, just to see if I can match you. I'm glad you've made the dean's list again, but let me save that for another letter. Right now I'll take up your new ideological points which have bothered me for several days.

"You start out by saying that Communism destroys incentive by throttling the individual. Now stop and think—don't you know you're just repeating old slogans that the wisest American observers have dropped? In the capitalist system a man can only advance himself at the cost of his fellow workers. An employee getting a raise feels nervous and uneasy, for he sees the envious looks of his companions, and knows that their loss is his gain. In their hearts the capitalist laborers know they are being exploited, and so the phrase 'Every man for himself' is a popular one in all the capitalist-enslaved nations.

"Here under socialism you can feel the difference. Our unvoiced slogan is, 'Every man for everyone else.' And the only restriction is that which we find in the basic principle: From each according to his ability, to each according to his need. In socialism there is no jealousy, for a worker, in advancing himself, promotes the others along with him. 'Every month brings us closer to Communism, the perfect altruism of a free, cooperative, and classless society.

"Marxism is palpably near. Khrushchev hopes to attain it by 1981. The magic phrase, 'builder of Communism,' fits him superbly. As we build it day by day, and see it rising in farm and factory, we throb with proud excitement. But what have you to look forward to under capitalism? Many of your political leaders are actually looking backward, calling themselves 'conservatives.' And these are perhaps the most realistic, for they seem to admit that no one, apart from the property class, has any real future in a capitalistic economy.

"And how can you tell me—I translate your own remark back into English — t h a t Communism 'strangles the religion instinct?' This is pure jargon, the jargon of an exploited people. You can hang the 'instinct' label on anything you don't understand. Orthodox religion is not an instinct; it's a habit. When Communism is established people will see that the real brotherhood of man lies not in the worship of a medieval Deity but in the voluntary, unselfish cooperation of fellow laborers in the classless economy promised by Marx. When this true fraternity is with us, religion will perish—not from state decree, but from obsolescence.

"I have to study now, but I'll write again in a few days. I hope to see you again next summer.

"Regards,
"Mikhail Suslov"

He seals the letter. Outside, the twilight settles eerily on snowclad Moscow.

Please—No More Bunk About Banning The Bomb

On the campus scene has appeared another "peace" group. This one is called the Chapel Hill Peace Study Group. Just what this group will produce no one knows, but the prospect of its producing something of value seems almost hopeful.

Set up "with the purpose of studying and discussing proposals for peace and disarmament put forth by various governments," this group seems to have started off by lending a touch of realism to what in the past has been a hopelessly idealistic movement.

The product of past "peace" groups seems to me rather simple in nature. As I size them up they start and end with the line of attack:

1. The Bomb is poisoning the atmosphere.

2. This causes nasty things to happen,

3. Therefore, the bomb is bad.

4. Therefore, we must ban the bomb.

To this I say;

5. This is BUNK.

But such runs the black and white argument of the pacifists. They completely blot out of the argument the whole problem of cause, i.e., What is the prime motivating factor behind the building and testing of the bomb? Is there a need for it all? And, is this the lesser of the two evils?

The pacifists seems to hope to refuse to admit, or simply deny, the existence of the Russians, Soviet Imperialism and Communism as forces which are operating with the goal of the overthrow and destruction of our values—religious, political, economic and social. It is as if the ban of the bomb movement, the latest degeneration of the peace movement is a form of mere escapism. Perhaps it stills the fears of the pacifists but banning the bomb does not by any means solve the problem—or even touch upon it. Indeed they seem blind to the problem itself—Communism.

It must be remembered that, at this point in time one of the key deterrents against such a cataclysmic overthrow of our society is the bomb. This may be an unpleasant thing to realize but it is a military fact of life that cannot be winked at. Whether we like it or not—and nobody really likes the prospect of poisoning our atmosphere (even by less than one percent)—this we must do.

Thus we have two evils:

1. our destruction—by bomb or surrender.

2. our preservation—by having a bomb.

We are damned if we do and damned if we don't But we stand less of a chance of being damned if we arm to defend ourselves. Then why do these tests go on? Do we not have a bomb now? Yes, but the possession of an out-of-date bomb does no one any good. We must develop bigger and better—ludicrous as it sounds.

Our prime alternative is disarmament. Here we have attempted to reach agreement with our protagonist, but the time is not yet ripe and we can only hope and negotiate, and negotiate—still more. We have spent the last 16 years at this in Geneva. The volumes filled with the minutes of these disarmament talks would provide reading material to keep a few hundred people busy reading through a few lifetimes—if they go at it 24 hours a day from the time they first pop out of the oven. Even here, the quality of our weapons is all important in dealing with an enemy who still understands only the limits set by physical force—our force. These feeble talks exist at the mercy of some equilibrium of weapons development. For in the course of the talks, discoveries and new bombs can alter drastically the positions of the negotiators. Thus if we lose the arms race, we lose all as well. We have to gain in the race in order to have hope of winning—or at least tying.

But we must talk on for this is our only hope as I see it. We must keep talking and keep testing for they go together. To ban the bomb gets us nowhere—and it will have us lose.

To understand why we will lose requires a study of what Communism is and hopes to be. The Reds want the world and they won't stop until they get it one way or another. But not only do they want the world but they also want it their way. They want our way of life—and we are dedicated to protect it. How we protect that which we love may be a bitter pill to swallow but it is a necessity, that demands it.

It is important that we as Americans realize what the leaders of the Communist world have in mind. It is not co-existence. This may come about, only if we resist takeover long enough. This co-existence is only the latest tactic — a smoke screen to neutralize the weak-minded and the weak-willed in our society who cannot comprehend what the power struggle is all about. The history of man is written in terms of power struggle of one sort or another, but this one is not the hot war guns-type of struggle. It is the cold war, bread and butter brand and we must understand and realize the nature of this new form of religion called Communism.

But for the sake of ourselves, let us hope that the resultant form of action of this new group is not the usual putrid run of fickle idealistic dribble somehow destined to be designed to attract the sympathy of some dubiously sophisticated collection such as the DAR or some auxiliary of frustrated old women in Sanduskee.

Seek out all and investigate all of the related problems here. The problem cannot be handled any other way. So, please, no more BUNK.

Dull Edged Frat Logic Is Blasted

It is now April.

The cherry trees are blossoming, the flowers are blooming, and the Arboretum is beginning to fill up in the evenings.

The season for snow is clearly past.

So let's get off it, pledges Strubing and May, and let the sunshine melt a little of that snow that you have been trying to heap upon us.

There is a rather elementary axiom in logic, pledges, which states that if A equals B and B equals C, then A equals C also. Therefore, pledges, when you say that fraternity membership is based on congeniality and that sharpness is the reason that a member is congenial, I really don't think that you have shown that (I quote you) "a fraternity is based on congeniality, not sharpness . . ."

As for selectivity, pledges, you are quite right. I am selective in choosing my friends and I am quite willing that you should have that same privilege. It's just that I like to think that my selections are based on reasons a little more logical than those of race, religion and that dirty ole word, money.

I also think, pledges, that a two minute rational reading of my previous letter would perhaps suggest that I do not believe, as you seem to think I do, that the donning of a fraternity pin brings about a rise in IQ.

And finally your statement that a fraternity is burdensome, but not really burdensome because you love it so much, really needs no comment.

Minister's Book Analyzes Sit-Ins

By FRANCES GOINS

Diary of a Siit-In by Merrill Proudfoot. UNC Press, 1962. $5.

The diary of the Knoxville, Tenn., lunch counter sit-ins, June, 1960, fostered by the Negro students of Knoxville College, is written by their professor and active sympathizer, Dr. Merrill Proudfoot, an ordained Presbyterian minister.

Dr. Proudfoot, white, writes a detailed, factual and appealing account of the movement against racial discrimination in Knoxville with his ears tuned to the prejudiced retorts of the "first class" southern citizenry.

The diary is the actual chronicle of the events as they transpired. No names, places, incidents, or comments were invented by the author. Attached to his diary is Dr. Proudfoot's evaluation and moral explanation of the sit-ins.

Spurred by the success of students in Greensboro, N. C., February, 1960, the Knoxville demonstrators desegregated at least 16 lunch places where Negroes were not eating before. The sit-ins were aimed at the counters in the variety and drug stores downtown.

The sit-ins were non-violent in nature and conducted by well-disciplined Negroes and white sympathizers. Clashes with enraged whites and with the city police force were minimized. The plan was to demonstrate and then to negotiate with the controlling businessmen in that order until desegregation of the counters was accomplished. The climax came when the Negroes effectively boycotted downtown Knoxville.

The Negroes were divided into small groups and schooled on how to conduct themselves in a sit-in. Dr. Proudfoot, a regular participant in the daily noontime sit-ins, was charged with training the new recruits. He devised and revised rules for non-violent sit-ins:

1. Each delegation must have an adult Negro leader.

2. Stay in your seat facing the counter; no wandering around the store.

3. No knives or other sharp instruments, no smoking; men will not wear hats at the counters. (To avoid a tough look.)

4. You are to "ignore heckling, blows and other attempts to provoke." Do not make caustic remarks.

5. Do not eat or drink at the counter unless it is served by the employees.

6. Do not hide your face with your hands.

7. If you chew gum, do it so people hardly notice it.

8. H o t weather demonstrators "should always be neatly dressed in clean clothing, and should be careful to avoid 'B.O.' "

Although under constant strain, Dr. Proudfoot found glimpses of humor in the situation. In the all-day picket against Richs' department store, a Unitarian sympathizer, Harry Wiersema, carried a sign reading "We Are All Brothers in Christ" until his pastor came to his rescue with another sign.

Dr. Proudfoot notes the effect of the sit-ins "on the way of life of the average Negro has been small, but on his morale the effect has been tremendous." A slumbering giant—the Negro population — has been awakened. "For the first time many of our Southern communities have become aware that their Negro residents constitute an economic and political force to be reckoned with."

In the foreword, Dr. Frank Graham, former president of the Consolidated University, gives the effect of the movement an even broader scope. He writes, "This Southern youth movement . . . is a local expression of a world revolution of the colonial, colored, and exploited peoples of the earth."

The book is a keen insight into the nature of sit-ins and gives the basic philosophy of non-violent movements.

'Lester' And 'Earl' Bring Bluegrass Music To UNC

By STARK SUTTON

Bluegrass music has been around for quite a while. Nashville's Grand Ole Opry has featured it for years, and so have countless small radio stations from West Virginia to the Texas Panhandle. But it took Lester Flatt and Earl Scruggs to make all America sit up and notice it.

Both Lester and Earl, along with the Foggy Mountain Boys, will be in Chapel Hill on Wednesday night for a Graham Memorial sponsored concert to be held in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m.

Tickets may be picked up for one dollar apiece at Kemp's in downtown Chapel Hill or at Graham Memorial.

"Sweet Guitar-Picker"

Good friends as well as professional partners, Flatt and Scruggs have been together since 1945. Earl acts as business manager of the team, and Lester—who has been called "the sweetest guitar-picker north of the Rio Grande"—is lead singer and emcee of the show.

The four Foggy Mountain Boys comprising their musical retinue are exponents of the fiddle, mandolin, bass and guitar. Traveling in a specially fitted motor coach, the group averages over 200 personal appearances per year, in addition to their regular weekly spot on the Gand Ole Opry.

Scruggs, who bears about the same relationship to the five-string banjo that Paganini does to the violin, is famed for having invented a fast three-finger style of picking. He and Flatt are resolved to keep their music traditonal.

Biscuit-baking Fans

"Our fans are people who get up early in the morning and bake biscuits." Scruggs told a Nashville Tennessean reporter last year. "They want real country music, and I don't think we'd draw crowds if we modernized."

THE FOGGY MOUNTAIN BOYS take a break from their travels around the country.

Actor Burton Leaves 'Liz'

PARIS (UPI) — Actor Richard Burton arose early Saturday from a night on the town with Elizabeth Taylor in Rome and flew to Paris where he was reunited with his wife Sybil in a little hotel off the Champs Elysee. Liz remained in Rome.

Burton flew in from Rome and his wife flew in from London where she went with their two children March 21 when Burton's name was linked romantically with Miss Taylor. The beautiful actress later announced the breakup of her marriage with Eddie Fisher.

The Burtons remained for several hours in their two-room suite at a hotel frequented by movie stars although the hotel manager protested that he did not know anyone named Burton.

Burton reserved seats later Saturday night for two for dinner at Maxims but it was not known immediately if he was dining at the famous restaurant with his wife.

Burton flew here to do a bit part in another movie and planned to return to Rome to resume work Monday on "Cleopatra," the multi-million dollar extravaganza in which he plays Anthony to Miss Taylor's Cleopatra.

Orly Airfield

When Burton arrived at Orly Airfield reporters asked him if he would marry Miss Taylor.

"I'm already married," the husky actor said.

His wife, former actress Sybil Williams, flew into Paris' Le Bourget airfield half an hour before Burton's plane arrived from Rome.

Burton was greeted by a small army of newsmen and photographers trying to find out if he was here for a reconciliation with his wife or a confrontation over his nightclubbing and picknicking with Liz.

Newsmen asked if he planned to see his wife and he said, "Why not."

"After all, she's my wife," he said. "And in fact she's waiting for me now at the hotel."

He appeared almost casual amid the chaos of his airport welcome. He wore a blue shirt without necktie and sunglasses. He had shaved off his sideburns for his role as a Royal Air Force officer in the movie "The Longest Day" and he appeared amused at the furore.

Asked if Miss Taylor would follow him to Paris he replied that as far as he knew she was working on the film back in Rome.

Reports from Rome quoted "informed sources" as saying Miss Taylor had planned to accompany Burton to Paris for the weekend but that the studio thought better of it.

Asked if his wife would go back to Rome with him Burton said, "I don't know exactly."

World Went Mad

A mob of photographers scrambled on top of anything handy to shoot pictures and at one point Burton gave a helping hand to a French photographer who found himself hanging onto a wall.

At another time his temper snapped and he yelled at one reporter, "stop nudging me."

Benny Paret Finds Peace

MIAMI (UPI) — Benny (Kid) Paret, boxing's most publicized victim, found a final peace Saturday in a quiet place where no crowds roar, in a sheltered corner where no handlers to repair his wounds will be needed any more.

In a Catholic cemetery so far off the beaten tracks not even a house is visible, attendants from a Negro funeral home buried the Cuban sugar cane cutter who fought his way twice to the welterweight championship of the world.

His tiny wife was there, and his silent mother who came flat broke from Cuba to see him buried in the city he adopted. There were reporters and many photographers, too, in keeping with the publicity surrounding Paret's death.

Fighters have died before from the pounding they suffered in the ring—Ernie Schaff, Jimmy Doyle, Lavern Roach. But Paret was the first one fatally injured while millions watched it on television from the safety of their living rooms.

Emile Griffth, a sometime hat designer enraged because Paret calld him a "woman" at their weighing-in, bludgeoned Paret more than 20 times on the head in the 12th round of their title bout in New York City's Madison Square Garden March 24.

Paret never woke up. He died Tuesday in New York's Roosevelt Hospital where they carried him after Griffith cut him down.

Alumni Surprise Varsity Footballers, 10-7

By ED DUPREE
DTH Sports Writer

UNC's old pros refused to wear out Saturday against the younger UNC varsity and the Alumni team took a hard-earned 10-7 victory over Jim Hickey's boys in the first annual Alumni-Varsity contest.

The victory margin was supplied by Phil Blazer's toe on a 27-yard field goal early in the first quarter. After taking the 3-0 lead the veterans held the lead for the remainder of the game.

The Alumni, coached by UNC's first All-American, George Barclay, iced the win away with 41 seconds remaining in the opening half when Ray Farris, a graduating senior, connected on a 13-yarder to Clement for the first touchdown of the contest. True-toed Blazer booted the extra point to give the old fellows a 10-0 advantage.

Midway of the second period Blazer kicked a 24-yard field goal from an angle, but a 15-yard penalty against the Alumni nullified the kick.

The white-jerseyed Alumni and Jim Hickey's blue-jerseyed 1962 footballers battled to a standstill in the third period, but an interception by Jim Gallagher of a Farris pass started the varsity on its touchdown drive. Gallagher caught the pass on the Alumni 43 and returned it to the 46.

After halfback Ward Marslender had carried for three yads and fullback Ken Willa added one, George Boutselis, the offensive unit quarterback, connected with end John Hammett on a 15-yard pass to the 27.

Speedy Ronnie Jackson picked up four more, but Boutselis lost nine. Then Boutselis hit Marslender 19 yards away to push the ball to the 13.

Halfback Joe McLamb carried once to the nine and then the running chores were turned over to Willard, the leading rusher on this year's frosh team. Ken plowed through the heavy Alumni line for four, two, and two yards. On his fourth carry he was hit at the goal line and fumbled. Co-Captain Joe Craver recovered the loose ball in the end zone to score the touchdown.

Bob Lacey kicked the extra point and the varsity trailed 10-7 with 8:14 remaining on the scoreboard clock.

The play that put the clincher on the victory was a booming third down quick kick by Farris that traveled 60 yards to the varsity 14. Ron Tuthill tried to scoop the ball up, fumbled it, and Roland Perdue fell on it for the Alumni.

With the ball on the varsity 18, Sandy Kinney completed four passes in the last 1:23 of the game, but the old-timers held on to their slim lead. The last play ended on the Alumni 45.

Writers covering the game selected Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice as the best sportsman on the Alumni team. Justice handled the punting chores and amazed the small crowd with his still tremendous ability to kick the ball.

Long, who completed five of 14 passes for 73 yards was named the best Alumni back and Blazer was named the outstanding lineman. The awards were presented at the Alumni banquet Saturday night.

Willard was the game's top rusher, picking up 34 yards in 13 carries. Farris picked up 14 in six carries for the Alumni. The varsity rushed for 99 yards, the Alumni for only 23. The old-timers with Farris and Long at the helm completed 9 of 29 passes for 113 yards. Kinney and Boutselis, 8-18 and 5-10, respectively, accounted for 153 yards through the airways.

Frosh Nine Clips N.;C.; State, 13-9 For 2nd Straight

By Rosenthal, Louis

Carolina's freshman baseball first four innings and staved off team exploded for 13 runs in the three rallies by the N. C. State Frosh to win 13-9, yesterday at Emerson Stadium.

In a game marred by 13 errors, the Tar Babies held the Wolflets to only two runs before Jim Edward's men picked up seven in the last three innings.

Walton Ward, from Durham, pitched the freshmen to their second victory in two outings, but needed help from Bill Dannemann in the ninth to squelch the State comeback.

State started the scoring with a run in the first, but Carolina came back in the bottom half to get two runs, thanks to State leftfielder John Arganbright's two errors.

State threatened again in the second but Bill Taylor came through with a fine fielding play at third to retire the side.

Kruer and Jerry Clark had two hits apiece, while the rest of the Tar Babies' nine hits went to five other players.

Arganbright had three singles in five trips for State.

State used four pitchers, Perkinson, who lasted only one inning, received the loss. Ward was the winning pitcher for the Carolina frosh.

Arnie (69) Leads Masters

AUGUSTA, Ga. (UPI)—Arnold Palmer put on one of his famous stretch finishes Saturday, shooting four birdies on the back nine, for a three-under-par 69 to turn back the challenge of Dow Finsterwald and hold his two stroke lead in the Masters Golf Tournament.

Palmer's 37-32 over the 6,980-yard par 36-36—72 Masters course gave him a 54-hole total of 205, 11 strokes under par.

Finsterwald, the 1958 PGA champion, was the hottest of them all, though, on this cloudy day as he shot a seven under par 32-33—65 which gave him a total of 207.

He had started out the day six strokes behind Palmer, the 4-1 pretourney favorite, but picked up four strokes.

Closest to the two leaders was defending champion Gary Player who shot a third round 36-35—71 for a total of 209.

U.S. Open Champion Gene Littler also shot a 71 yesterday to drop him into fourth place with a 210 total.

Palmer did not start to turn it on until Finsterwald made a run at him.

Just before he putted out on the 18th, Palmer spotted Finsterwald standing at the edge of the green. He raised both of his arms in salute to Finsterwald's fine round, which was only one stroke off the course record of 64 set by Lloyd Mangrum in 1940.

Riggsbee, After 25 Years, Has Many Tennis Memories

By CHARLIE BURNS

"This the best tennis team Carolina has had since I've been here."

These were the words of Vance Riggsbee, 56-year-old Negro, who has worked on the University tennis courts since March 15, 1937.

He has many memories over the past 25 years of being associated with UNC teams. He remembers the "golden era" of Vic Seixas and said, "Mr. Vic was the best I've ever seen here."

Asked to compare George Sokol, present phenomenon, and number on man on this year's team to Seixas, Riggsbee thought, "Mr. George could be as good—I just can't say yet. Remember, Mr. George is only a sophomore."

"The game has changed a lot since I've been here. In the late 30's and early '40's, the big serve and net game were the basis for winning. Now, a moderate serve with much more back-line volleys occurs."

Vance Riggsbee is delighted over the crowds attending the matches to date. "Much action goes on out there," pointing to the perfectly kept green composition courts, "and I like for people to come out and share the excitement with me. We have a championship team in the making and I'm proud to be a small part of it."

Girl watchers are honorable men

LESSON 6- Who may watch

Any male is eligible to become a girl watcher. There is no age limit, although most girl watchers are over ten and under one hundred and four. There are no height or weight requirements, although taller men enjoy an obvious advantage at crowded parties. The only strict requirement is one of character. The girl watcher is a man of honor. Since he can't possibly take notes, as the bird watcher does, we must rely on his word. Therefore, when an experienced girl watcher tells you he saw nine beautiful girls while on his way to class, he saw nine beautiful girls. And when he tells you his Pall Mall is the cigarette of the century, believe him. It is.

Alumni Surprise Varsity Footballers, 10-7

By ED DUPREE
DTH Sports Writer

UNC's old pros refused to wear out Saturday against the younger UNC varsity and the Alumni team took a hard-earned 10-7 victory over Jim Hickey's boys in the first annual Alumni-Varsity contest.

The victory margin was supplied by Phil Blazer's toe on a 27-yard field goal early in the first quarter. After taking the 3-0 lead the veterans held the lead for the remainder of the game.

The Alumni, coached by UNC's first All-American, George Barclay, iced the win away with 41 seconds remaining in the opening half when Ray Farris, a graduating senior, connected on a 13-yarder to Clement for the first touchdown of the contest. True-toed Blazer booted the extra point to give the old fellows a 10-0 advantage.

Midway of the second period Blazer kicked a 24-yard field goal from an angle, but a 15-yard penalty against the Alumni nullified the kick.

The white-jerseyed Alumni and Jim Hickey's blue-jerseyed 1962 footballers battled to a standstill in the third period, but an interception by Jim Gallagher of a Farris pass started the varsity on its touchdown drive. Gallagher caught the pass on the Alumni 43 and returned it to the 46.

After halfback Ward Marslender had carried for three yads and fullback Ken Willa added one, George Boutselis, the offensive unit quarterback, connected with end John Hammett on a 15-yard pass to the 27.

Speedy Ronnie Jackson picked up four more, but Boutselis lost nine. Then Boutselis hit Marslender 19 yards away to push the ball to the 13.

Halfback Joe McLamb carried once to the nine and then the running chores were turned over to Willard, the leading rusher on this year's frosh team. Ken plowed through the heavy Alumni line for four, two, and two yards. On his fourth carry he was hit at the goal line and fumbled. Co-Captain Joe Craver recovered the loose ball in the end zone to score the touchdown.

Bob Lacey kicked the extra point and the varsity trailed 10-7 with 8:14 remaining on the scoreboard clock.

The play that put the clincher on the victory was a booming third down quick kick by Farris that traveled 60 yards to the varsity 14. Ron Tuthill tried to scoop the ball up, fumbled it, and Roland Perdue fell on it for the Alumni.

With the ball on the varsity 18, Sandy Kinney completed four passes in the last 1:23 of the game, but the old-timers held on to their slim lead. The last play ended on the Alumni 45.

Writers covering the game selected Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice as the best sportsman on the Alumni team. Justice handled the punting chores and amazed the small crowd with his still tremendous ability to kick the ball.

Long, who completed five of 14 passes for 73 yards was named the best Alumni back and Blazer was named the outstanding lineman. The awards were presented at the Alumni banquet Saturday night.

Willard was the game's top rusher, picking up 34 yards in 13 carries. Farris picked up 14 in six carries for the Alumni. The varsity rushed for 99 yards, the Alumni for only 23. The old-timers with Farris and Long at the helm completed 9 of 29 passes for 113 yards. Kinney and Boutselis, 8-18 and 5-10, respectively, accounted for 153 yards through the airways.

Judge Preyer Discusses Court Edict

Judge Richardson Preyer, recently appointed U. S. District Judge of the Middle District of North Carolina, spoke here Sunday at the first of a series of informal conferences sponsored by the Freshman Class.

He spoke on the recent decision of the Supreme Court on Reapportionment in Tennessee and how the decision reflects the Court's present position of leadership in the area of civil rights.

He said that although Democrats on the whole will benefit from the reapportionment, North Carolina Democrats will lose strength in the cities which are predominantly Republican.

"Consequently, the primarily Democratic State Legislature will be hesitant to legislate that area for the simple reason that reapportionment would threaten their re-election," he said.

He added that at the present time there is a lack of means by which the Supreme Court ruling can be practically enforced.

The purpose of these conferences set up by the freshman class is to alleviate the lack of communication existng between students and state leaders. Persons interested in attending the conferences should contact John Dunne at 968-6476.

Republicans Making Plans For Long Gab

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A group of Republicans announced plans Monday for a nightlong talkathon on the House floor Wednesday to list the Kennedy administration's alleged mistakes and failures.

Calling their talkfest a "spring thaw," they said it was aimed at melting the administration's "snow job" in fields ranging from foreign policy to medical care for the aged.

Democratic leaders declined to say whether an attempt would be made to halt it. This could be done by some member objecting to the inevitable lack of a quorum.

The GOP members have reserved 14 hours of talking time to follow the close of legitimate business on Wednesday. Advised of this, Speaker John W. McCormack described it tersely as "a most unusual thing along the pathway of irresponsibility—and you can quote me on that."

The series of speeches was announced by Reps. Craig Hosmer and James B. Utt, both R.-Calif. Hosmer said some 50 Republicans would talk, and their aim would be "to cut away the snow job the administration has been piling on the American public through its blizzards of propaganda."

Asked about the Republican charge, Associate White House Press Secretary Andrew Hatcher said the administration was not actively engaged in propagandizing radio, press and television.

BEVAN EVANS

Larry Brown Goes On Trial After 'Wreck'

Miss Barbara (Bevan) Evans, Carolina varsity cheerleader, was seriously injured Saturday night when the automobile in which she was riding left the highway and collided with a tree about one mile east of Chapel Hill on the Durham highway. Basketball star Larry Brown was the driver of the car.

Investigating officers said there was no apparent reason for the accident as the road was perfectly dry and free of congestion. Brown was cited for reckless driving.

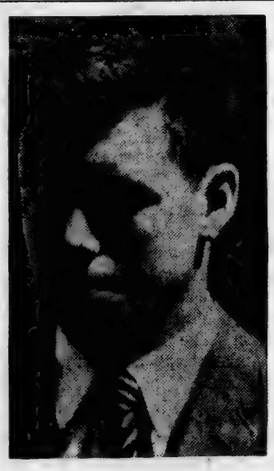
In the car with Miss Evans and Brown were Lindsay Raiford, a nursing student, and John Flournoy, outstanding defensive football player for UNC. Brown, Flournoy, and Miss Raiford were uninjured.

Miss Evans was treated and retained at Memorial Hospital. Her injuries consist of severe lacerations on her face and a broken nose suffered when her head crashed against the windshield when the car hit the tree.

Miss Evans will bring civil action against Brown Friday night at 8 in the Law School's annual Mock Trial. The trial will be held in the Law School Courtroom with Superior Court Judge Allen H. Gwynn of the 21st Judicial District Superior Court presiding. Jurors will be chosen from the undergraduate student body starting at 2 p.m. Friday.

Miss Evans has been reported to have stated that Brown was paying no attention to the road. Brown indicated that it was the conduct of Miss Evans which caused him to lose control of the car.

Brown's car was slightly damaged.



Bob Bennett Is Sophomore Of The Month

Robert Beal Bennett has been chosen March Sophomore of the month by the Sophomore Cabinet.

A Morehead Scholar participating in the Honors Program, he has accumulated a 3.7 quality point average in 73 academic hours during the last three semesters. Last year he led the Freshman class as president of Phi Eta Sigma, the Freshman Honor Society.

He was a member of the Exhibits Committee of the Symposium and scholarship chairman of the Delta Upsilon social fraternity. A leading member of the freshman and varsity cross country, indoor and spring track teams, lettering every season, he distinguished himself in March as he teamed with Scott Brent to take the first two places in the 880-yard run and also ran on the record-breaking two mile relay team in the Indoor Games.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Bennett of Washington, D. C., he is a graduate of St. Albans School there.

Castro To Discuss Fate Of Prisoners

NEW YORK (UPI)—Premier Fidel Castro Monday authorized a delegation of Cuban exiles to fly to Havana for a face-to-face discussion of the $62-million ransom he wants for the freedom of 1,179 war prisoners. The delegation, including one woman, will leave Miami at 7:45 a.m. Tuesday.

The exile committee, including Virginia Betancourt, Alvaro Sanchez Jr., Ernest Freyre and Enrique Llaca, are members of the so-called Prisoners Liberation Group in New York.

Their authorization for the flight to Havana from Miami came in a cable from the Cuba immigration department. They were given 10 days in which to make the flight. Freyre said the committee would negotiate with Castro for the prisoners' release for cash but on the basis he proposed last May 18. At that time he asked for farm machinery valued at some $28-million.

Freyre said he did not know how long negotiations would last, or how long the committee members would be away—or even when Castro would receive the group. The same group spent 10 days in Cuba last August trying to see Castro but returned without having been granted an audience.

Visas Granted

The State Department promptly granted the committee members travel visas to make the flight out of the United States. Without them the committee members would not have been able to buy airline tickets.

The ransom demand was the first time Castro has sought cash rather than merchandise for his captives of last April's abortive Bay of Pigs invasion. On two previous occasions he has tried to exchange the prisoners' release for farm equipment.

The offer to sell the captives their freedom, with the alternative a 30-year jail term at hard labor for each of them, emanated ostensibly from a five-man military court which tried the prisoners in Havana last week. The men did not defend themselves and refused to make any statements because they objected to a court-appointed attorney.

Tries To Rescue Economy

Actually, however, the cash ransom demand appeared to be a Castro-dictated effort at rescuing the tottering Cuban economy, shifted in recent months from a capitalistic to a socialistic base. Radio-Havana, heard in Miami, admitted as much in an editorial commentary saying the cash would be used to step up agricultural production to compensate for food shortages attributed to "the economic blockade of the Yankee imperialists."

Although the new ransom demand was reminiscent of medieval times when rival armies sought cash payments for their respective military captives, particularly nobles and knights, Radio Havana called it "vengeance-free, generous and dispassionate."

New Book Offers Student Writings

Student creativity received an unprecedented boost at the University with the publication yesterday of original student short stories and poems in "The Young Writer at Chapel Hill."

Edited by UNC teacher and writer Jessie Rehder, the 50-page book presents a cross-section of what students in the writng classes at Chapel Hill are producing in the atmosphere of the University.

Leonidas Capetanos, a senior from Raleigh and Sandy McEachern from Wilmington are the North Carolinians whose work is included in the anthology. Capetanos is represented with a ten-page story, "The Conclusion." McEachern has a ten-page story, "Red Wind." Both are members of the "Honors" writing class at UNC.

Two stories by Mary Wallis Robinson, a junior from Birmingham, Ala., are included. They are "A Breath of Magnolias," and "Peacocks in the Pear Tree."

Verse and poetry by seniors Elaine Boyd, of Wayne, N. J., Jeffrey Lowe of South Orange, N. J., and Joe Masi from Port Chester, N. Y. round out the experimental publication.

Of the contents Editor Rehder says: "Some of the students already write provocatively while others may seem to show only a shadow of talent . . . Each writer whose work appears here is making an attempt to give an imagined life a reality of its own, and each already has a hope that at least one reader will participate in his work rather than pass it by.

"The Young Writer at Chapel Hill," she explains, has not been edited with the intention of presenting a perfect work. The contents are thought of as works in progress.

Jessie Rehder, a native of Wilmington, is the author of the new writing textbook "The Young Writer at Work," has edited an anthology for Harper and Brothers Publishers, and wrote the 1956 Putnam novel "Remembrance Way."

Charles Taft Backs JFK's Trade Plans

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Charles P. Taft, brother of the late Republican Sen. Robert A. Taft, gave unqualified endorsement on Monday to President Kennedy's proposed liberalized trade program.

Taft, general counsel of the Committee for a National Trade Policy, also told the House Ways and Means Committee that many industries which oppose freer trade had told "half-truths" and had distorted the facts in presenting their cases.

Taft was among witnesses at the concluding day of hearings on the bill for independent groups. The committee plans to wind up more than four weeks of hearings by mid-week. Government witnesses, including Commerce Secretary Luther H. Hodges, will appear Tuesday.

Taft testified that some industries which made forecasts of "impending doom" from increased imports simply had failed to meet domestic competition.

One of the industries mentioned by Taft as asking "back-door financing" in the form of tariff barriers was makers of machine tools.

A representative of a group of tool-makers appeared Monday to appeal for protection of the industry from imports.

H. S. Potter, representing a group of manufacturers of tools and fine steel, told the committee, "unless the congress determines that our strategic industry is expandable on the altar of free trade, continuation of our historic policy of tariff protection will be necessary until foreign costs approximate our own."

Other industries mentioned by Taft as having enjoyed large and profitable export markets although asking protection against imports were brass products, lumber, chemical and glass.

Taft said some of the more vocal opponents of tariff-cutting agreements with other countries were industries which he said had failed to keep pace with rival firms in producing and selling more efficiently.

Friday To Get Honorary From ROTC Leaders

Consolidated University of North Carolina President William C. Friday will receive a certificate of appreciation for his service as a member of the United States Army's Advisory Panel on ROTC Affairs on Thursday at 1 p.m. at Fetzer Field.

Major General Frederick M. Warren, chief of the U. S. Army Reserve and ROTC Affairs of the office of the Chief of Staff, U. S. Army, will present the certificate to President Friday on behalf of the Army Chief of Staff.

Before the presentation of the certificate, the UNC Air Force ROTC unit, hosts for the award presentation, will give the same welcoming ceremony which distinguished visitors would receive on their arrival at a militay installation. The Honor Guard will be presented for inspection while the AF-ROTC band plays "Ruffles and Flourishes."

A military parade will culminate the presentation.

Lt. Col. Gordon D. Kage of the U. S. Air Force, professor and chairman of the UNC Department of Air Science, is in charge of local arrangements for the ceremony. All 200 members of the UNC AF-ROTC unit will participate in the event.

The ceremony is open to the public.

4 Protestant Churches Plan Merger Talks

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Leaders of the Episcopal Church, the Methodist Church, the United Church of Christ and the United Presbyterian Church Monday began "exploratory" talks on a four-way merger.

The proposed church merger is the most extensive that has ever reached the stage of serious negotiation. The four denominations involved have more than 18 million members in 60,000 congregations across the United States.

Delegates from the four bodies met in closed session at the college of preachers, on the grounds of Washington Cathedral. The talks will continue Tuesday.

Spokesmen emphasized at a news conference that the present meeting was intended only to get the talks underway, and that no dramatic decisions should be expected. They indicated that many more such meetings, perhaps continuing over a period of years, are likely.

"We do not intend to press for speed," said the Rev. Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, stated clerk of the United Presbyterian Church. "The union under consideration is not something that can be maneuvered, or voted into being. It has to win the assent of the churches and their total constituencies. This obviously will take time."

The Rev. Dr. John P. Dillenberger, professor of systematic theology at Drew University, Madison, N. J., and a member of the United Church of Christ delegation, said major Christian communions have been moving closer together in their theological views for many years, and disputes which divided them at the time of the reformation "no longer carry the weight they did then."

The Rev. Dr. Charles D. Kean, of Washington, D. C., secretary of the Episcopal Church's unity commission, said the initial meetings will be devoted largely to "clarification of issues."

French Reds Ask For New Election

PARIS (UPI) — The powerful French Communist party Monday night demanded new parliamentary elections in the wake of Sunday's sweeping new confidence vote for the nation on President Charles de Gaulle's plans for an independent Algeria.

De Gaulle was reported considering whether to dissolve parliament and call general elections. Informed sources said he was reluctant for fear the Communists would make gains that once again would make them a major factor in French politics.

The Communists issued a communique demanding new elections to be held under the proportional representation system in vogue under the Fourth Republic.

In the last elections of November, 1958, De Gaulle introduced a majority system which reduced the Communist party to 10 seats in the National Assembly although the party received nearly one-quarter of the popular vote.

The Communists stressed that the party "yes" vote was only for a policy of peace with the Algerian people and not the Gaullist regime. It said that since the Socialists and other factions made the same stipulation the referendum showed De Gaulle no longer had a majority.

"The Communist party will continue its fight for the election of a sovereig nconstituent assembly, charged with drawing up a democratic constitution," the communique said.

Meanwhile, delayed results of the referendum from the Indian that 96.16 per cent of the 84,730 Ocean island of Reunion showed valid votes were "yes" and only 3.84 per cent "no." This compared with 90.70 and 9.30 per cent in metropolitan France.

De Gaulle conferred for 85 minutes at the Elysee Palace with Premier Michel Debre and one well-informed government source said Debre offered his resignation to prepare the way for elections and that De Gaulle asked time to think this over.

But a spokesman for Debre denied later that the Premier actually had offered his resignation. He said De Gaulle and Debre merely reviewed the referendum result and the political situation stemming from it.

The three men most widely mentioned as Debre's successor are banker Georges Pompidou, a years-long De Gaulle confident; Algerian Affairs Minister Louis Joxe, who conducted the Algerian peace talks, and National Assembly President Jacques Chaban-Delmas.

Government sources said De Gaulle is doubtful about the wisdom of dissolving the present parliament for several reasons.

Debre's party, the Gaullist Union fo rthe New Republic (UNR), which has an absolute majority now, will lose heavily. The Communists, reduced to splinter strength in the 1958 elections, might regain many of their lost seats.

East Berlin Epidemic Held By Reds' Wall

BERLIN (UPI) — West Berlin authorities said Monday the Communist wall had prevented a widespread dysentery epidemic in East Berlin from reaching the western part of the city.

The East Berlin epidemic, attributed to a small quantity of contaminated butter imported from Communist China, has taken three lives and made 28,000 persons ill according to an announcement Saturday by East German Health Minister Max Sefrin.

West Berlin authorities said none of the butter was believed sold in West Berlin but that health officials would meet Tuesday with the city council to discuss precautions.

The main danger was seen in refugees who manage to slip through the barricaded Communist border. Marienfelde refugee camp authorities said 18 refugees had arrived during the past few days

Bunche Talks Here Tonight On UN Action

Pulitzer Winner To Stress Africa

Pulitzer Prize winner Ralph Bunche will speak tonight at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall on the general state of world affairs.

He has served in the United Nations since 1946 and at present is UN Undersecretary. He served as mediator for the UN in the Palestine dispute and directed negotiations which resulted in the four armistice agreements between Israel and the Arab states.

Bunche spoke here in 1956 in connection with the symposium. His speech then was on colonialism and he stressed at that time the close relationship between colonialism and race relations.

Before he joined the UN he was with the State Department and was a delegate to many of the formative conferences of the UN.

He holds degrees from Harvard and resigned as professor there in 1950. In addition to the Nobel Prize he has received several honorary degrees as well as Phi Beta Kappa and the Four Freedoms Award.

Tonight he is expected to stress Africa and the Congo and what the UN is doing about these problems.

Divers Return To Mainland, Without Tale

MIAMI (UPI)—Seven American treasure hunters, whose disappearance off the coast of Cuba last week caused international concern, returned to the United States Monday and said they lived on crackers and peanut butter for three days before their ship went down in an Atlantic storm.

Fred Dickson Jr., 33, of Ocean City, N. J., acting as spokesman for the group, said they received good treatment in Cuba and that the Cubans apparently were satisfied they were nothing more than shipwrecked treasure hunters.

But the seven men delayed telling their full story of their adventure saying they wanted to "get consolidated" first. Dickson said they would hold a news conference Tuesday at 9 a.m. (EST) at the Pompano Beach Hotel.

The adventurers, headed by Gordon S. Patton, 62, of Pompano Beach, were shipwrecked early last Thursday off Baracoa, a seaport on the northeast coast of Cuba. Their predicament caused international concern when the Cuban radio announced last week that the men had been found, and described them as being "apparently frogmen."

Members of the group were Dickson, Patton, Frank Mike Freeman of Kerby Hills, Md.; Bernie Nistead, 29, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; John Johnson, 21, of Washington, D. C.; Joe Campbell, 20, of Alexandria, Va.; and John Sterry of Brewster, N. Y.

There were reports from Cuba that the group had been approached to sell an exclusive story to some publication.

Campus Unity

The perpetual issue of campus unity, or disunity, comes to the front several times a year: during rush, on social week-ends, such as Germans, and, most recently, in the bi-annual hassle between the University and Student parties.

During the latest spring campaign, the split between Greeks and non-Greeks was described as "regretable," "dangerous," and "good for competitive spirit." However, when viewed from the situations existing in colleges which are generally regarded as national leaders (such as Ivy League, California, Michigan, etc.), the disunity at Carolina could hardly be described as progressive or unavoidable. In these schools, divisions of interests are cut along much more significant lines than whether a person is in a fraternity or not.

To analyze such a condition, the alleged disunity must be defined. To say that it does not exist would be an incredible assertion in light of the recent exchange of letters that have appeared in the Tar Heel. Resentment of the fraternity man's "advantages" can be found in any dormitory, and a contempt for the "dorm rat" exists to some etxent in all Greek houses.

If it can be agreed that the animosities involved in the split are not to the best interest of the campus, it is essential that the central cause be resolved. Although the fraternity pin may imply a higher economic background or more refined manners, these factors are relative to the individual and obviously cannot be applied as a general rule. If this is realized by the dorm resident who complains about the Greeks' superiority complex, he should also see that fraternity hostility is a natural reaction to the otherwise futile non-Greek resentment.

The most legitimate gripe of the dorm man, and the one which easily leads to resentment, is the inequality of social conditions. Among other aims, the fraternity is established to a large degreē for social purposes. This is hardly the case of the uninviting dorms at Carolina. This condition, which has been a political football in every election in ten years, is in drastic need of practical consideration. Only with the help of the administration and the agreement of all campus factions can the necessary radical reforms be pursued.

Statesman Bunche

One of America's most distinguished statesmen, Ralph Bunche, will speak tonight in Memorial Hall on a subject with which he is intimately, although unsuccessfully, acquainted: "The United Nations and Peace in Africa."

Bunche, a 1950 Nobel Peace Prize winner, is the United Nations undersecretary who has had to swat flies, dodge spears and negotiate armistice terms (in that order) with the warring Congolese factions for the last two years.

He won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1950 for his intermediary efforts in the Arab-Israeli fighting that year. He has worked on various other United Nations projects, being one of its most effective and experienced "troubleshooters." This American Negro, who can't sit down at lunch counters in Alabama, can stand with the great men of the world in New York, Geneva, The Hague, and Leopoldville.

When Dr. Bunche spoke here at Symposium several years ago, he was well-received. We hope he will again attract a large audience.

Seniors

This year's senior class has been one of the most active in recent years. Under the leadership of Ray Farris as junior class and then, senior class president, the class has sponsored a major basketball contest, an essay contest, and has plans for the near future.

To fulfill these plans the class needs money, more money than it now has. Wednesday night it is cosponsoring the Lester Flatt-Earl Scruggs country music concert, to be held in Memorial Hall. The auditorium should be full or near-full in order for the class to carry out its plans, according to President Farris.

The class will use any profits from the concert for: (1) an essay contest on "The University and Its Meaning;" (2) a class gift to the University—the more money the concert makes, the better the gift; (3) Senior Week social activities; and (4) encouragement of seniors to join the Alumni Association. The concert is a worthwhile activity—seniors, particluarly, have much to gain by plunking down their dollar to see Flatt and Scruggs.

No Longer A Game

We note with some degree of alarm that the candy-vending machine in Howell Hall and in some dorms on campus now carry a selection of ten-cent candies.

No that we particularly mind paying a dime when we miss breakfast in the morning, it's just that the idea of gambling with a nickel was somehow sporting. But when you bet a dime that one of the temperamental bandits will function the way it's supposed to, it becomes less like a game and more like robbery.

More Jobs, Higher Salaries For '62 Grads

By ARTHUR GOLDBERG
Secretary of Labor

(Editor's Note: This is the end of Secretary Goldberg's Open Letter to 1962 graduates. The other sections of his letter have appeared in previous issues of the DTH.)

Social Sciences And Related Fields

Many of the approximately 50,000 social science graduates who will obtain bachelor's degrees this year will go on to graduate school. However, large numbers will find opportunities for employment in government, some will enter high high school teaching, and others will find jobs in industry. Those with graduate training will find very good opportunities for professional work as social scientists. Ph.D.s are in demand chiefly for college teaching.

Economists with graduate education including several courses in mathematics and statistics have very good employment opportunities. Those with the bachelor's degree are in demand for trainee positions in government and industry.

Among political scientists, specialists in public administration and public finance are most in demand. Sociologists are finding increasing employment opportunities in teaching and in research.

Psychologists with Ph.D.s are in great demand in every field of specialization and in virtually all parts of the country. Mental hospitals, mental hygiene clinics, rehabilitation centers, schools and colleges and various agencies of the Federal Government are seeking well-qualified psychologists. Graduates with less than the Ph.D. degree in psychology may experience some difficulty in finding professional work.

Graduates in social work will find many vacancies in settlement and community houses, YMCAs, and YWCAs. Vacancies also exist in public assistance and child-welfare agencies, and in medical and psychiatric social work. On the average, social workers employed in all fields receive about $5,200 a year; however, case workers receive about $4,750.

Health Professions

The growing demand for all kinds of health services continues. Population growth, the growing awareness of the need for proper medical care, increased coverage under prepaid medical and surgical insurance plans, and the availability of more funds for medical research are among the leading factors which have created a high demand in the health professions. Shortages are reported in most medical professions and are most acute in the area of mental health.

Physicians will continue to have excellent opportunities. This year's graduating class (7,000) will not be sufficient to replace all of the practitioners who will retire or die, to relieve shortages of general practitioners—especially in rural areas—and to keep pace with rising demands for specialized medical services. Many more physicians are needed in both public and private medical research activities, schools and hospitals are seeking qualified physicians to fill budgeted vacancies, and many hospitals report unfilled positions for interns and residents. Federal, State, and local government agencies are experiencing difficulty in filling salaried positions for doctors. Additional physicians are also in demand for the growing fields of mental health, rehabilitation, industrial medicine, and public health.

The nearly 500 osteopathic physicians graduating this year will find excellent opportunities to establish a practice in those parts of the country where osteopathy is a commonly accepted form of medical care.

Opportunities for dentists are excellent in many parts of the country. Greatest demand for additional dentists is in the West and South. For many years, the demand for dental services has been growing faster than the supply of new dentists. About 3,300 dentists will complete their training this June but nearly two out of three of these will be needed to replace retiring dentists. In addition, many more graduates are needed to keep pace with population growth and to engage in dental research and teaching.

Veterinarians remain in short supply and opportunities are good in private practice as well as in salaried employment. The U.S. Department of Agriculture reports a need for veterinarians to fill positions in meat inspection, testing, and other programs; colleges are seeking teachers and research workers; and many State and local health departments have vacancies. Altogether, about one-half of this year's nearly 900 graduates will replace veterinarians who retire or die.

Fewer optometrists are graduating this year than are needed to replace those leaving the profession. Thus, there will be less competition for desirable locations than in the recent past.

Most of the nearly 4,000 new pharmacists will find employment readily; a high proportion will be needed to fill vacancies which arise as pharmacists retire or leave the profession for other reasons. New graduates will find salaried positions with little trouble in most parts of the country. However, not enough people with graduate training in pharmacy and related fields will be available for laboratory research positions and college teaching.

Professionally trained nurses continue to be in great demand. The outlook is especially favorable for those with college training for administrative and supervisory positions as well as in teaching.

Men and women with specialized training in many other health fields will also find plentiful job openings. There is widespread demand for medical technologists, physical and occupational therapists, podiatrists, dietitians, medical record librarians, and allied workers.

Performing Arts

The employment outlook for musicians, singers and dancers who have the educational qualifications for school and college teaching is much better than for those trained only as performers. The picture is especially bright for musicians and singers who can meet State certification requirements for positions as elementary or secondary school music teachers.

Competition is especially keen among performers, and inexperienced people will face great difficulty in breaking into the performing arts field.

Peace Corps

Some of you may also wish to consider the Peace Corps. This challenging new program, now in its second year, is designed to help the less developed countries of the world meet their needs for trained manpower. Another purpose is to promote peace, friendship, and understanding between the American people and the peoples served in these countries.

The Peace Corps is composed entirely of volunteers who receive living allowances while at work, and severance pay when they complete their two-year tour of duty. Volunteers will gain valuable experience for their future working careers, especially if they contemplate overseas work for the government or a private organization.

There are many fields of Peace Corps service including most of those mentioned in this letter. The major areas are education, agriculture, health, and community development. Engineers, lawyers, social scientists, and many other specialists are also needed. Liberal arts graduates can be trained to teach English as a second language, or perhaps work in a community development project if they have supplementary skills.

The Peace Corps plans to greatly accelerate the program this summer and fall by training an additional 4,000 volunteers at various universities and colleges to work in 32 foreign countries. Applicants may apply for service in a particular country if they can qualify for the jobs that are available.

"Strom, Are You Coming Or Are You Going To Stay?"

Depravity For The Depraved: 'Sweet Bird Of Youth'

By LOUIS LEGUM

Well, you have to give the old boy credit. Tennessee Williams is probably more adept at wasting raw talent and genius than any playwright or writer in America today. As a matter of fact, the movie version of his "Sweet Bird of Youth" is very enjoyable; its only flaw is that it suffers from being totally ludicrous in its sustained lewd bleakness.

Director Richard Brooks (who also brought "Elmer Gantry" back from the dead) just had too great odds against him in trying to make the Broadway play of the same name palatable for mass audience consumption. After all, what exactly can you do with a heroine who slinks across the Cinemascope screen, whispering in a hoarse voice to a beautiful male stud that "your face isn't familiar, but your hands are."

The heroine, exquisitely played by Geraldine Page, is an ageing actress with the improbable name of Princess Alexandra Del Lago (all of Williams' stage characters seem to have their choice of being either ageing and degenerate or young and feeble-minded, but also degenerate). Anyway, Miss Del Lago is running away from her once glorious past, accompanied by of all people, Paul Newman, an ambitious young man with an ambitious young body.

The two lovely people storm into Newman's Florida hometown one evening, on the heels of a wild, alcoholic binge. Quite logically, Chance Wayne, as Newman is dubbed, happens to be the town bad boy. Apparently he put the local Huey Long's innocent little daughter in the family way, and then discreetly took off for more friendly pastures.

Chance Wayne is a failure in life. His last hope rests in pawning his still youthful, handsome body for a Hollywood contract, gratis of the Princess. He has come back to take away Heavenly (Shirley Knight) from her possessive father, Boss Finley, played by Ed Begley. In turn, Finley is prepared to destroy Chance Wayne if he doesn't leave town with the Princess.

The resolving of these relationships and conflicts is the substance of the movie. Within a brief 24-hour period, the passions and seething hatreds of a small Southern town are exposed and ripped apart, leaving a handful of barren, empty people. Brooks, who is also responsible for the screenplay, negates a large part of the intense power of the theme by tacking on an almost absurd happy ending. It may have worked in "Elmer Gantry" and "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," but not in "Sweet Bird of Youth."

Uniformly, the acting is as forceful as can be found in any recent Hollywood motion picture. Brooks has succeeded in getting his carefully selected cast to achieve a spontaneous enthusiasm that at moments carries the picture beyond its faults. It might be added, though, that the melodramatic script is a genuine actor's feast of innumerable "juicy" scenes and lines.

Particularly of note is Geraldine Page, who along with Newman, recreates her role on Broadway. As the Princess, she strikingly brings to life the many moods and dimensions of the pitiable cinema queen. Her scenes with Newman are handled with an intelligent sensitivity and feeling that is nothing short of brilliant. Gulping down enormous quantities of vodka or hysterically groping for her narcotics, Miss Page lights up the screen with an unusual fire and feeling for her role.

Newman, though also excellent, runs a poor second to Miss Page's performance. The character of Chance Wayne is probably the most complex and difficult in the movie; although Wayne is not developed quite successfully, it is hardly the fault of Mr. Newman.

The other major parts belong to the Finley family. Begley as the Boss is dynamic and often eciting. But the part is already overdrawn enough without Begley's "Big Daddy" approach. A little more restraint might have made him more believable. Heavenly emerges as a wholly unreal, ridiculous figure. Her name even suggests that Williams is pulling our leg to begin with. There is not much to do about her role, and so Shirley Knight tactfully remains unobtrusive as the soiled virgin. Heavenly's brother is a character derived more from Poe than Williams. Rip Torn, as a dim-witted, viciously cruel tag-along, injects an additional note of horror and disgust that is hardly necessary. Old pro Mildred Dunnock is very effective and moving in her role as an aunt of the family who is (surprise) relatively normal.

"Sweet Bird of Youth" invites once again that standardized criticism of Tennessee Williams: how can so many unbelievable personalities of such mortifying baleness combine to make a work that is graspable and acceptable to an audience? Not everyone in the world is a sadist, or a drug addict, or an alcoholic. I wish someone would tell Mr. Williams that.

"The Four Horsemen..." Gallop While Actors Trot

By JEANIE BROWNE

Conquest, War, Pestilence, Death—the Four Horsemen described by St. John in Revelations—ride upon the earth devouring, destroying, eliminating everything in their path. These symbolic riders create a startling, perhaps apprehensive, mood in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," now playing at the Carolina.

Adapted from Blasco Ibanez' novel on WW I, this film version advances the novel's theme to World War II. An Argentine rancher (Lee J. Cobb) has two daughters. One marries a Frenchman (Charles Boyer), the other, a German (Paul Lukas). After the old rancher's death, the two sides of the family depart to their separate countries.

The outbreak of the war finds Boyer and his playboy son (Glenn Ford) living the lives of devout neutralists in Paris, while in Germany, Lukas and his three sons have become Nazi leaders. The plot moves swiftly as the Germans led by Lukas occupy Paris and Boyer's daughter (Yvvette Minieux) joins the resistance. Still neutral, Ford occupies his time having an affair with the wife (Ingrid Thulin) of a prisoner of war. When Ingrid's husband returns, and Yvette is taken by the Gestapo, Ford is forced to take a political stand.

The first version of Ibanez's novel was filmed in 1921, starring the then unknown actor, Rudolph Valentino. In the counterpart, Glenn Ford is miscast. Ford does not have the dashing, daring flare of the playboy. Ingrid Thulin is adequate in her role but leaves the impression of being just a lovely showpiece. Worthy of mention is Lee J. Cobb's vivid performance as the old rancher, and Yvvette Minieux's natural, unaffected acting ability.

Despite the acting, the inadequate techniques which director Vincente Minnelli employs, and the rather bizarre color combinations in several scenes, this film leaves a tremendous impression. The key to this is in the script by Robert Ardrey and John Gay, or perhaps in the original idea from Ibanez's novel.

The contrast between a great world war and its effects and the Biblical prophesy of the Four Horsemen begins slowly, subtlely, building to a climax of almost unthinkable power. The Four Horsemen are unreal. WW II is real. Yet, just how close is this reality to the unreality?

Curfew Cuts Male Talk

To The Editor:

This is just a naive query. I don't know who will pay attention to it, except the few male students enrolled at the university.

My question then. Who is responsible for establishing the completely inconsiderate policy of flicking off the phones in the girls' dorm at precisely the witching hour of 11 o'clock, without any warning? After two years of interrupted conversations I am now realiznig that I'm not the only heterosexually orientated male here who gets supremely annoyed at this practice.

How difficult can it be, how terribly expensive it is, for those in charge of this school of higher learning and social education to cue the people having an enjoyable conversation when their official time is up?

Disguised OAS Commandos Take Over Two Newspapers

ALGIERS (UPI) — Secret Army Organization commandos dressed in French army camouflage suits took over two Oran daily newspapers during the night and ran off 100,000 copies of a "special OAS editon" denouncing President Charles de Gaulle and an independent Algeria.

It was the most spectacular OAS operation of the day in defiance of the French referendum Sunday in which 90.7 per cent of the valid ballots cast approved De Gaulle's policy of independence for a Moslem-dominated Algeria.

The Oran prefect suspended both papers and two others Monday night until further notice. The reason for the suspension was "to assist the investigation," the government office said.

Marines Land; Face Carolina Nine At Three

By Curry Kirkpatrick

Coach Walter Rabb's baseball Tar Heels go after victory number four this afternoon, when they entertain the Camp Lejeune Marines at 3:00 in Emerson Stadium.

Carolina, 3-4 on the year with only a 13-9 loss to Wake Forest showing on the ACC log, have only won one game at the home park this season—that being a 10-3 triumph over Delaware in its last outing.

The Tar Heels, who have gotten some fine hitting from Larry Neal, Buddy Tilden, P. W. Swing and Heyward Hull, have only their pitching and sometimes-shoddy fielding to blame for their far-from-credible record to date.

Prior to Bob Wacker's fine performance last Thursday, when he limited the Blue Hens of Delaware to five hits in Carolina's sole home victory, only Dave Murr had pitched up to par.

Murr, the big red-headed co-captain, turned in a fine two-run, two-hit relief job in the Wake Forest comedy of errors.

Rabb will probably start today, co-captain Len Dellolio at first, Swing at second, Neal at third, and sophomore Jim Speight at shortstop, with Hull, Tilden, and either Dave Pope or George Lockhart in the outfield and Wendell Brande behind the plate. Either Murr or sophomore righthander Andy Billesdon will pobably get the nod for the mound chores.

Cindermen Defeat Gamecocks, 79-57

Bob Hart and Rett Everett each captured two first places Saturday as UNC's undefeated track team stopped South Carolina at Columbia, 79-57.

The contest was close until the Tar Heels pulled away with a first and second in both the pole vault and two-mile run and a win in the mile relay.

With 13 of the 16 events completed, Carolina led by only three points, 58-55, but Barrie Tiedemann and Heath Whittle tied for first in the pole vault at 13 feet, 6 inches, and Rett Everett won the two-mile with UNC's Carmine Lunetta second, to ice it for Coach Dale Ranson's cindermen.

Hart, in addition to his wins in the 220 (22.1) and 440 (49.9) yard races, also anchored Carolina's winning mile relay team as he combined with Scott Brent, Jim Brown, and Jerry Stuver to finish in 3:22.6.

Other Tar Heel winners included Brent (1:54.1 in the 880-yard run), John O'Bannon (22-5 i nthe broad jump), Harvey Henry (47¼ feet i nthe shotput) and Cutter Davis (186' 10" in the javelin).

Tom Clark, the record-breaking high jumper, leaped 6-4 Saturday, but the Gamecocks' Jim Collins matched the effort to tie Clark for first.

Everett ran his clutch two-mile in 9:40.9 and added a 4:20.1 mile win to account for his "double."

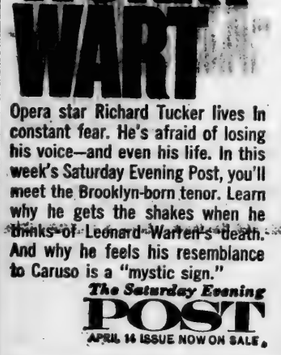
Bob Stevens, "Coach of the Year" in the Atlantic Coast Conference while at South Carolina this past season, was named yesterday to the head coaching post at the University of Oklahoma.



ARNOLD PALMER

Arnie Palmer Does It Again

AUGUSTA, Ga. (UPI)—Amazing Arnold Palmer wore down Gary Player and Dow Finsterwald Monday with another one of his fantastic finishes to capture his third Masters' golf title with a spectacular four-under-par 68 windup in a three-way playoff.

Down three strokes after the first nine, the indomitable, 32-year-old Palmer turned it on over the back nine by shooting five birdies against his frustrated two competitors to fashion a 37-31—68 that beat runnerup Player by three strokes and earned him the $20,000 first prize money.

NC Swim Club In Title Tie

By Curry Kirkpatrick

The North Carolina Aquatic Club, formed just last week and featuring five swimming stars from UNC and State College, finished in a tie for the team title, Saturday, at the AAU swimming and diving championships in Bartlesville, Okla.

Sophomore Thompson Mann, and freshman Harrison Merrill of Carolina combined with State's Ed Spencer, Pete Fogarasy, and Bill McGinty as the Tar Heel swim group scored 34 points to deadlock the University of Southern California's freshman team for first place. Southern Cal's varsity team, swimming as a separate unit, finished behind the two leaders with 32 points.

Mann, Spencer, Fogarasy, and McGinty tallied 14 points while breaking a meet record in the 400-yard medley relay. The four covered the distance in 3:37.9, just two-tenths of a second off the existing American record.

Other North Carolina places were taken by Fogarasy, fourth in the 100-yard breaststroke, Mann, third in the 100-yard backstroke and Spencer, third in the 100 butterfly.

Spencer and Fred Schmidt of Indians were both timed in 52.3 in the butterfly but Schmidt was awarded second behind teammate Larry Schulhof, who won in 52.1, also just two-tenths of a second off an American mark.

In Mann's race, Bob Bennett, a Southern Cal freshman and Princeton's Jed Graef, who defeated the UNC star twice in the Eastern Championships, were both clocked in 54.1 with Bennett getting the win on a judge's decision.

In a meet glittering with outstanding performances, seventeen-year-old Roy Saari, a California high school student, stole the show.

Saari, a senior out of El Segundo High School, swam at a record-a-night pace in the three day meet, setting new marks in the 1500-meter, 220-yard and 440-yard freestyle races.

The secondary - school prodigy took the 1500 in 16:54.1, the 220 in 1:58.6 and climaxed his fantas-

Cuban Exiles Bargaining For Invaders

HAVANA (UPI) — Four Cuban exiles arrived Tuesday to try to scale down Premier Fidel Castro's $62 million ransom demand for the freedom of 1,179 Bay of Pigs invaders. They went immediately into seclusion.

The exiles, representing the so-called Cuban Families Committee for the Liberation of Prisoners of War, included Alvaro Canchez Jr., chairman; Enrique Llaca, vice-treasurer; Mrs. Virginia Betencourt and Enrique Freyre.

They were met on their 9 a.m. arrival from Miami by a Castro army captain and an unidentified couple, and sped through customs and immigration.

They followed a little used road from the airport to Havana and were reported t ohave been settled down in a private residence previously arranged for their use.

Await Nxt Move

There was no immediate indication when the delegation members would meet with Castro, or whether the bargaining for the release of the prisoners, captured during last April's abortive Bay of Pigs invasion, would be conducted on a lower level.

Sanchez told newsmen at the airport he could not say anything for publication until the negotiations got under way.

"We are here with the best intentions of negotiating and reaching definitive conclusions" with respect to the prisoners as a group, he said. He said he did not know who would represent the government in the talks. He said the Castro permit to come to Cuba was signed only by an immigration department functionary.

Prior to their departure for Havana from Miami, Sanchez said the delegation had been authorized to offer $28 million in "goods and products" to meet Castro's stiff ransom demand.

However, the Cuban premier is seeking cash in U.S. dollars for the release of the men, sentenced last Saturday to 30 years at hard labor in an unprecedented four-day mass trial at Havana's Principe prison.

Legislature Di-Phi Topic For Debate

The role of the student legislature will be debated by the Di-Phi tonight as the group considers "A Resolution Advocating that the Student Legislature Confine Itself to Issues Pertaining Directly to the Studen Body and Camputs of UNC." The debate will be at 7:30 on the third floor of New West.

The resolution, which was introduced by Bill Philips, is expected to stimulate lively debate between those who feel that conditions on campus merit the complete attention of the Legislature and those who want a "broad" interpretation of the role of the Student Legislature.

The resolution, ifp assed, would request that the Speaker of the Legislature read the resolution before the Student Legislature assembled.

This issue, which has been the subject of much controversy in the past, was brought to the surface by the recent passage by the Legislature of "A Resolution Concerning Nuclear Testing."

All persons have been invited to attend and, if they desire, to participate in the debate. Refreshments will be served after the session.

2 Hooded Giants Search For Fleece Tappees Monday

Two hooded giants will stalk the aisles of Memorial Hall Monday night in search of new Argonauts for the Order of the Golden Fleece, the University's highest honorary organization for men. The doors will be locked promptly at 7 and will not be reopened until the tapping ceremony is completed.

Golden Fleece initiates are chosen on the basis of character, ability, achievement and leadership. The Fleece has a long-standing tradition of recognizing the campus' most outstanding men.

Valkyrie Sing

Following the tapping, the Valkyries will introduce the evening's entertainment to be given by representatives from organizations throughout the campus. The Valkyries, the University's highest honorary for women, present this event annually in order to display campus talent and to serve as a unifying force with emphasis on group participation and enjoyment.

Sing chairman, Susie Cordon, announced Monday that fourteen campus groups have been registered for the competition. One trophy will be awarded for each of the following divisions:

Men's singing, men's skit, women's singing, women's kit, and special groups.

Late Permission

The entries will be judged by a panel of six members of the faculty and Chapel Hill community on the basis of originality, presentation, singing, and costuming.

Campus-wide late permission for twelve o'clock has been granted by the Women's Residence Council so that women students may remain throughout the entire program.

Jouhaud could be sentenced to death before a firing squad if found guilty.

Opinion was divided, however, on whether such a sentnce would be commuted.

CITES CONGO OPERATION

UN Effective Peacemaker — Bunche

By BILL WAUMETT

The complexities of peacemaking were described by Ralph Bunche last night to an audience of about 900 persons in Memorial Hall that heard the Undersecretary of the United Nations vigorously defend that organization's recent operations in the Katanga Province of the Congo.

Bunche cited numerous examples of effective peace operations by the UN and said that critics who are calling it useless have a disregard for facts that must "excite the imagination of the communists."

Bunche, who won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1950 for his work in settling the dispute over Israel's independence, briefly reviewed the major peace-making services the UN has performed and then commented on the problems that had arisen in these operations and how the UN had solved them.

He began by describing the Israel-Arab dispute and contrasted its improvised practices then with the present peace-keeping mission which now settles border disputes.

He then traced the growth of the UN Executive branch under the leadership of Dag Hammerskold as the late Secretary guided UN forces in Gaza in 1956, in Lebanon in 1958 and in the Congo operation that is "still far from completed."

The UN's authority, he said, "has grown tremendously since 1946, mainly through its acceptance by the world as a fair and effective mediator of international disputes."

"The UN still has far from adequate authority," he stated, "to fulfill its peacemaking role."

Problems Of African Independence

In describing the problems of emerging African nationalism, and particularly the problems of the Congo, he said that the world realizes that much of Africa is not ready for self-rule, but that it is impossible to say exactly when a country is ready for independence.

"In this situation," he said, "the UN is the best and perhaps only means of insuring a free Africa."

He then stated that many of the future problems of Africa will arise from the problem of race relations. South Africa and Algeria were cited by Bunche as recent examples of the problems caused by this conflict.

"The future solutions to these problems, he said, lies with the individual's attitudes and ideas. The walls between peoples must be broken down so that discrimination can be eliminated and peace preserved."

Sukarno Threatens New Guinea Again

PALEMBANG, Indonesia (UPI) —President Sukarno boasted Tuesday of his increasing supply of Soviet military equipment and warned that if The Netherlands refuses to withdraw from West New Guinea by the end of this year Indonesia will seize it by force.

Speaking to a cheering crowd of 20,000 in this south Sumatra city, Sukarno said he will abide by a United States plan for the peaceful transfer of West New Guinea to Indonesia only if the transfer is completed within nine months.

New Ring Is Introduced By Order Of Grail

The Grail has announced the introduction of a new Carolina dinner ring featuring a blue oval stone framed in the words "University of North Carolina" and bearing a design of the Old Well on the side.

A group of Carolina women students chose the ring from a group of designs drawn up by the L. G. Balfour Company with the aid and advice of members of the Grail.

Orders and ring sizes will be taken at the Y Court Thursday 12, 9 a.m.-1 p.m., at which time a $5 deposit will be due. Balance of the price is payable upon delivery, which is estimated to be eight weeks from the time the orders reach the manufacturer.

Optional features include additional lettering at eight cents per letter and Greek letters gold encrusted on stone, $1 each.

Price of the ring in yellow or green gold will be $20 including hand engraving of two initials and last name on the inside band. White gold is $5 additional.

As in the case of the regular class ring, $1 of the purchase price goes to the Grail.

Infirmary

Those in the infirmary yesterday included Donna Fountain, Sarah Reese, Nancy Himelick, Margaret Holland, Harry Broome, Douglas Gordon, Reed Johnston, Stewart Ellington, Don Korte, Charles Buckley, Jack Koontz, William McRorie, Stephen Everette, William Carrier, Hugh Myers, William Askew, John Eichburg, William Taylor, Robert Diplock, Ray Farris, Peter Spies, Robert Browning, Lawrence Gurley, David Williams, and Walter Daughton.

U. Of Mich.'s X.J. Kennedy Next In N.C. Poetry Circuit

Michigan poet X. J. Kennedy has been selected as the second poet to participate in the North Carolina Poetry Circuit. He will begin his tour of the eight North Carolina colleges in the circuit late this month.

The circuit was formed last November by Howard Webber, editor-in-chief of the UNC Press, to bring young but not altogether established poets to colleges and universities of the state. One Virginia college is formally a part of the Circuit but will not participate this time.

Author Of "Nude"

Thirty-one-year-old Kennedy, author of "Nude Descending a Staircase," which won an Avery Hopwood Award before publication and later was the Lamont Selection of the Academy of American Poets, will be reading his poetry to students at East Carolina, Duke, Davidson, Woman's College, Wake Forest, State, Campbell, and UNC.

A good illustration of a point seldom made, that poetry can be fun and literary too, are many of Kennedy's poems. "Epitaph for a Postal Clerk" reads, in entirety:

"Here lies wrapped up tight in sod
Henry Harkins c/o God.
On the day of Resurrection
May be opened for inspection."

Of his humor, much admired by all who have read him, writer Donald Hall has praised Kennedy this way: "Other young poets are witty; many of Kennedy's poets are wit itself. No one writing is capable of the effects in which Kennedy specializes."

Poetry Editor

In November last year the young poet succeeded Donald Hall as poetry editor for "The Paris Review."

Already this year the poet has read his works at the Poetry Center of the YM-YWCA in New York; over the BBC Third Programme and the Pacifica Foundation FM network, WBAI, New York; and on the campuses of Cornell, Washington University (St. Louis), Rutgers, Michigan, Michigan Dearbon Center, and Wayne State University in Detroit.

Kennedy is currently an instructor in English at the University of Michigan. He received the 1961 Bess Hokin award of "Poetry" magazine, was a 1960 Bread Loaf Fellow in Poetry and held a 1961 fellowship at Yaddo.

Addition To Circuit

George Garrett, bartender, football coach, Texaco prospector, soldier and college professor, was the first poet to tour the state Poetry Circuit. Editor Webber states that "as many as four hundred students heard him speak at one of the participatign schools, and the audiences at all the schools seemed interested and enthusiastic."

"Probably the best testimony to the Circuit," Webber says, "is that one more school is participating this time than last—Campbell College. Our circuit is not only the first in the South but the largest in the nation.

"This," he said, "is a real cultural achievement for our state."

WARN RUSSIA:

A-Tests Begin In 3 Weeks

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The United States and Britain sternly advised Russia Tuesday that America will start atmospheric nuclear tests within three weeks at the most unless Moscow agrees to a fool-proof test ban agreement.

In Russia, Western observers saw little chance that Russia would react favorably. The betting was that Premier Nikita Khrushchev would simply reiterate his previous stand and his threat to resume testing if the United States goes ahead.

The big two Allies told the Soviets there was still time for them to accept a test ban treaty that incorporates the "cardinal" principle of international inspection. But if Russia does not, "the test series scheduled for the latter part of this month will have to go forward."

The warning was issued simultaneously by the White House and read before the House of Commons by British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan. It also appeared to be aimed at the court of world opinion, especially neutral nations and such anti-test countries as Japan.

"We continue to hope that the Soviet government may reconsider their position and express their readiness to accept the principle of international verification," the joint U. S.-British statement said.

The White House said the statement was delivered to the Kremlin Monday night. Macmillan also sent a personal communication to Khrushchev. President Kennedy did not.

NEW LEGISLATORS INSTALLED

Allen Urges Responsibility

Inman Allen, new president of the student body, emphasized the need for a combined effort of all areas of student government to maintain student autonomy in an addrsss to the first meeting of the thirty-third session of student legislature Monday night.

Allen challenged the new legislators to accept the responsibility of their positions and provide all students with "an institution of government that they can feel."

In noting that the new officers were now in a position to work beyond strict party lines, Allen indicated that the executive branch would seek to accomplish the "best points in both parties' platforms."

Urgncy Of Social Problems

In stressing th urgency of varied social problems, the new president said, "I go on record now as saying that by this time next year, there will be an all-campus weekend." Plans for increased activity in cultural and academic areas were mentioned as being particularly important during the coming year when the 1964 Symposium will be in planning stages.

George Campbell, chairman of the constitutional council administered oaths of office to the new members of the men and women's honor councils, and to the officers of the executive branch of student government. The oath was administered to the members of the new legislative session by Mike Lawler, new vice president and speaker of the student legislature.

Hayes Is Speaker

A Student Party majority elected Arthur Hayes to position of speaker pro-tem over U.P. candidate Larry McDevitt.

Other offices filled included Ann Lupton (S.P., D.W. III), clerk; Beth Wallace (S.P., D.W. I), asst. clerk; and Dick Ellis (S.P., D.M. III), sergeant at arms. Chairman of legislative committees selected were Scott Summers (S.P., D.M. III), Ways and Means; George Rosental (S.P., D.M. I), Finance; Rick Powell (U.P., D.M. VI), Rules; and Charles Cooper (S.P. T.M. IV), Judicial.

Handbook Positions

Anyone interested in helping to produce the 1962-1963 edition of the Carolina Handbook is urged to apply for a staff position. This does not necessarily require journalistic ability, but it is open to anyone interested in this vital part of the orientation of incoming students. Interested students should stop by the publications board office between 3:30 and 5:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Flatt and Scruggs

The senior class is sponsoring Earl Flatt and Lester Scruggs and the Foggy Mountain Boys in a concert here Wednesday night in Memorial Hall at 8. Admission will be $1 and tickets are available at Graham Memorial and at Kemp's.

TO TELEVISE CONFERENCE

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy's news conference at 3:30 p.m. EST Wednesday will be broadcast live on all networks and on the NBC teleision network the White House said Tuesday.

Videotapes of the session will be presented at 5 p.m. EST by the CBS and ABC television networks, the White House said.

Berlin Disease Toll Increases

BERLIN (UPI) — East Berliners were told Tuesday to skip birthday parties until the dysentery epidemic ends.

East German press and radio issues repeated warnings to stay home and avoid contacts which might spread the contagious disease, which has killed at least three persons and felled 28,000 more.

West Berlin health officials said the East German statistics were underestimated and that at least 40 persons had died and 100,000 were stricken.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC TONIGHT

Duo Tuning Up Bluegrass Banjos

Lester Scruggs and Earl Flatt, along with the Foggy Mountain Boys, will be tuning up their Bluegrass banjos and guitars in Memorial Hall tonight at 8 for a 2½ hour program of traditional mountain music. A major part of the group's repertoire is made up of songs and ballads from the Appalachian Mountain country; songs deeply rooted in folk tradition. Both are accomplished musicians who specialize in a kind of country music that anyone with a sense of humor and a slight sense of rhythm can enjoy and appreciate. Tickets for tonight's concert may still be picked up for a dollar apiece at Kemp's in downtown Chapel Hill, in Y-Court, or at Graham Memorial.

AT FACULTY CLUB

Anthropologist Discusses N. C.'s 'Dead End' History

The "Dead End" history of North Carolina, and especially that of Indian remains found in the state that date back 900 years, was describ edby UNC anthropologist Dr. Joffre Coe to the Faculty Club at its monthly luncheon yesterday .

He related results of diggings near Roanoke Rapids, in Wilkes County, and west of Winston-Salem on the banks of the Yadkin River, site of an ancient Indian civilization. He also told of graves of Indians near Hillsboro and the famous Indian Mound which has been restored at "Town Creek" near Mount Gilead.

Following his speech, Prof. Coe and his chief assistant David S. Phelps told of the excavations near the western edge of the Piedmont Plateau.

Bones Of 60 Indians

The bones o fabout 60 Indians have been found there recently near the bank of the Yadkin River. Some o fthe bodies had been left on the surface to rot away and then buried in a single grave and others had been buried in flexed positions in shallow graves.

It is hoped that these bones, discovered by highway construction

YRC Hear Prof. King This Evening

The "Conservative Revolution" will be discussed by Professor James King of the UNC History Dept. at tonight's meeting of the Young Republicans Club at 7:30 in the Law School Courtroom.

The program was planned in keeping with the Symposium last week, according to YRC President Earl Baker, who said, "We feel that the college students of today recognize the failure of New Deal nostrums which the Democrats are exhuming today. This is why the Conservative revolution exists."

King teaches in the History Dept. and specializes in intellectual history.

Also on the program will be Bill Patterson, Regional director of YR college activities, and Adrian King of Wake Forest College, North Carolina College Co-ordinator. Young Republican activity in the November Congressional and local elections will be discussed.

You're Another One

The team of young Soviet professional people which visited the campus late last month was, in general, warmly received. Most students who came in contact with the Russian visitors said they benefited from the experience despite the difficulties of communicating through an interpreter.

Although there was never a real rapport established because of the language differences and the briefness of the visit, enough exchange took place to make the visit a success.

Unfortunately, the most widespread publicity given the visit resulted from the fried chicken and towel incident at the Pi Kappa Alpha house. As we understand it, the situation was blown far out of proportion to its importance. The press is always ready to pounce on any incident involving Russians visiting in this country. The slightest hint of personal insult becomes a matter of national pride. Everyone wants to get in the act and "defend his country's honor." During the Russians' visit here, the following editorial appeared in the Washington, D. C., Evening Star:

Those having a passing acquaintance with life in American fraternity houses are unlikely to be surprised or distressed by any reports of normal "hardships." The brothers are prone toward such informalities as borrowing books or beds, clothing or cars, on an "ask not" basis. Even so, their hospitality is seldom questioned from campus to campus. Perhaps things are different in Russia, if there are fraternities there at all.

In any case, a trio of Russian exchange students visiting the University of North Carolina are finding life not to their liking in the Pi Kappa Alpha house at Chapel Hill. No towels and too much fried chicken. There are occasions, of course, when lack of a towel can be a nuisance—perhaps an embarrassing one. For fried chicken, however, it is difficult to work up much sympathy for complaints about being faced with this fare at two consecutive meals. In fact, it happens at our house quite often and with no hustling up an alternative of ham and eggs, as was done at Chapel Hill, for any sniffy customers.

Being on tour, it is possible that the seemingly rude Russkis—who even declined to accept an apology for the towel shortage—have not heard about the food problems back home. Among other things, Papa Khrushchev is annoyed about there not being enough chickens—fried or otherwise. Very likely the same applies to ham and eggs. Perhaps the only thing in over-supply is Russians—at least in Chapel Hill.

* * *

And perhaps the only thing in over-supply in the United States is newspaper editors with a chauvanistic "you're another one" complex.

Hope For Education

Perhaps there is real hope for education in North Carolina.

Yesterday we learned that Lewis Rush, president of Phi Beta Kappa here last year, will return to Carolina next fall to complete requirements for a teacher's certificate. His aim: to teach math in a North Carolina high school.

It's heartening to find that the teaching profession can still attract brilliant minds—without fancy salaries, fringe benefits or a shorter work week.

Rush says he believes the high school level is a highly critical point in education, especially in math and science. He also believes that no system of education, classic, progressive or whatnot, can succeed without strong teachers who not only know their subjects but who have the ability to draw out students.

Unfortunately, there are far too few like Rush. The teaching profession simply does not draw enough brilliant students. We would venture to guess that Rush, if and when he begins teaching in N. C., will be one of less than a dozen of comparable ability now doing so. Most bright young men and women are wooed away from careers in teaching long before they get to the first education course. Too many attractive salaries and opportunities exist in other fields for the outstanding student to give more than a passing thought to teaching as a career.

But the problem involves more than plush positions and starting salaries. Education is simply not regarded as a really respectable undergraduate major for the outstanding students.

A national report issued recently showed that the education curriculum at most colleges attracted students who scored in the lowest ranges on entrance exams and/or college boards.

This means that most of the real brain power goes into fields outside education.

Men like Rush are rare exceptions in the field of high school teaching .

How many more like him follow is in large measure up to the men who control the purse-strings. But part of the responsibility must be shared by those who shape education curricula in our colleges and universities.

Chiang Is Real Homebody Among National Leaders

Since Chiang retreated to Formosa in late 1949, the Nationalist Chinese president has traveled no more than 3,000 miles outside the confines of Formosa and the offshore islands.

He clocked those miles just after he arrived in Formosa in the fall of 1949, in whirlwind trips to Manila and Seoul.

Since those visits, which he made to see the then Presidents Elpidio Quirino of the Philippines and Syngman Rhee of South Korea, the aging Generalissimo has not made any overseas trips.

He has, however, made numerous short hops to Quemoy—about 200 miles from Taipei—sometimes accompanied by his wife.

What are the reasons Chiang, who was said to love flying when he was on the mainland, has stayed so close to Formosa?

The most frequently heard reason is that Chiang has vowed he would not visit another country until he had regained his homeland.

There have been rumors that Chiang, who will be 75 this year, will shortly get a luxurious four-engine jet liner for his personal use. If so, it does not seem likely the jet will be used for flights only within Formosa, since a fast jet can span the island in a matter of minutes.

Perhaps Chiang may use the new jet to fly overseas—to visit Japan, Thailand, Manila or Hawaii.

The Taipei government is not oblivious to the value of good will visits by national leaders. But it would appear unlikely Chiang would break his vow.

Other members of Chiang's family have traveled more extensively. Madame Chiang and their two sons have been to the United States.

Di-Phi Debates Legislature's Bounds Tonite

To the Editor:

Since the Student Legislature passed the resolution concerning nuclear testing, there has been widespread questioning of whether the Student Legislature should concern itself with legislation dealing with off-campus issues. Certain persons have stated that such legislation is interpreted as expressing the majority opinion of the Student Body while this may or may not be true. Others have questioned whether such legislation accomplishes anything worthwhile.

Tonight the students will have the opportunity to say whether or not they wish the Legislature to discuss off-campus resolutions. The Di-Phi will meet at 7:30 on the third floor of New West to discuss RESOLUTION ADVOCATING THAT THE STUDENT LEGISLATURE CONFINE ITSELF TO ISSUES PERTAINING DIRECTLY TO THE STUDENT BODY AND CAMPUS OF UNC. All persons and especially the new legislators are invited to come to participate in debate, ask questions of the speakers, or just listen if they so desire.

Here is a unique opportunity for the students to speak out on what they feel should be the role of the Student Legislature, and to voice their complaints and offer suggestions.

Arthur Hays
President of the Di-Phi

Manners Minder

To the Editor:

A bull on the railroad track, when he saw the train approach, turned and charged the train. Where upon the engineer, putting on more steam, said he admired the bull's spunk but didn't give a damn for his judgment.

I admire Don Hilburn's style, he writes well. I can at least understand what he is writing about, but as someone said on reading his letter, "His letter only proves your point—that a few students at the University have no manners, they pride themselves on their boorishness, so there is not much hope of their ever changing into gentlemen."

This attitude is unfortunate for as Patricia Lewis, columnist for the "Raleigh News & Observer," wrote March 28: "Good manners are a part of modern college life because of the student's growing awareness that proper habits of behavior cultivated at school are almost as important in their postgraduate lives as the book knowledge they absorb."

The world expects good manners of a college graduate. When I correct the young people it is because I think too much of them to see them go out into the world without the rudiments of good manners.

It is well known that children get tired of hearing their parents correct them all the time so they stop listening. A lot of the things young people do are just thoughtless, (which is a very different thing from being intentionally rude). Most young people appreciate someone taking the trouble to correct their thoughtlessness. I don't know Don Hilburn but I believe he has writing ability and I would like to see him develop it.

World Federalists Organize

BACKGROUND OF THE CALL

In this age of nuclear neurosis, with some nations rejecting nuclear arms and others grimly pursuing this destructive knowledge—17 years after the maiming of Hiroshima and Nagasaki by two relatively tiny atomic bombs—the power of a creative idea is being used to arrest humanity's mad march towards self-annihilation.

Three years ago this idea was formulated, starting a chain of events which culminated in a document addressed to all nations and signed by prominent individuals from many parts of the world. This document calls upon the nations to participate in an effort to construct a world constitution at a convention to be held in Geneva this year.

The creative appeal of this idea stems from its offer of a positive alternative when many have abandoned hope of the future. The Call advocates action. The Call provides the opportunity of eliminating the defects evident in the present world organization—the absence of constituted authority to maintain law and order and the lack of mechanisms needed to settle international disputes peacefully.

Three years ago Thane Read of Tempe, Arizona proposed to cultivate a joint appeal by renowned people of the world—an appeal to set up a convention to construct a base for international cooperation under law. Since then a small group of individuals became associated for this purpose. Talents, time and money were pooled. Finances came from the originator of the project through funds made available to him by inheritance and family gifts. Tours of contact were arranged and carried out—two around the world, and several others in England, France, and Japan. Hundreds of letters reached out to prominent persons in all walks of life—labor leaders, statesmen peace workers, world government advocates, scientists, humanitarians, religious leaders and others. Leadership support by many of the peace groups predicted the likelihood of eventual unification of peace efforts in this drive for a world constitution.

Read and Associates have been spurred on by the mounting evidence that atomic war is eminent and awesome in its promise of world-wide misery and death. This group hopes to tap the instinct for survival now frantically expressing itself in strikes for peace, efforts to ban the bomb, movements for unilateral disarmament, the blind building of puny shelters, and the rise of various survival societies. This concern may well respond to the proposal extended in the Call until eventually a mighty ground swell of public opinion will provide the strength to carry out the appointment of delegates.

If a precedent for the Call need be cited, one may point to the action of twelve individuals in 1786 inviting the thirteen sovereign states to a convention in Philadelphia, where the United States Constitution was drafted. That Call was an unofficial action, later confirmed by the Continental Congress.

The World Constitution Coordinating Committee plans to establish and maintain communication of all action taken in behalf of promoting the convention. The Call will be placed in the hands of all organizations capable of action, such as churches, educational organizations, political parties, disseminated. From this base of activity other committees of promotion may spring. Incorporation of convention support into political party programs might become possible.

Will the human community survive? The signers of the Call hope for this—under mutually constituted world law.

DRAFT PLAN OF ACTION

A. Formation of a national planning committee with the following concerns:
   1. Making an all-out campaign to publicize the Call among the people.
   2. Taking appropriate steps to ensure the selection of delegates.
   3. Development of a national conference of people especially interested in making specific plans for the Convention activities.
   4. Forming and sending a delegation, consisting of selected leaders in the field of science, religion, education, social sciences, etc., to the head of government. The delgation should visit the chief executive after popular support for the Convention has been developed. This action could be the climax of the campaign to have national delegates to the World Constitution Convention named.

B. Formation of a peace economy planning committee.
   1. A substantial portion of the productive capacity in industrial nations is now devoted to armaments. Prospects of a sudden cessation of armament production could create serious opposition to the Convention though fear of a serious business recession. A suggested project might be to explore possibilities of mutually-beneficial investment in less-developed nations.
   2. Countries now recipients of military aid might also expect to experience an economic crisis as a result of general disarmament. Committees of these nations would devise feasible basic projects for developing their economies in cooperation with outside investors.

POLICY STATEMENT

While the World Constitution Coordinating Committee does not desire to set up its own ideas as the sole objectives of the proposed Convention, we feel that a World Constitution, in order to be effective, must embody certain minimum provisions requiring:

A. A parliament to enact world law and to achieve disarmament and to maintain world peace.
B. An executive to be responsible for carrying out these laws.
C. A world police force to enforce these laws.
D. A world court to settle differences and disputes between nations.

We want each nation, large and small, to retain the freedom and the right to run its own political, economic, and social affairs as it wishes, without interference either from other powerful nations or from the Federal World Authority.

In other words, self-determination of every members nation must be spelled out in this Federal World Constitution; no nation, however, will have the right to wage war upon other nations or the right to possess or manufacture nuclear, conventional, chemical, or biological weapons of war.

"Hold Still — I Just Want To Get That Fly"

College Crowds Flood Daytona

By NORMAN P. WILKERSON

(Note: This article was rewritten from an article which appeared in the "Daytona Beach Morning Journal" of March 17, 1962.)

Where are the boys?

Where are the girls?

They're at Daytona Beach, Fla.

College students continue to pour into Daytona Beach for semester breaks and pre-Easter cavorting—almost 8,000 so far. Many of these students have deserted Fort Lauderdale, last year's Easter time retreat, for Daytona's plush motels and 28 miles of beaches.

The "Fort Lauderdale News" reported, "Daytona Beach is siphoning off a stream of collegians who previously came here for their spring vacation." Last year students pumped an estimated $3,500,000 into Fort Landerdale.

Reports from Fort Lauderdale indicate students are "taking dead aim on Daytona Beach" the "News" story went on.

A dance organized by Fort Lauderdale two weeks ago attracted only about a dozen college dancers.

The Fort Lauderdale Innkeeper Assn. estimated if the students desert "The Fort" for Daytona Beach, it could mean the loss of $700,000 to motel and apartment owners there.

Fort Lauderdale's Jade Beach, south of Pompano Beach, where students used to be able to meet for parties, has been closed off effectively by a Sheriff's Office ban on all offstreet parking there, according to the "News" report.

The closing of Jade Beach to students last year apparently was one of the restrictions which stirred student resentment at the city, and led to the riot there last Easter.

A college commented, "After sampling Fort Lauderdale's planned recreation and official restrictions, it seemed too much like going to Summer Camp. He said the restrictions made it seem the collegians were being told what to do and where to go.

Daytona Beach City Commissioner Nass envisions a bright future for college vacations. He said: "We plan to treat them as adults and expect them to act as adults." Daytona Beach, with the aid of Daytona Beach Junior College, has spent weeks planning for the onslaught of thousands of students from colleges in the South, East, Midwest and North here for semester breaks and Easter recesses.

Figuring that no one knows what college students want to do better than another college student, the city has turned most of the planning and coordination over to the junior college students.

Daytona Beach told the junior college it would help with the expenses and offered $7,500 to $10,000 to do the job.

In the Easter planning, efforts are being made to import entertainers such as Dave Brubeck, Sarah Vaughn, George Shering, The Kingston Trio, Jack Teagarden and Al Hirt.

Motels and apartments have been booked already as far as the Easter Weekend. Most of the bookings are for students, in fraternity groups as large as 200, to small groups of three or four.

Fort Lauderdale isn't wondering "where the boys are" this year. It knows they're in Daytona Beach.

Have Scents On The Job

WEST BRATTLEBORO, Vt. (UPI) —Mrs. Fannie Doyle, a 58-year-old grandmother, thinks nothing of an all-day trek through wooded mountains or facing a trapped criminal.

A Windham County deputy sheriff and parttime practical nurse, she raises, trains and tracks with a brood of crack bloodhounds that have gained her fame in police circles in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

"It's both a hobby and a job," she said.

Her current pack of eight bloodhounds includes 12-year-old Henry, who began his career tracking down two escaped criminals from Windsor State Prison when he was just a pup.

Henry also was on the end of a leash when Mrs. Doyle tracked a murder fugitive last year.

"I tracked him through rugged country, mountains and swamp. I was so close I saw him in a pond at one point and he could see me and the dog," she recalled.

The fugitive, an expert woodsman, eluded about 50 police for 18 hours before surrendering.

Mrs. Doyle says she doesn't fear a fugitive whether he is armed or not, although she carries no firearms and her dogs are not trained to protect her.

"I'm always flanked by armed police officers," she said.

Mrs. Doyle is believed to be the only woman in the country who trains bloodhounds for detective work. She also is called in to find lost hunters and children who go astray in the Northern New England woods.

"I ruptured a disc four years ago and the doctors told me I couldn't go tracking in the woods anymore," she said, "but I'm still doing it."

She began training dogs for the sheriff of Keene, N. H., and started breeding them herself 15 years ago.

Citizens Councils Finance 'Freedom Busses To North'

NEW ORLEANS (UPI)—A Citizens Council official said the organization should have sufficient contributions soon to finance shipment of a fourth busload of Negroes out of the state. The latest bus was earmarked for Washington.

George Singlemann, a member of the board of directors of the council, said contributions are coming in to finance the one-way trips for Negroes who are dissatisfied with life in the South.

He said there already was enough money to finance three busloads to Chicago and added that recent denunciations of "Freedom Buses North" in Chicago "will not deter us from persuing our objective in this case." Singlemann would not disclose when any of the buses will leave but he did say it may be necessary to alter original plans.

He said the more than 100 Negroes who volunteered to take the trips feared possible reprisals from other Negroes if they tried to leave all at once. He said some also feared they might be arrested as vagrants upon arrival in Chicago.

Singlemann said the Citizens Council had to provide for the protection of the riders so the money allocated for the charterd buses would be used to buy tickets on regular buses to Chicago so the Negroes can depart in groups of 10 or 15.

The Citizens Council official also criticized a nationwide television statement by a Chicago official who Singlemann charged with trying to dissuade Negroes from making the trip.

He said the statement was "proof positive" that many who claim to look out for the Negro interests were "hypocrites of the first magnitude."

Teachers' Program Changes

By CHUCK MOONEY

A simple change of technique is improving the education of UNC's student teachers.

Beginning a new program, the 175 student practice teachers have been divided into two parts. Those who specialize in social studies, sciences and English are trying a new idea in education—splitting the practice teacher period into two short periods of time instead of one long period. The others are teaching for a solid two-month period as usual.

"We can't say definitely that the new program is better than the old one," said Associate Professor Neil A. Rosser of the UNC School of Education, "but it seems to be working out well."

Two Weeks Of Study

The practice teachers spent two weeks at their public school assignments in February observing actual conditions. They came back to UNC in March for four weeks of classes on child growth and development, school organization, methods of teaching, educational psychology and other education courses.

"We do know that the two-week observation period was very valuable," said Dr. Rosser. "The students knew what to look for in class when they got back."

"Some of them actually did some teaching during the two weeks. Others investigated methods of the various parts of teaching in the public schools," he said.

"The students I've talked to like the program. One boy told me that it gives him a feeling of confidence. He said he knows what to expect now that he's been out and observed his assignment for two weeks," he continued.

Classroom Benefits

"It also helped him in class. He said he could compare what he saw with what he was taught and understand it better."

The experimental group went back to their assignments Monday to teach for six weeks. They return to UNC for two weeks of exams late in May.

The regular group begins practice teaching for their full eight weeks on Monday also.

"We've had a few housing problems with our system," Rosser said. "Landlords would rather rent for two months straight instead of for two weeks and then a month later renting for six weeks. The moving back and forth is a bit troublesome," Dr. Rosser said.

AT ACKLAND MUSEUM

Post-Impressionist Exhibit On Show

The exhibition, circulated by the American Federation of Arts, will be on view at the Center until May 4.

The galleries are open Tuesday through Friday from 2-5 and 8-10 p.m., Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sunday from 1-5 p.m.

The showing, entitled "Prints by Post-Impressionists," includes prints of works by Bonnard, Braque, Cezanne, Dugy, Gauguin, Munch, Picasso, Redon, Van Gogh and Rouault.

Anthropologist

workers, will shed light on a period of Indian development which is presently almost a "missing link" in North Carolina history.

Much is known about the cultural life of the Indians of this period, but almost nothing is known about their physical appearance.

Small, Delicate People

The 60 skeletons have been grouped under the anthropological term "gracile," meaning, in the words of Phelps, that "they were delicate, small, had smooth heads, few protrusions." They were short people, he said, estimating their height at about five feet two inches.

"We have placed them in the 1600 priod, which in archology is known as the Late Woodland period. This period is characterized by agricultural practices and the sedimentary village. The introduction of pottery, increased stability of villa gelife, advanced techniques of labor are other elements of the period and of this village.

"What we hope to do is to begin to define what the eastern Siouan speaking Indian in this area looked like, how they compared with other Indians, and something of the variation between other groups in the area.

Arthritis Victims

"Theirs was a fairly populous village," Phelps says. "They were primarmily dependent on agriculture. They hunted and fishd. We found large quantities of terrapin and muscle shells, pretty accurate proof that these were a mainstay in their diet.

"They suffered from arthritis. We found five skeletons with arthritic spines.

"There was one skeleton with an arrowhead lodged in a bone of his leg." Phelps warned though that this in no way indicated any war-like tendency on the part of this East Siouan village.

"It's hard to say, of course, for sure," Phelps said, "since there's not much way of telling 400 years later whether a man died with a spear through his heart."

DUPREE'S

Sportscope

Less than 5,000 fans turned out to watch the first annual Alumni football game in Kenan Stadium Saturday afternoon, but that handful was treated to an enjoyable afternoon of football worth much more than the dollar admission fee.

It was a shame that the ex-Carolina football greats who returned to their Alma Mater had to play before so few fans. The narrow 10-7 Alumni victory over Coach Jim Hickey's 1962 team was not featured by long runs and incredible plays. Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice did not run any kickoffs back. In fact, he hardly ran at all, except for one instance when Ronnie Jackson returned a Justice punt 46 yards and the 210-pound Choo Choo rolled across the field to cover the play.

Jackson, possibly the fastest back to hit UNC since the Justice era, was finally pulled down, but "the immortal 22" wasn't the tackler.

No, the thrill of the game was when Choo Choo lifted 40-yard punts into the air with the finesse of his college days—some went less than 40, one reached 45, and all were kicked by a truly great football player who helped make Carolina a big football name from 1946-49.

The thrill of the game was when Phil Blazer booted a field goal and extra point to help his team to victory, just as he had done for UNC teams a few years back.

The thrill of the game was when Rip Hawkins intercepted a pass or made a jarring tackle in true "Ripper" style. Or it was when a UNC varsity back tried to go through the middle of the heavy Alumni line and ran into former UNC center Andy Miketa and a host of old, but agile linemen.

The thrill of the game was when Skip Clement snared pass after pass to show why he made the grade with the professional Pittsburgh Steelers.

The thrill of the game was when Al Long showed the fans why he was a college football player and not only a big man on the UNC baseball field and basketball court. For his surprising performance at the quarterback post he was named the game's most outstanding back.

The thrill of the game was when Ray Farris, Gib Carson, Joe Davies, Conrad Sloop, Jim Shumate, Gary Truver, and George Knox took the field for the Alumni—playing against the varsity they had been such an important part of back in December.

It wasn't the excitement of the game, but the opportunity to see these former Tar Heel stars perform once more that produced the thrills. They practiced only one day and then hit the gridiron Saturday afternoon with the fight and spirit of an unbeaten high school team. They wanted to win.

On the other side of the fence, even in losing the varsity provided a few thrills of their own.

Jackson on his 46-yard punt return, Sandy Kinney hitting his receivers consistently to show that the quarterback situation will be solid next year, freshman Jim Gallagher showing flashes of brilliance both as a punter and defensive back, freshman Ken Willard handling the chores at fullback with the skill of a veteran, co-captains Joe Craver and Ward Marslender shining as usual, the UNC line holding the Alumni to only 23 yards rushing—Jim Hickey's preview of his 1962 team complete with the three platoon system produced all these and many more thrills.

And after the game at the Alumni banquet, Coach Hickey came straight to the point, "The next damn time you guys come back, the guns will be loaded."

It was a time for jokes but Hickey found time to speak seriously for a few seconds. No one likes to lose, but losing to "Carolina" was not a bitter pill for the Tar Heel coach to swallow. His words reflected the feelings of everyone when he said that the affair, sponsored by the Monogram Club, had been a success.

UNC's first All-American, George Barclay, was a happy fellow after coaching the old-timers to the surprising win.

By ED DUPREE

North Carolina's Tar Heels rode the strong left arm of Dave Murr to their fourth win of the baseball season in Emerson Stadium Tuesday afternoon.

Murr handcuffed the visiting Camp Lejeune Marines on four hits over the first seven innings and Andy Billesdon hurled two innings of hitless relief ball.

Heyward Hull was the only Carolina hitter to gain more than one hit. The three Marine hurlers held Coach Rabb's men to six hits.

Hull was two for three with a triple, RBI, and one run scored to his ecredit. The other four Tar Heel hits were Jud Spainhour's booming triple down the left field line to lead off the sixth frame, Larry Neal's single, the first hit of the game, and singles by Cronin Byrd and Len Dellolio.

The Tar Heels scored the only run they needed for the win without the benefit of a base hit in the third inning. Wendell Brande walked to open the inning and Murr attempted a sacrifice bunt. The red-headed UNC co-captain got too much wood on the ball and hit it back to Marine pitcher Chuck Davis who turned to second and tossed the ball into center field.

The ball eluded the center fielder, allowing Brande to score and Murr to reach third. A sacrifice fly by Buddy Tilden sent Murr home with the second run of the inning. Neal, the fifth batter of the inning, finally got the game's first hit, but the UNC scoring was finished.

Murr retired the first 14 batters to face him. Center fielder Gary Harrell singled sharply to left field to break the streak of outs.

In the opening frame the 6-4 UNC ace got the first two batters on grounders back to the mound, then third baseman Hal Norton flied to center. Norton's fly was the only ball to leave the infield off Murr until the fourth frame.

Two Leatherneck batters went down swinging and the other grounded back to Murr in the second inning. In the third one struck out and the other two were retired on infield grounders to Murr and Jim Speight at shortstop.

A grounder back to Murr, the fly to center and a strike out put a goose egg on the scoreboard for the fourth. In the fifth Stan Rogers grounded to second, catcher John Holt struck out, and Harrell singled. George Howe struck out to end the inning.

The Camp Lejeune boys picked up a double in the sixth and two singles in the seventh, but couldn't dent the scoreboard.

Murr struck out seven and walked none in his second straight creditable pitching performance.

Hull's single in the fifth drove in Speight with the third run of the game.

The final run was scored in the eighth when Byrd singled between third and short to score Hull who had tripled down the right field line.

The UNC hitting: Tilden-lb,cf (0-1), Speight-ss (0-3), Neal-3b (1-4), Hull-rf (2-3), Dellolio-lb (1-2), M. Cox-2b (0-2), Byrd-2b (1-2), Lockhart-cf (0-1), Spainhour-lf (1-2), Brande-c (0-3), Murr-p (0-2), Billesdon-p (0-0).

The Marine hitting: McCall-2b (1-4), Whitmore-ss (0-3), Norton-1b (1-4), Rogers-lf (1-3), Holt-c (0-3), Harrell-cf (1-3), Howe-rf (0-3), Garrett-3b (03), Davis-p (0-1), Donohue-ph (0-1), Wilhelm-p (0-0), McClellan-ph (0-1), Massolini-p (0-0).

Softball Forfeits Highlight Opening-Day Mural Action

By John Montague

The intramural softball season got off to a slow start Monday afternoon when three of the seven scheduled games turned out to be forfeits. TEP, Phi Delt and KA all took 9-0 gratis wins as SPE, Sigma Chi and AK Psi failed to show up.

In the four games played, slugging was the common dominator. Chi Psi blasted Pi Lamb, 20-16, in a four inning affair, while Lambda Chi came up with a big 5-run inning to edge Chi Psi, 6-5, in five innings.

Delta Sig rocked Pi Kappa Phi, 11-5 in a six inning encounter and Phi Gam took a 12-7 verdict over Sigma Nu in four innings.

Tuesday's ten game slate saw the dorms and grads swinging into action. The Frat White teams get under way this afternoon.

Two all-campus sports, bowling and soccer drew closer to championship time. In the bowling semi-finals, AK Psi rolled past KA and Ruffin downed Kappa Sig. The two winners will meet sometime this week for the ten-pin crown.

In soccer the Town Trojans took on DU Tuesday afternoon in the semi-finals after blanking the DKE's, 2-0, in Monday's quarter-finals contest. The other semi-finals scrap between ATO and SAH, scheduled for Monday, was postponed.

Deadline for the completion of first round matches in the all-campus golf tournament has been set for this Friday. Other deadline dates are: second round, April 27; quarter-finals, May 3; semi-finals, May 8; and finals, May 11. Thirty-two teams are entered in the tourney.

The entry deadline for horseshoes and tennis, the only point-system activities remaining on the 1961-62 intramural calendar, has been set for this afternoon at 5 o'clock.

Tar Heel Baseballers Host Georgia Team

UNC's baseball team goes after its fifth win of the season this afternoon at 3 in Emerson Stadium against Georgia Southern from Statesboro, Ga.

The Georgians lost a ten-inning 2-1 game to the Tar Heels on March 24 when the UNC team was on its annual southern trip. A home run by Heyward Hull won the extra inning thriller for the visiting Carolinians.

Since that loss the Statesboro boys have won eight games in a row. They will also play Wake Forest this week on their "northern trip."

UNC carries a 4-4 record into today's action, although Tuesday's win over Camp Lejeune doesn't count in NCAA records.

Elsewhere, Coach Don Skakle's tennis team tries for win number nine in a row today at Greenville, S. C., against the University of Furman netters. The Furman match is the first of three road matches this week for the unbeaten courtmen. They meet Maryland and Virginia this weekend.

North Carolina's frosh baseball club will also be out to stretch a winning streak at Oak Ridge today. Bruce Crump's diamondmen are 2-0 with wins over Wilmington and N. C. State.

Career Cues

"Cure for job boredom: I made my favorite pastime my career!"

Richard Bertram, President
Bertram Yacht Co., Division of Nautec Corp.

"When you stop to think what percent of our total waking hours is spent bread-winning, you realize how tragic it is for any man to work at an occupation he doesn't enjoy. Besides frittering away life, it reduces chances of success to just about zero. I know . . . because it almost happened to me!

After college, I did what I thought was expected of me and joined a solid, Manhattan-based insurance firm. I soon found office routine wasn't for me. I lived only for lunch hour when I could walk to the Battery and mentally sail with the ships that stood out in the Narrows . . . and for the summer weekends when I could go sailing. Fortunately, the company I worked for is one of the leading insurers of yachts and after two years I was transferred to their Yacht Underwriting Department. Enjoyment and interest in my work improved immediately 100%.

After World War II, I started my own yacht brokerage firm and yacht insurance agency in Miami, combining my marine insurance background with an even closer relationship with boats.

My only problem ever since has been a feeling of guilt that my work was too easy. I love boats and boating people. That affection has paid me rewards way beyond the financial security it has also provided.

The moral's obvious. You have an odds-on chance for success and happiness working at what you enjoy most — what comes naturally! And if it's not just frivolous, your life's work could well be what you now consider just a pastime. It's certainly worth thinking about, anyway!"

And to make any time pass more enjoyably...

Flower Venders Permitted

Franklin Vendors Questioned, But OK'd By Custom

Franklin Street flower vendors will be selling their flowers as usual today.

Monday they were not sure they would be doing it. They had always been allowed to sell in the past, but the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen met Monday night to decide if they would be allowed to continue.

The question was raised when another woman wanted to sell strawberries on the street but was not permitted to do it. "What about those women out there with flowers?" she asked.

Town Manager Robert Peck checked the Ordinance Book and found a 1930 ordinance that prohibits the sale of fruits, vegetables or any other form of garden products.

He said, however, "Sale of flowers seems to be permitted by custom, if not by ordinance."

Monday night the problem was put before the Aldermen and they took no action. So the women will be allowed to sell their flowers in the future.

Peck said no further action is expected on the ordinance unless it is questioned aagin.

The yearly program usually brings together psychologists, counselors, and educators from the District of Columbia and the surrounding states of Virginia, Pennsylvania, Delaware and New Jersey. The group of about 300 will meet at the College Park campus under the joint sponsorship of the University of Maryland and the U.S. Veterans Administration.

Dr. Gough will also visit Chapel Hill on Friday where he will address a colloquium of the Department of Psychology. In addition to his numerous publications, Dr. Gough has developed a widely used personality test, the California Psychological Inventory. He is currently the president of the California Psychological Association.

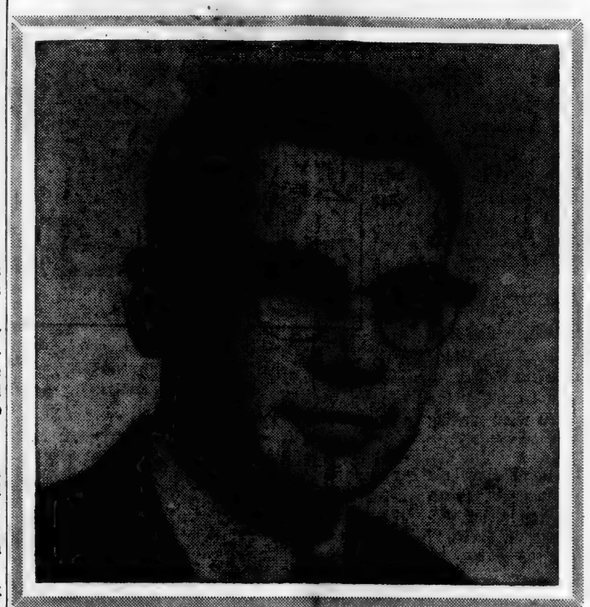
Mongolia Hints At Future Sino-Soviet Relations



By PAULA WINSTEAD

The future development of Mongolia's relationships with Russia and with Communist China will give a good idea of the total relationships between Communist China and the USSR, according to Dr. Robert A. Rupen, associate professor of Political Science at UNC.

At a meeting of the Association for Asian studies in Boston last week, Dr. Rupen said that the Mongolians were in about as favorable a position now as they would ever be in. Mongola is attempting to retain its cultural and economic identity, he said, while being faced with an influx of Russion advisors and Chinese Communist workers.

First American Visitor

Dr. Rupen, who in 1958 was the first American scholar allowed into Mongolia in 35 years, said that the Mongolian government is run along traditional party lines with an elite minority and a system of "democratic centralism." Top Mongolian officials either receive their education in the Soviet Union or spend a great deal of time in the Soviet Union. Many speak fluent Russian.

The most positive advance that has been made to date by the Mongolian government, he stated, has been in the field of education. The country now has a school system based on the Soviet School system, using translated Russian textbooks extensively.

Compulsory Education

All Mongolians must go to school. The school's range from four years to seven and ten years. A minimum amount of literacy and systematic training has been insured in even the most remote provinces and even those few Mongolians who oppose Communism are forced to admit that significant advances have been made in the field of education.

According to Dr. Rupen the Lamaist Buddhist religion which was dominant in Mongolia before the Communists is now almost completely extinguished. After a concentrated effort in the 1930's only a small, tame Buddhist minority remains.

The economic base of the country is livestock, he said, although the Mongolians are basing some future hope on the improvement of mining and water resources. Most future economic plans are based on the Soviet Union, which is Mongolia's chief importer of livestock.

Dr. Rupen said that it was clear that the Mongolians want closer contact with the West. He said that they fear being overrun by the Soviet Union and Communist China, and that they regard any contact with a third party as helping to protect their independence. For that reason, Dr Rupen said, Mongolia should be allowed to enter the United Nations.

Over Half New York Teachers On Strike

Riots On At Some Schools

NEW YORK (UPI) — More than half of the city's 39,681 public school teachers went on strike for higher pay Wednesday. At some schools unsupervised students rioted, turning their classrooms into "blackboard jungles."

The United Federation of Teachers (UFT) struck at nearly all of the city's 840 public schools, giving more than one million students an unplanned holiday.

Faced with the crisis, the Board of Education this afternoon asked the city Corporation Counsel to seek an injunction to forbid striking teachers from picketing the schools.

Student rioting broke out at two schools even before the 9 a.m. school bell sounded. The worst trouble was at Seward Park High School on the lowest East Side, where 1,000 of the school's 3,500 pupils went on a wild rampage.

Only 40 teachers were inside the school. They stood by helplessly as pupils ran screaming through the halls, throwing books, eggs, and cartons of water at one another and out of windows. Fist fights broke out in the auditorium and spilled out into the schoolyard and streets.

Extra police were called to quell the first-swinging brawls. It took them 30 minutes to restore order. Principal Sidney Nanes dismissed the student body.

There were similar disturbances at Bryant and Stewart Park High Schools. Other schools reported incidents in which pupils threw tomatoes and eggs at teachers and sprayed one another with fire extinguishers.

Thousands of parents, fearing such violence kept their children home. In many schools older students were sent home so that teachers who reported for work would have no more than 40 pupils each.

Angry JFK Charges Contempt Of Public In Steel Increases

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In bitter anger, President Kennedy charged Wednesday that "a tiny handful" of steel executives ordered price hikes in defiance of the national interest and with "utter contempt" for the American people.

Accusing them of an irresponsible drive for power and profit, the President disclosed that he was reconsidering his plan to give tax relief to the industry. He also said federal agencies, as well as Congress, were looking into possible antitrust violations.

Seldom, if ever has the President shown the cold fury he displayed at a news conference in denouncing the $6 a ton price hikes announced by U. S. Steel Corp. Tuesday night and the followup rises ordered by other firms less than 24 hours later.

Reeling off statistics, he brushed aside industry arguments that the increases were needed to offset mounting costs. He quoted the Labor Department as reporting that "employment costs per unit of steel output in 1961 were essentially the same as they were in 1958."

"The American people will find it hard, as I do, to accept a situation in which a tiny handful of steel executives—whose pursuit of private prower and profit exceeds their sense of public responsibility—can show such utter contempt for the interests of 185 million Americans," the President said.

Stressing the inflationary aspects of the price rises, the Chief Executive added:

Praised USW Position

"Some time ago I asked each American to consider what he would do for his country, and I asked the steel companies. In the last 24 hours we had their answer."

On the other hand, he said the United Steelworkers Union could be proud of the position it took in negotiating the "non-inflationary" wage agreement which, he noted, does not become effective until July 1.

Mock Jurors Picked Friday For Law Trial

Bevan Evans, UNC varsity cheerleader, will bring suit for $150,000 tomorrow against basketball player Larry Brown.

Miss Evans was injured when Brown lost control of the car in which they were riding and crashed into a tree. Two other UNC students who were in the car, Lindsay Raiford and John Flournoy, were uninjured.

Proceedings in the annual Law School Mock Trial will begin with the selection of jurors from the undergraduate student body at 2 p.m. Friday in the Law School Courtroom. All students interested in being jurors are urged to attend.

The trial will begin Friday night at 8 with Superior Court Judge Allen H. Gwynn of the 21st Judicial District Superior Court presiding.

Tom Starnes wil be attorney for Miss Evans, and La Fontine Odom will be council for Brown.

AS BERLIN AIDE

Clay Confirming Plans To Resign

BERLIN (UPI) — Gen Lucius D. Clay left Wednesday for Washington, confirming his plans to resign as President Kennedy's personal representative in Berlin.

Clay, who saved Berlin with the 1948-49 airlift when the Soviet Union blockaded the city, was brought back last September, when the Communist wall and new Soviet pressure on the allies created a fresh Berlin crisis. Kennedy's action in sending him to Berlin appeared to have raised the morale of Berliners and to have shown the Russians the allies were prepared to defend their rights here.

But both Cliay and his aides cautioned Wednesday against the belief that his departure means the Berlin problem has been solved.

"It appears that the tensions of the Berlin situation have eased, but I see no solution of the Berlin problem in sight," he said.

Two Spies Arrested

In another development, two Communist East German television camermen were arrested as spies for photographing U. S. Army maneuvers in Berlin.

West Berlin police seized the camermen as they filmed the American training exercise in the suburban Grunewald Forest.

Clay made no formal announcement of his resignation, but he confirmed he was ending his assignment in a meeting with West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt on Wednesday.

Pratt Amends Debate Topic

Debate in the Di-Phi on the resolution to recommend the limiting of the Student Legislature to on-campus issues was still going on at press time last night.

Representative Norwood Pratt had succeeded in blocking debate on the main topic of the evening by adding an amendment which asked for the formation of an upper house in the Student Government. The upper house would represent the student body on all issues which did not directly concern the campus.

A motion to table Pratt's amendment was called for after several speeches. The first vote on tabling the amendment was superceded by another vote due to the absence of one of the representatives. The motion was put to a re-vote and defeated. The amendment went up for more debate. It was almost instantly put to a vite.

The first three articles of the original resolution asked the Student Legislature to confine itself to the discussion and passage of legislation which directly concerns the Student Body. If passed, copies of the resolution will be sent to the editor of the DTH and to the speaker of the Student Legislature.

Philips Introduces

The Resolution was introduced by William Philips who based his arguments on the idea that the Student Legislature wastes its time by debating issues which are none of its business and which it can not influence. Philips also reiterated the previous stand by many students that the Legislature is not representative of the Student Body on issues which do not concern Student Government.

Speaking against the resolution, Representative Randall said that the Student Legislature had debate off-campus issues since its conception in 1947 when it discussed the question of segregation in Osborn Park. He said that if the Student Body did not realize by now that the Legislature was discussing of-campus issues it was about time that it did.

Conditional representativ eBill Hobbs said that most of the issues which the backers of the resolution were using to base their case on did concern the Student Body. He said that the Theater segregation was a problem which was pertinent to every student at UNC, and that atmospheric testing is also pertinent to every student on campus.

Tales Of Hoffman

ANTONIA BESEECHES Hoffmann to protect her against the evil powers of the magician Dr. Miracle in this scene from the Carolina Opera Workshop production of Act IV of Offenbach's Tales of Hoffmann, to be presented in Hill Hall on Friday at 1 p.m. Rebecca Carnes and James Gibbs portray the unfortunate lovers while Bert Adams enacts the role of the sinister Dr. Miracle. On the same UNC program will be the opera "The Music Maker."

IBM Lecturer At Computation Seminar Today

John Cocke, Visiting Lecturer at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, will speak at a Computation Center Seminar to be held at 4 p.m. today in Room 330 of Phillips Hall.

Cocke, on leave from the International Business Machines Corporation, will speak on "Difficulties Associated with Lookahead-like Systems." He is a native of North Carolina and a graduate of Duke University.

Cocke's experience in working on the world's largest digital computer, the "Stretch," produced the ideas for "Looking Ahead" at future operations in a program so as to allow parallel pick-up of instructions from storage, thus speeding up operations by factors up to two.

In today's talk, he is expected to give a competent view of machine characteristics and technology over the next few years.

The DTH, The J-School And A Generation Of Nice Guys

Near the end of his term of office last year, Editor Jonathan Yardley suggested that the Daily Tar Heel should place its news and sports desks "under the aegis" of the School of Journalism in an effort to solve the problem of inadequate staff.

* * *

Always understaffed, the DTH yearly suffers from inadequate coverage on its news and sports pages. Early deadlines, lack of a strong reporting staff, hurried writing and copyreading are problems that plague every college newspaper; dailies in particular suffer from them. The DTH gets its share each year. Affiliation with the Journalism School would doubtless help to solve most of them. The Journalism School would benefit, in turn, from having a newspaper which would serve as a laboratory for practical journalistic training.

Despite these obvious advantages, other considerations tend to make a marriage between the DTH and the Journalism School undesirable. Regardless of any stipulation that might be laid down concerning complete freedom on the editorial page, the net effect of affiliation with the Journalism School would be to limit editorial freedom. This does not mean that affiliation would be an invitation to outright censorship. Practical considerations, however, dictate that any kind of formal arrangement with the Journalism School would necessarily make the journalism faculty or advisors in part responsible for editorial policy. Complaints would find their way to Howell Hall rather than to the editor's office, regardless of who set the editorial tone. No amount of explanation would eliminate the feeling that the editor and the Journalism School were in cahoots. Such a situation could not long exist without creating a feeling on the part of the journalism faculty that some advice or suggestions were in order. This, although not censorship in the strict sense, is nonetheless a control.

* * *

Needless to say, such a control would not be altogether bad. College editors as a group are possibly the most inherently unbridled lot on the national campus scene. Give a college editor his head and he will usually manage to make some pretty glaring mistakes. But there is also a good chance that he will write something that will, in time, either through a negative or positive response, get some good results.

* * *

In a sense, if an editor is to be in any way effective, he must have the complete right to make an ass of himself. This does not mean, as a past editor of this paper once put it, that he should consciously try to be an enfant terrible. But it does mean that he should write always as a student, prone to the foibles and frailties that make him a student, unhampered by some outside influence that calls conscience on him at the drop of a hat.

The rise of conservatism that is getting so much attention across the country is not confined altogether to the area of politics. Students are more reserved and more mature than they were 20, or even 10 years ago. At least so we understand from those who are in a position to compare. The era of the reserved, conservative college student seems to be coming into its own.

* * *

The trend toward a more staid, less impulsive studentry is not in itself wholly alarming. But we wonder if that trend is born of the students themselves, or whether it is one that has been manufactured for them by a frightened generation of older people — parents, teachers, counselors — the whole collection of elders who seem to be pushing today's students into a "mature" mold—not necessarily of their own choosing.

College newspapers are the last components of student life that should succumb to this false ideal of nice guy-ism and mealy-mouthed super-maturity.

If the editor of this, or any other college newspaper feels that the mayor, the governor, the chancellor, a professor, or anyone else is a bumbling idiot, he should be able to say so. If he's wrong, his error will not go unnoticed by the students. He doesn't need a journalism professor or advisor to tell him so. He'll find out soon enough, and in no uncertain terms. It won't be long before the campus lets him in on it.

There are many approaches to solving the staff problem. And it is, we are confident, one that will be solved. Affiliation with the Journalism School, regardless of the benefits that would incur from it on both sides, is not the best way of doing it.

Argentina Is Tres Malade

By PHIL NEWSOM
(UPI Foreign News Analyst)

On Martin Garcia Island in the River Plate, ousted President Arturo Frondizi of Argentina was reported suffering an illness generally attributable to shock and strain.

Also suffering shock and strain but with the symptoms more clearly defined was Argentina itself.

What to do about them constituted a problem under study in capitals from Washington to Buenos Aires.

It was clear that democracy in Latin America, which the United States is pledged to support, suffered a blow when Argentine military leaders elected to interrupt democratic processes on March 29 and depose Frondizi by force.

Military In Charge

Even the move which installed Senate President Jose Maria Guido in office as the man next constitutionally in line did not disguise the fact that military men were making the final decisions.

In only a little more than six months, military forces in South America's two largest countries, Argentina and Brazil, had stepped in to effect drastically the course of constitutional government.

In Argentina the military traditionally have expected to be consulted in government affairs, and since the fall of the Peron dictatorship in 1955 have been especially watchful that there should be no return of the Peronists to power.

Almost from the start, Frondizi has been under their suspicion. While denying any obligation to them, Frondizi was elected with the help of Peronists acting upon the orders of Juan D. Peron in exile.

Political Rights

In June 1959 the Peronists made public a document—denied by Frondizi—in which Frondizi allegedly promised to annul all anti-Peronist measures taken by the provisional government which replaced Peron.

Frondizi was not alone in believing Peronists should be returned to the national political scene. It was held that so long as they remained outlawed, they constituted a "corrupting" element without responsibility.

In October 1961, the ban on Peronistas in politics was lifted.

It and contributing factors proved Frondizi's undoing. In last month's elections Peronistas won sweeping victories in 10 out of 14 provinces. Contributing factors had been a new and unpopular austerity program, a mounting cost of living and Frondizi's own over-confidence in his ability to handle the military.

Pick Summer Job With Great Care

To The Editor:

It has come to my attention that the Vita Craft Corporation is again recruiting student salesmen for its summer program. As an employee of Vita Craft last summer, I wish to state that Vita Craft's recruiting tactics are extremely misleading and to advise that all students interested in working for them exercise the utmost caution in dealing with this company.

The principal point of danger and ambiguity is the nature of the guarantee. Vita Craft's posters (which do not even bear the name of the company) lure the student with the promise "Earn $80 a Week." But in order to fulfill the conditions of the guarantee which would provide that sum, the salesman must make an average of 10 displays a week for thirteen weeks. Last summer, out of the eighteen boys who began the summer in my sales group, only one ever fulfilled his weekly quota —and only during two weeks of the necessary thirteen.

Yet the almost impossible task of meeting the guarantee conditions is glibly glossed over in the recruitment meetings by such statements as "We've only had two boys who've ever had to fall back on the guarantee."

Therefore, if the student is to make money with Vita Craft, it will be by making sales, not from their worthless guarantee. And the fact that only five of the original thirteen students (less than 1/3) were still working at the end of the summer is clear testimony that selling pots and pans is not as easy as Vita Craft would have you believe.

I again plead with all interested students to exercise the utmost caution with these people who would so willingly mislead them. And anyone desiring further information about Vita Craft practices may phone me at 968-8796.

Please—No More Bunk From Lindell

Upon first reading Steve Lindell's statements in the Daily Tar Heel of last Sunday my first reaction was to scratch my head, then re-read what he asid, then scratch my head some more, and finally to try to answer some of the misconceptions and totally fallacious remarks that he wrote down and passed off for truth.

Some of the "non-truths" and "half-truths" of Mr. Lindell's are: it is "Bunk" to ban-the-bomb; past peace groups have been "hopelessly idealistic;" peace movements are escapistic in nature; maintenance of nuclear weapons is not the "problem itself;" and, well here I get confused again. Mr. Lindell puts forth two alternatives for the United States . . . "1. Our destruction by bomb or surrender. 2. Our preservation by having a bomb." But a few sentences later he states "Our prime alternative is disarmament." Mr. Lindell contradicts himself by saying we cannot disarm and we can disarm. One wonders which he really means, assuming he knows himself.

To begin with, why is it bunk to ban-the-bomb, (because it is "poisoning the atmosphere . . . even by less than one per cent")? Now maybe I think of myself too much, but somehow I do not wish to be poisoned by any per cent of fallout of a nuclear bomb. What really does "less than one per cent" mean? Well, according to Linus Pauling, (that misguided Nobel Prfize winning physicist), 160,000 children would be born with "gross mental or physical defect," between 200,000 and 1,000,000 humans now living would have "their lives cut short by such radiation-causing diseases as leukemia . . . four million stillbirths, embryonic, neonatal, or childhood deaths and viable children with gross mental or physical defect . . . these numbers apply to the whole world."

Now Mr. Lindell may not care if his children are born dead or if he contracts leukemia, but somehow I would rather this did not happen to me. One other thing: the Atomic Energy Commission did find Dr. Pauling's statistics incorrect—they came up with twice the deaths due to testing. Pretty picture? (A recent paper done by E. H. Shuford and H. E. Massengill titled "Radioactive Fallout from Nuclear Testing, Is It a Hazard to Health? Can Individuals Reduce This Hazard?" will further enlighten other uneducated persons to the dangers of fallout. It is all documented as opposed to Mr. Lindell's conjectures.)

They Get Results

Mr. Lindell then states that past peace efforts by peace groups have been "hopelessly idealistic." That false assertion can be refuted by three examples: H. Stewart Hughes is running for the Senate in Massachusetts in 1962 on a disarmament platform; in 1960 the British Labor Party was forced to change its official stand on disarmament from a traditional NATO-Cold War philosophy to a unilateralistic one as a direct result of peace group strength in the party; and the example which has had most press coverage in this country—the riots which kept Eisenhower away from Japan were protesting the signing of the Japanese-American Mutual Defense Pact that the United States forced on Japan. No, Mr. Lindell, peace groups are not hopelessly idealistic, they do get results.

If anyone is an escapist it is Mr. Lindell. He thinks that by having nuclear supremacy the threat of Communism will go away. No ban-the-bomb advocate thinks this. Conversely, they think the United States will stand a better chance of influencing the emerging new nations on ideological grounds than will the Communists. I believe that with all the faults present under the "American way of life" this nation's ideology can not only hold its own but can make headway when faced with Communistic ideology. Does Mr. Lindell think so? Perhaps not, for he insists that we keep a big club handy just in case.

Then we come to the "problem itself." Mr. Lindell thinks that peace groups believe Communism is not the problem itself. Where on earth did he get that idea? Could it possibly be that some people read how the United States refuses at Geneva, all Russian proposals on disarmament regardless of how straight-forward and how realistic they may be? (For example demilitarization of Central Europe or a denuclearized Africa). Or could it be that some of us heard John Kennedy say the United States might strike first? Mr. Lindell, the "problem itself" is not so simply defined as you would have us believe. Yes, the Soviet Union is partially to blame for stockpiling, but so is this country with the "military-industrial complex." For example, do you know the lobbying power of the defense industry? Do you know that recently North American Aircraft made an 802% profit before taxes and that 99.5% of their business was contracted with the U.S. Government? Before limiting the problem itself to Communism, let's find out the true implications of stockpiling and testing.

It Sounds Ludicrous

Mr. Lindell implies that the United States is in possession of an "out-of-date bomb." He also says "We must develop bigger and better—ludicrous as it sounds." Ludicrous it sounds indeed. Where on earth he get the idea that the United States has an out-of-date bomb? (probably from North American or Boeing Aircraft). He knows that to try to document such a statement would be impossible. Here are a few facts that can be documented: a. The United States is not behind the Soviet Union in the development of nuclear weapons. (The Atomic Energy Commission.) b. The United States has developed its weapons to the level that an overkill of from 12-1800 bombs eixsts. (Hans Behe and Hanson Baldwin, military critic; New York Times). c. "There is no doubt that our nuclear bomb designs are more 'advanced' than the Soviets' . . . (they) are more easily deliverable than the corresponding Russian bomb" (Linus Pauling).

The whole idea so prevalent in this country, that we must build bigger weapons just doesn't hold up, there is too much evidence to the contrary. Why then, do people insist upon saying that we do need to keep testing? Perhaps it is the same situation that one finds himself in when he analyzes the threat of Communism and the Soviet Union: is something a fact just because the Department of Defense, the Associated Press, and President Kennedy says so? Why? Why should the statements of these men be taken as absolute fact? Should one believe Mr. Kennedy when he says we must test and most physicists say we do not need to? The only solution is to find out for oneself. Mr. Lindell is willing to accept the words of laymen over the words of professionals. So is the rest of the country, for that matter.

Mr. Lindell's only fleeting remarks on disarmament had to do with the Geneva conferences. He "knows" what most Americans "know"—that the Soviets are always wrong and the United States is always right. This is not a Cowboys and Indians affair . . . this is a situation where neither the United States nor Russia is always right for one reason or another. Yes, we have been negotiating at Geneva for a long time and such attitudes as "keep talking and keep testing" will keep us there much longer.

Mr. Lindell obviously has not solidified in his own mind exactly what he believes. The one thing transcending all of his remarks is a pronounced defeatist attitude. One sees this attitude in such remarks as: "The Reds want the world and they won't stop until they get it one way or another . . . We are damned if we do and damned if we don't (have bombs or surrender) . . . Thus if we lose the arms race we lose all as well." Perhaps this may explain the gross contradictions which Lindell wrote—he desperately wants to hope a peaceable solution of the Cold War is in sight but he just does not think that possible.

I, too, hope a peaceable solution of the Cold War is in sight. For me the way to solve the problem is to stop building weapons, stop testing weapons, and stop discrediting every proposal that the Soviets make. Start helping the situation by making sensible proposals at Geneva and when the Russians accept them take them on face value and follow through. I do not advocate unilateral disarmament, rather I favor peripheral steps that will eventually bring about peace and harmony between the two powers. Is that too naive to ask for?

Don't Pay Ransom For Cuban Hostages

On the evening of April 7, 1962, the Cuban press notified the world that a military tribunal had passed sentence on 1,179 prisoners captured in the abortive Bay of Pigs invasion last year. The trial is said to be one of the largest mass trials on record. It was probably one of the most farcical too. The verdict, preposterous as it may sound, was an exhorbitant ransom for each prisoner. The individual ransoms range from $500,000 for some of the "leaders" downward to $25,000. The total ransom for all the prisoners is somewhere in the neighborhood of $62,000,000. The alternative is that they will spend the next 30 years in Cuba's dank, overcrowded prisons. The verdict could have been death: it would have been justified. The crime was clearly treason.

It will be recalled that last year shortly after the futility of the invasion was blatantly proclaimed to the world, there was a movement in the United States to pay a ransom of 500 tractors. Despite the appeal of an ageing, sentimental, democratic stateswoman, the plan was not successful. Castro had a dire need for those tractors. He now needs money. Cuba's present economic picture is black. Meat, soap, eggs, and other staple items are rationed heavily. The loss of United States trade threatens Cuba with eventual economic ruin . . . possibly. The machinations of the Communist world to help Cuba's economy have not been overly successful. Economic ruin could well bring Cuba's three and a half year old dictatorship crashing down around Castro's ears, while he bombastically decries the inhumanity of the Yankee Imperialists. Tough luck! It couldn't happen to a nicer guy than good old Uncle Fidel. Could it?

Everyone knows where the responsibility for the invasion of Cuba lay. Admittedly it was a mistake and a very stupid one too. But what is done is done. We can not alter the past, but we most certainly can influence the future.

The new ransom price has been roughly tripled since the tractor offer. It can not be paid. Any significant money which enters Cuba goes to support Cuba's sagging economy. Support of the economy strengthens Castro and his distasteful regime. The offer would not be made if the government of Cuba did not need the money desperately.

Naturally there is a moral question involved. Should those 1,179 prisoners be abandoned to their fate in Cuba's jails? It is a difficult question to answer, but it must be faced with an affirmative answer. This may appear cruel to sentimentalists, but for far too long the foreign policy of the United States has been emotional in certain fields. There is no room for sentimentality in mid-twentieth century international relations. Every one of those 1,179 prisoners knew that he was facing possible death when he joined the invasion forces. (I hope none of them were so disillusioned as to think that they were going on a picnic.) They took a risk and they lost. They have to suffer for it. When it becomes a question of prolonging the existence of the Castro regime or giving happiness to 1,179 people and their friends and relatives, there is but one choice. The individuals must suffer in the hope that the regime can be brought to its knees sooner. $62,000,000 could prolong the Castro government through its present crisis. Most intelligent people find the existence of the Castro regime unpalatable and look forwkard to its demise. A refusal by all agencies to pay the ransom will be a step toward helping the regime to its doom.

The Cuban Families Committee is an organization which has as its primary objective the freedom of the prisoners. It is a group which has a considerable amount of support. It is believed that close to $26,000,000 is available to the committee, most of which seems to be offered by private American sources. Anyone who contributes to this fund is potentially strengthening the Castro government, which needs the money far more than it needs prisoners. It may seem callous to not agitate for payment of the ransom, but higher goals are at stake . . . the potential ruin of the Cuban economy and the demise of the Castro government.

It is to be hoped that the United States Government is not going to permit itself to be involved in any manner with the payment. In such an eventuality the United States would appear to be displaying a guilty conscience about the invasion by freeing the prisoners. The United States does not have a guilty conscience and we certainly should not feed the snake that bites us.

Key Job

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Every time a Matson liner returns to its home port of San Francisco, the company's shoreside keymaker is in for a busy time.

Passengers are apt to leave their ship with the key to their stateroom still in their pockets. And before the ship turns around to go out again, duplicate keys must be supplied to a whole new shipload of guests. On one typical arrival recently, more than 700 persons debarked — and 400 keys were missing.

Frosh Netters Play In Only Action

By ED DUPREE

North Carolina's freshman tennis team coached by Tom Crais is the only Tar Heel team that will be in action this afternoon.

The Tar Baby netmen are led by O. H. Parrish of Richmond, Va., and they have yet to taste defeat, following in the footsteps of their varsity counterparts.

Kim LaMonica, from Creve Couer, Mo., Joel Polin, from Melrose Park, Pa., Lee Robinson, from Naples, Fla., Jim Talbot from Bucks County, Pa., John Schlacter from Hudson, Ohio, and Fred Seely from Asheville are other top frosh netters.

The varsity tennis match at Furman Wednesday was cancelled because of rain—the netters had gotten as far as Gastonia before they found that the match with Furman was definitely off.

At home, UNC's baseball game with Georgia Southern was also washed away. In the first contest between the two the Tar Heels won 2-1, so the Georgians' opportunity to even the count was rained

The only varsity action Friday at Chapel Hill will be the golf match between UNC and the Naval Academy beginning at 1:30 Friday afternoon on Finley Golf Course.

The varsity golfers have lost out.

only to Purdue, the defending NCAA champs, in their dual meets this season.

At Quantico, Va., Saturday, Carolina's track team travels to the Cavalier state to participate in the Quantico Relays. UNC's top entries will be high jumper Tommy Clark, pole vaulters Heath Whittle and Barrie Tiedemann, middle distance man Bob Hart, and milers Jerry Stuver, Rett Everett, and Carmine Lunetta.

MONOGRAM CLUB

There will be an important meeting of the Monogram Club tonight at 7:30 in the Woollen Gym club room.

President Joe Davies requests all members who sold tickets to the Alumni-Varsity football game, to return the tickets and the money collected at tonight's meeting.

A discussion of future elections and the forming of certain committees are also to be held tonight.

HIGH NOTE — Margot Harris, who appears as Lauretta in tonight's Opera Workshop presentation of The Music Master, hits a high note in a practice session. Robert Williamson, right, appears as her maestro, Lamberto.

Students And Local Singers Perform In Opera Workshop

This evening at Hill Music Hall, the Carolina Opera Workshop will present, fully staged, Peroglesi's comic opera "The Music Master," in English, and Offenbach's masterpiece "The Tales of Hoffman," in French. The cast of each opera is composed of outstanding local singers who are either students of the University or permanent Chapel Hillians. Admission is free.

In "The Music Master," Margot Dodge Harris will appear as the student Lauretta. Mrs. Harris is a student of Walter Golde, outstanding Chapel Hill voice coach. She also is employed at the Intimate Bookshop as secretary.

Bert Adams, as the impressario Colagianni, is a Ph.D. candidate in Sociology. Mr. Adams is well-known to many Chapel Hillians through his appearances as guest soloist in several of the local churches. His most recent operatic role was that of the elder Germont in the UNC Music Department's production of Verdi's "La Traviata."

Robert Williamson, as the maestro Lamberto is a senior majoring in music. He is also student director of the UNC Men's Glee Club and choir director of the University Methodist Church choir. Mr. Adams and Mr. Williamson will also be seen in "Tales of Hoffman."

Mrs. Rebecca Carnes heads the list of Chapel Hillians in the "Tales of Hoffman." Mrs. Carnes, as the young invalid Antonia, is a voice student of Wilton Mason of the UNC Music Department. Besides attending to the many duties of a mother of five, she teaches schools in Hillsboro. Doss Philips, as Antonia's father, is also a senior voice student at the University.

Mr. Philips, recently gave a voice recital at Hill Hall and in May will give another recital in connection with a Bachelor of Music Degree. He is baritone soloist at the Presbyterian Church.

Roselyn Langley as the Mother is a junior music major. Recently she toured with the UNC Men's Glee Club on their spring tour and was their guest soloist.

Larry Brown Is Defendant In Mock Trial

Miss Evans Charges Reckless Driving In $150,000 Suit

Miss Barbara (Bevan) Evans, UNC cheerleader, is to be released today from the N. C. Memorial Hospital in time to testify in her suit for $150,000 against Larry Brown, Carolina basketball player, in a mock trial in the Law School Courtroom tonight at 8.

Miss Evans seeks damages as a result of multiple facial injuries sustained when a car in which she and Brown were returning from a party in Durham last Saturday night ran out of control. Reports conflict as to the cause of the accident.

Experienced legal "heads" at UNC, among them James C. Harper, chairman of the annual Law School Mock Trial Committee, predicted that a capacity crowd will witness an exhibition of adroit legal maneuvering by the attorneys chosen from the Phi Alpha Delta legal fraternity.

The annual Mock Trial, which saw Mike Deutsch of the UNC Business School tried for the "murder" of former All-American basketball player Lennie Rosenbluth last year, is expected to provide real fireworks tonight. The principals, including Lindsay Raiford and John Flournoy, who are to testify as witnesses, are all prominent members of the student body.

Attorneys for Miss Evans and Brown are Tom Starnes and La Fontine Odom.

The trial begins with selection of a jury at 2 p.m. Testimony will get under way at 8. All students may attend.

IDC Dance

The IDC will sponsor a free all-campus dance Friday night from 8-12 at the American Legion hut. Music will be by the Sceptors.

Steel Price Hike Sets Antitrust Move Loose

JFK Talks With Cabinet; Probe Likely

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy held an economic council of war on the steel price increase Thursday amid reports that the government was studying possible court action to break up the giant U. S. Steel Corp.

At the same time, the FBI was investigating reports that a top official of Bethlehem Steel Corp said no price increase was necessary just a few days before Bethlehem followed U. S. Steel's lead and raised prices.

These developments came as Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield predicted that congressional anti-trust subcommittees would launch immediate investigations and the Justice Department would take "more than ordinary interest in this unnecessary rise."

"The time for talking is past," Mansfield said. "The time for action has come."

The President held an unusual meeting with cabinet officers, including Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy and Labor Secretary Arthur J. Goldberg, to consider numerous moves designed to combat effects of the $6 a ton steel price boost.

Robert Kennedy's Justice Department was reported to be considering a variety of possible moves. Among other things, it was said to be studying whether to file an antitrust suit seeking a breakup of U. S. Steel into several smaller companies. It was emphasized that this idea was only in the discussion stage.

Any antitrust suit would be based on charges that U. S. Steel holds excessive control over the industry because of its 40 per cent share of the market and its power over pricing. Other firms fell in line after U. S. Steel announced the first price hike.

The aluminum industry provides a precedent for such a suit. In 1951 the government filed suit to force Aluminum Company of America ALCOA to drop control of Aluminium Ltd. of Canada. The divestiture was complete last year.

Flatt And Scruggs Win Over Students To Bluegrass Music

By Bill Wuamett

Music that "tells a story," and the warmth and humor of Lester Flatt and Earl Scruggs and the Foggy Mountain Boys left a Memorial Hall audience of about 1000 persons wildly applauding after three encores Wednesday night.

After the two hour performance, the wings were jammed with autograph seekers who had given the performance what one informed observer called "a better reception than any German's concert had received since the Kingston Trio in the fall of 1959."

Many of those in the audience apparently came to jeer, as some were dressed in overalls and straw hats and others greeted the country music performers with calls of "soo piggie," and other catcalls.

By the end of the second number, however, the applause was genuine and the overalled ones were cheering as loudly as the rest of the audience. At the end of the show, a standing ovation continued through the three encores.

While seeking to accommodate about 100 autograph seekers backstage, Lester and Earl gave their reasons for the success of country music performers in the past few years.

Reaction to Rock and Roll

The rise in popularity in folk and country music was attributed by Flatt to a growing popular demand for music that tells a story, as opposed to the rock and roll music of the "Yackety Yak" variety.

"This shift can best been seen," Scruggs said, "in the growth of our high school and college audience. Up around New York and Boston, for instance, almost every kid you see is learning to play the 5-string banjo.

"This is the second on-campus performance we have given," he said, "and we plan to continue performing for college audiences. We were real pleased with the reception we received here tonight."

No Style Change

Earl Flatt said their group's success was due to the fact that their basic Bluegrass style had never been changed to try to imitate the popular music of the day.

"Many people tried to imitate Elvis Presley, for instance," Flatt said, "and I think they have all suffered for it. We play the same music we played when our group was organized in 1948. And our audience has grown every year.

"When we began playing, we thought our audience would be composed chiefly of country people. Television, however, has changed all that.

"Thanks to television," Flatt said, "our LP records are now our leading source of income. People who two years ago would not have listened to our type of music have now seen us on television and have then bought our records."

It was apparent after the show that at least one Carolina student had been converted to bluegrass music, as one overalled autograph seeker was overheard to say, "boy, they sure were great, weren't they."

Senate Passes $63 Million Corps Outlay

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Senate Thursday passed and sent to President Kennedy a bill authorizing $63,750,000 to finance the Peace Corps for its second year of operation.

Approval was by voice vote after senators defeated, also voice vote, an amendment by Sen. Frank J. Lausche, D-Ohio, to cut the amount to $45,780,000.

Also rejected was a restriction written in by the Foreign Relations Committee to provide that no more than 15 per cent of Peace Corps volunteers could be sent to any one country or area.

The limitation was dropped after Sen. John J. Sparkman, D-Ala., floor manager for the bill, said Peace Corps Director R. Sargent Shriver had given assurances this policy would be followed without the restriction spelled out. The $63,750,000 was the full amount asked by Kennedy. It provides for about 10,000 volunteers by Aug. 31, 1963.

The President last year asked $40 million for the first year of Peace Corps operations but Congress cut the amount to $30 million.

Senate approval came after only brief debate in which Sparkman urged passage to enable the corps to carry on work already under way and to expand operations.

Lausche argued that the program was still experimental. His amendment would have cut the number of corps members to 6,970 by August of next year. The corps expects to have 2,400 volunteers abroad or in training by July 1 of this year.
